III. They are threatened with destroying judgments for their spiritual whoredoms, according to sin, which was said long before; (Ps. Ixxiii. 27.) Thou hast destroyed them that go a whoring from thee. It is here threatened, 1. That their land shall not yield its wonted increase. Canaan, that fruitful land, shall be turned into barrenness for the wickedness of them that dwell therein. They love the reward in the corn-floor, and are so full of the joy of harvest, that they have no disposition at all to mourn for their sins; and therefore God will, for their effectual humiliation, take away from them, not only their delights and deities, but even their necessary food; (v. 2.) The floor and the wine-press shall not feed them, much less feast them; it shall either be blasted by the hand of God, or plundered by the hand of man; the new wine with which they used to make merry, shall fail in her. Note, When we make the world, and the things of it, our idol and portion, above what they were designed for, it is just with God to deny us even support and nourishment from them, according to that which they were designed for, to show us our folly, and correct us for it. Let them miss of their food in the corn-floor, that look for their reward in the corn-floor. We forfeit the good things of this world, if we love them as the best things. 2. That their land shall not only cease to feed them, but cease to lodge them, and be a habitation for them; it shall spurn them out, as it had done the Canaanites before them; (v. 3.) They shall not dwell any longer in the Lord's land; the land of Canaan was in a peculiar manner the Lord's land, the land of the Shechinah, (so the Chaldee,) the land of the Lord of the world, (so the Arabic;) he was with all the Canaanites, Ps. xxi. 10. He was with them, in dispossessing of them, and over them; so that for his demerit, The land became a desert to them, Gen. x. 11. xxv. 23. They had used it, or abused it rather, as if it had been their own, had not paid the rent, nor done the services, due to God as their Landlord, and therefore God justly enters, and takes possession of it, they having forfeited their lease; "It is my land," (says God,) "and I will make it appear, for they shall be turned off, as bad tenants, and be made to know they could not longer stay upon the lands of the Lord's justice and power, for they were but tenants at will." Note, It is for the honour of God's justice and holiness, that those who go a whoring from God, should not be suffered to dwell upon his land; and therefore, sooner or later, the wicked shall be chased out of the world. Or, it is called the Lord's land, because it was the holy land, Immanuel's land, the land that had peculiar tokens of God's favour to it, and presence in it, where God was known, and his name was great, where God's prophets and oracles were; it was a kind of copy of the earthly paradise, and a type of the spiritual paradise promised to them to have a lot in such a land as this; it was a great sin and folly to rebel against God, and go a whoring from him, in such a land as this, to deal unjustly in a land of uprightness, Isa. xxvi. 10. And it was a sad and sordid judgment to be driven out from such a land as this; it was like driving our first parents out of the garden of Eden, and almost amounted to an exclusion from Canaan. Note, Those cannot expect to dwell in the Lord's land, that will not be subject to the Lord's laws, nor be influenced by his love. Those have forfeited the privileges of the church, that conform not to the rules of it. 3. That, when they are turned out of the Lord's land, they shall have no rest or satisfaction in any other land. When Cain was driven out from the presence of the Lord, he was a fugitive and a vagabond ever after, and dwelt in the land of trembling. So Israel here; some shall return into Egypt, the old house of bondage, whether they shall flee from the Assyrians, (ch. viii. 13.) and they shall lose and ruin themselves there where they thought to hide and help themselves. Others shall be carried captive with them, and kept as unclean things; either, (1.) Such things as were not fit for men to eat, that which is rotten and putrefied; intimating that they shall be reduced to the utmost poverty, as the prodigal would fain have filled his belly with the husks. Or, (2.) Such things as were not fit for Jews to eat, being prohibited by the Mosaic law. That is, the beasts of their own land, however disobedient in other things, they kept up the distinction of meats, and prided themselves in that; but since they would not keep the law of God in other things, they should not be suffered to keep it in that; and it was a just punishment of their sin, in eating things offered to idols. Note, When at any time we suffer in our food, and either through want, or for our health, are forced to eat or drink that which is unpleasing, we must acknowledge that God is righteous, because we have sinned about our food, and have indulged ourselves too much in that which is pleasing. 4. That in the land of their enemies, to which they shall be driven, they shall have no opportunity either of giving homage to God, or obtaining favour with their enemies; they shall have no use for them, or their family, in their land; they shall not be in a capacity of keeping up any face or show of religion among them; "And so (as Dr. Pocock expresses it) "should as it were quite cut off from any expression of relation to him, from all signs of grace, and means of conciliation with him, which would be to them a token of their being rejected of God, estranged from him, and no more owned by him as his people. (1.) They shall have no sacrifices to offer, nor any altar to offer them on, or priests to offer them; they shall not so much as offer drink-offerings to the Lord, much less any other sacrifices. (2.) If they should offer them, neither they nor their sacrifices shall be pleasing to him, for they cannot have any legal offerings, nor are their hearts humbled. (3.) Instead of the sacrifices of joy and his people, they shall eat the bread of mourners; they shall live desolate and disconsolate, mourning for the death of their relations and their own miseries, so that if they had opportunity of sacrificing, they should never be themselves in a frame fit for it; for they were forbidden to eat of the holy things in their mourning, Deut. xxvi. 14. All that eat of the bread of mourners, are polluted, and incapacitated to partake of the altar. (4.) Their bread for their soul, the bread which they must either eat or starve, the bread which they shall have for the support of their lives, shall not come into the house of the Lord; they shall have no house of the Lord to bring it to, or if they had, it is such as is not fit to be brought, nor are fit for it. (5.) The return of the days of their sacred and solemn feasts would therefore be very melancholy and uncomfortable to them; (v. 5.) What will you do in the solemn day, in the sabbath, the solemn day of every week, in the new moons, the solemn days of every month, at the return of the times for keeping the passover, pentecost, and feast of tabernacles, the solemn days of every year, the days of the feasts of the Lord? Note, The feasts of the Lord are solemn days; and when we are invited to those feasts, we ought to consider seriously what we shall do. But the question is here put to those who were to be deprived of the benefit and comfort of those solemn feasts; What will you do then? You will then spend these days in sorrow and lamentation, which, if it had not been your fault, you might have been spending in joy and praise. You will then he made to know the worth of mercies by the want of them, and to prize spiritual bread by being made to feel a famine of it." Note, When we enjoy the means of grace, we ought to consider what we shall do if ever we should know the want of them; if either they should be taken from us, or we be disabled to attend upon them. 5. That they should perish in the land of their dispersion; (v. 6.) For, to, they are gone out of the Lord's land, where they might have spent both their sabbath-days and other days with comfort, gone because of destruction, gone to Egypt, because of the destruction of their own country by the Assyrians, flattering themselves with hopes that they shall return when the storm is over; but these hopes also shall fail them, they shall find there are graves in Egypt, as their murmuring ancestors said, Exod. xiv. 11. Graves for them; for Egypt shall gather them up, as dead men are gathered up, and carried forth to the grave, and Memphis (one of the chief cities of Egypt) shall bury them. Gathering and burying are put together, Jer. viii. 2. Job xxvii. 19. Note, Those that think presumptuously to flee from the judgments of God, are likely enough to meet their deaths there where they hoped to save their lives. 6. That their land, which they left behind, and to which they hoped to return, should become a desolation; (v. 7.) That land, which their enemies dwelt, and where they kept their stores, the pleasant places for their silver, they shall be demolished, and laid in ruins, to that degree, that they shall be overgrown with nettles; so that if they should survive the trouble, and return to their own land again, they would find it neither fruitful nor habitable, it would afford them neither food nor lodging. Note, Those that think presumptuously to return, and try to get possession of their own land, and recover the fortunes of their fathers, shall find if they attempt to do it, that it is no easy matter; and perhaps our recoveries shall be to the diminution of God's glory; it is one thing to獲得 them, and another thing to keep them, and they are quite different.
but the prophet is a snare of a fowler in all his ways, and hatred in the house of his God. 9. They have deeply corrupted themselves, as in the days of Gibeah: therefore he will remember their iniquity, he will visit their sins. 10. I found Israel like grapes in the wilderness; I saw your fathers as the first-ripe in the fig-tree at her first time: but they went to Baal-peor, and separated themselves unto that shame; and their abominations were according as they loved.

For their further awakening, it is here threatened,

v. 11. That the destruction spoken of shall come speedily; they shall have no reason to hope for a long reprieve, for the judgment slumbers not, it is at the door; (v. 7.) The days of visitation are come, and there shall be no more delay; the days of recompense are come, which they have so often warned to expect; their prophets have told them that destruction would come, and now it is come, and the time of the divine patience is expired. Note, The sharpness of divine displeasure is most evident, when it comes after a long delay: and the intensity of divine revenges is most known, when they come after long warnings. 12. Hath God forgotten to be merciful? hath he in a moment forgotten the affection he had at first towards them? or will he be always chafed and offended, and his spirit be hardened, and his heart become as hard as flint? or shall his judgments be always prevented by the remembrance of his mercies? or shall his pardons be never attended with the assurances of pardon? or shall his promises never be renewed? 13. Hath he no restrain, no apprehension, of his own hand, which himself has used? or will he not be answered, when he has long patience, and will not be resisted, when he has long forbearance? 14. Hath he no consideration of the bodies, and the composition of the world, as an handiwork of his? or will he not be consistent, when he has been so? or will he not be just, when he has been so? 15. Hath he no regard to his own image? or will he not be wakened, when he has long slept in the character of God?

v. 16. That hereby the wickedness of the false prophets, and their national spiritual corruption, shall be brought to their shame; (v. 8.) The watchman of Ephraim was with my God; he had been formerly, they had a set of worthy, good ministers, that kept close to God, and maintained communion with him; but now they have a race of corrupt, malignant, persecuting prophets, that are the ringleaders of all mischief. Or, The watchman of Ephraim now pretends to have been with my God, and preaches his lies with, Thus saith the Lord; but he is a snare of a fowler in all his ways, and is cunning to draw the simple into sin, and the upright into trouble; and he is so full of hatred and enmity to goodness and good men, that he is become hatred itself in the house of his God, or against the house of his God. Note, Wicked prophets are of all others the worst of men; their sins against God are most heinous, and their plots against religion are most malicious and spiteful against good ministers and good people. We unto thee, O land, unto thee, O church, that hast such watchmen, such prophets; that are seers, but not doers! Corruption optimi est pessimis—The best things, when corrupted, become the worst.

IV. That God would now reckon with them for the sins of their fathers which they trod in the steps of, v. 9, 10.

1. They were as bad as their fathers; They have deeply corrupted themselves, they are rooted and rivetted in sin, they are far gone in the depths of Satan, (Isa. xxxii. 6.) so that it is next to impossible that they should be recovered; the stain of their corruption is deep, not to be got out, it is as scarlet and crimson, or as the spots of the leopard; and it is their own fault, they have corrupted themselves, been polluted, and stained by their own wickedness, the days of Gibeah, when the Levite's concubine was abused to death by the men of Gibeah, and the whole tribe of Benjamin patronized the villain; that was a time of deep corruption indeed, and such were the present days. Lowness and wickedness were as immodest and daring now as in the days of Gibeah; and therefore what can be expected but such vengeance shall be done? and hence all the maxims of Gibeah are applicable to Israel. Every tribe is now as bad as the tribe of Benjamin then was, and therefore may expect to be brought as low as that tribe then was. 2. They shall therefore be reckoned with for their father's sins; He will remember their iniquity, and visit their sins, the iniquity they have by kind and by entail, the sin that runs in the blood, the sin of the fathers will visit the children. Hence hence God takes occasion to upbraid them with the degeneracy and apostasy of their ancestors, their perfidiousness and base ingratitude, v. 10. Where observe, (1.) The great honour God put upon Israel, when he first formed them into a people; I found Israel like grapes in the wilderness; he took as much delight and pleasure in them as a poor traveller would do if he found grapes in a wilderness, where he most needed them, and least ex...
peculated. Or, when they were in the wilderness, he found them as grapes, not precious in themselves, but precious to him, and pleasant to the first ripe grapes to the lord of the vineyard. They were precious in his sight, and honourable; (Isa. xliii. 4.) he planted them a choice vine, a right seed, (Jer. ii. 21.) and found them no better than he himself made them, good grapes at first, I saw them with pleasure, as the first-ripe in the fig-tree at the first time; good people are compared to the good things that the first-ripe, Jer. xxiv. 2. One thing is worth more than many after. This speaks the delight God took in them, and in doing them good; not for their sakes, but because he loved their fathers. He preserved them carefully, as a man does the first and choicest fruits of his vineyard. Now when he put all this honour upon them, and they stood so fair for preference, one would think they should have maintained their excellency; but, (2.) See the great disgrace they put upon themselves. God set them apart for himself as a peculiar people, but they went to Baal-peor, joined with the Moabites in sacrificing to that dirty dunghill-deity, (Num. xxv. 2, 3.) and they separated themselves unto that shame, that shameful idol, so Baal-peor was in a particular manner a type of the people for woe, for such as the people committed with the daughters of Moab, was a part of the service done to Baal-peor. Note, Whatever those separate themselves to, that forsake God, it will certainly be a shame to them, first or last. Their abominations are here said to be as they loved; their practices which were an abomination to God, were as the best-beloved of their souls. Or, When they had once forsaken God, they multiplied their abominations, their idols and abominable idolatries, at their pleasure. This was the way of their fathers; God had done well for them, but they had acted ungratefully toward him, and in the same manner had the present generation deeply corrupted themselves.

11. As for Ephraim, their glory shall flee away like a bird, from the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception. Though they bring up their children, yet will I bereave them, that there shall not be a man left: yea, wo also to them when I depart from them! Ephraim, as I saw Tyrus, is planted in a pleasant place: but Ephraim shall bring forth his children to the murderer. Give them, O Lord: what wilt thou give? give them a miscarrying womb and dry breasts. All their wickedness is in Gilgal; for there I hated them: for the wickedness of their doings I will drive them out of my house, I will love them no more: all their princes are revolters. Ephraim is smitten, their root is dried up, they shall bear no fruit; yea, though they bring forth, yet will I slay even the beloved fruit of their womb. My God will cast them away, because they did not hearken unto him: and they shall be wanderers among the nations.

In the foregoing verses, we saw the sin of Israel derived from their fathers; here we see the punishment of Israel derived to their children; for as death entered by sin at first, so it is still entailed with it.

We may observe in these verses,

1. The sin of Ephraim. Some expressions are here, which speak that, 1. They did not hearken to God, (v. 17.) they did not give attention to the voice either of his word or of his rod. They did not believe what he said, nor would they turn by him. He told them their duty, their interest, their danger, but they regarded him not; all he said to them by his words and by his rod, was to them as a tale that is told; and then no wonder that we hear, 2. Of the wickedness of their doings, (v. 15.) the downright malice that was in their sins; they were not infirmities, but daring prejudices, and for no cause: and this is not bearken to the word of God, that would teach and persuade them to do well? And no wonder that there were wicked doings among them, when, 3. Their worship is corrupt; (v. 15.) All their wickedness is in Gilgal; which was a place infamous for idolatry, as appears, ch. iv. 15.—xii. Amos iv. 4.—v. 5. It is probable but the idolaters chose this place for their head-quarters, because it had been famous in other ages for solemn transactions between God and Israel, as Josh. v. 2, 10. 1 Sam. x. 8.—xi. 15.

There, where the source of idolatry was, whence it spread through the kingdom, there it might be said, that all their wickedness was, for all other wickedness owed its original to that; corruptions in worship are the mother of most, and the mother of all other abominations; Rev. xvii. 5. The learned Grotius conjectures that there is a mystical sense here. Golgotha in Syriac is the same with Gilgal in Hebrew, and therefore he thinks this may have reference to the putting of Christ to death at Golgotha, which was the greatest sin of the Jewish nation, and of which he might properly be said, All their wickedness was summed up in that. And no wonder that the people did wickedly, both in worship and conversation, when, 4. All their princes were revolters; the whole succession of the kings of the ten tribes did evil in the sight of the Lord; or, all the set of judges and magistrates at this time were wicked; they turned aside to sinful ways, and persisted in these ways.

II. The displeasure of God against Ephraim for sin. This is variously expressed here, to show what a provocation sin is to the pure eyes of his glory, and how odious it makes the sinner to him. 1. He departs from them, v. 12. When they revolt from him, and withdraw from their allegiance to him, how can they expect but that he should depart from them, and withdraw both his protection and his spirits? The people's sin might be said, as it is, and made terrible; Wo also unto them when I depart from them! Note, Those are in a woful condition indeed, whom God has forsaken. Our woe or wo depends upon the gracious presence of God with us; and if he goes, all woe goes with him, and all woe come upon us. God has forsaken him; persecute and take him. Saul knew this when he laid such an accent upon this part of his complaint, The Philistines make war against me, and God is departed from me. Nay, he does not only depart from them, but, 2. He hates them; in Gilgal, where all their wickedness is, there I hated them. There where the abominations of sin are committed, there God abominates the sinners. In Gilgal he had bestowed many tokens of his favour upon their ancestors, but from thence is the place where he hates them for their base ingratitude. Nay, he not only hates them, but, 3. He will love them no more, will never take them into his favour again; the breach between God and Israel is wide as the sea, which cannot be healed. This agrees with what he had said, (ch. i. 6, 7.) I will no more have mercy upon the house of Israel, their sins, and their iniquities, he there have no more to do with them; For the wickedness of their doings I will drive them out of my house. He will no longer own them as his, or as belonging to his family in the world; he will turn them out of Hosea, threatened
They will
This is Tyrus.
He is their God, and are disowned by him, it is a very great satisfaction to good people that they can call God their God, can cheerfully own him, and see themselves owned by him; all revolters, all ruined, yet God is my God.

III. The fruit of this displeasure, in the cutting off and abandoning of their posterity, which is the judgment here threatened again and again. Observe here.

1. How numerous Ephraim was likely to be; the name Ephraim is derived from fruitfulness, Gen. xlii. 52. Joseph is a fruitful bough, Gen. xlix. 22. And Moses's blessing foretold the ten thousands of Ephraim, Deut. xxxviii. 17. This was his glory, (v. 11.) for this he seemed designed by him that appointed the bounds of men's habitation, for Ephraim, as I now Ephraim, is planted in a pleasant place, to encourage his increase; which one may expect as from a tree planted by the river's side. Ephraim is as strong and rich as ever Tyre was, and as proud and secure. The Chaldee Paraphrase gives this sense of it, The congregation of Israel, while they observed the law, was like to Tyros in prosperity and security.

2. How few Ephraim should be; (v. 11.) Their glory shall fly away, like a bird; their children shall be taken away, and the hopes of their families cut off. All their glory shall fly as an eagle toward heaven, swiftly and irrecoverably. Note, Worldly glory is glory that will fly away; but they that have their God's glory, have in him an unending, everlasting glory. Ephraim has been as a fruitful tree; but let Ephraim be withered; if their root be dried up, they shall bear no fruit, v. 16. If the root be dried, the branch must wither of course.

Observe, (1.) God's threatening of this judgment, of the destroying of their children. [1.] They shall perish of themselves by the immediate hand of God; (v. 11.) They shall fly away, from the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception. Some of their children shall die as soon as they are born, the cradles shall be presently turned into coffins; others of them shall be still-born, or the womb shall be their grave, and their death there, their mother's death too; of others, their mothers shall miscarry almost as soon as they have conceived, and they shall be as untimely fruit. See how easily God can, and how justly we are sure he might, root out the whole race of mankind, that degenerate, guilty, obnoxious race, by the direct hand of death, without heaven; it is but doing as he does by Ephraim here, writing them all childless, making all their glory to fly away from the birth, the womb, and the conception, driving up their root, that they bear no fruit, and their business is done in a few years. [2.] They shall perish by the hand of their enemies: they shall die violent deaths; (v. 12.) Though they bring up their children to vanity, though they use them as children, as if they were the diseases and deaths which the infant age is liable to, and are thought to be rared past danger, yet will I bereave them, (v. 12.) by one judgment or other, so that there shall not be a man left, to build up their families, and bear up their name. Again, (v. 13.) Ephraim shall bring forth his children to the murderer; the mother shall travail with pain to bear her children, and a deal of care and pains and cost shall be bestowed upon the nursing of them. And when a cruel enemy comes, and puts all to the sword, young and old, without mercy, then they seem but as lambs that were all this while fed for the slaughter. Note, It is a great allay to the comfort parents have in their children, that they know not what they have brought them forth, and brought them up, for, perhaps for the murderer, or, which is worse, to be themselves the plagues of their generation. It is threatened again, (v. 16.) Though they bring forth the children of their womb, the fruit of their womb, those children that they are most fond of. Note, The parents' love is no security to the children's lives; nay, sometimes death is commissioned to take the darlings of the family, and leave the burthens of it. When sentence was passed upon Israel in the wilderness, that they should all perish there; this mercy was mixed with the wrath, that their children should nevertheless enter into that rest, which they through unbelief could not enter into; but this here is a total and final rejection; even their children shall all be cut off, and the land shall eschew to the crown, ob defectum sanguinis—shall be lost for want of heirs. The Chaldee Paraphrase, and many of the rabbins, by the murderers to which the children were brought forth, understand those that sacrificed their children to Moloch, a white stone, which showed the parents void of bowels, and justly left them void of blessings. [3.] Those few that escape, and remain, shall be dispersed; (v. 17.) They shall be wanderers among the nations: so the remains of the Jews are at this day, and there is no place in the world where they are a distinct nation.

(2.) The prophet's prayer relating to it; (v. 14.) Give them, O Lord; what shall I give? What shall I ask for a people thus doomed to destruction? It is this; since the decree is gone forth, that they must either die from the womb, or be brought forth for the murderer; of the two let them rather die from the womb. Rather let them have no children than have them to be made miserable; for the same reason when a total ruin was coming on the Jewish nation, Christ said, Blessed is the womb that uttereth not, and the falls that never gave suck, Luke xxiii. 29. Give therefore a miscarrylic womb and dry breasts: for it is better to fall into the hands of the Lord, whose mercies are great, than into the hands of man. Note, Those that are childless, may with this reconcile themselves to the will of God herein, that the time may come, when, if they were not so, they would wish they had been so.

CHAP. X.

In this chapter, I. The people of Israel are charged with gross corruptions in the worship of God, and are threatened with the destruction of their images and altars, v. 1, 5, 6, 8. They are, in the midst of their prosperity and the administration of the civil government, and are threatened with the ruin of that, v. 3, 4, 7. III. They are charged with imitating the sins of their fathers, and with security in their own sins, and are threatened with smarling, burning judgments, v. 9—11. IV. They are earnestly invited to repent and reform, and are threatened with ruin if they did not, v. 12—15. 1. Israel is an empty vine, he bringeth forth fruit unto himself: according to the multitude of his fruit he hath increased the altars; according to the goodness of his land they have made goodly images. 2. Their heart is divided; now shall they be found faulty: he shall break down their altars, he shall spoil their images. 3. For now they shall say, We have no king, because we feared not the Lord; what then should a king do to us? 4. They have spoken words, swearing falsely in making a covenant: thus judgment springeth up as hewn-lock in the furrows of the field. 5. The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear because of the calves of Bethaven: for the people thereof shall mourn over it, and the priests thereof that rejoiced on it, for the glory thereof, because it is departed from it. 6. It shall be also carried unto Assyria for a present to king Jareb: Ephraim shall receive shame, and Israel shall be ashamed of his own counsel. 7. As for Samaria, her king is cut off as the foam upon the water. 8. The high places also of Aven, the sin of Israel, shall be destroyed: the thorn and the thistle shall come up on their altars, and they shall say to the mountains, Cover us; and to the hills, Fall on us.

Observe,
1. What the sins are, which are here laid to Israel's charge; the national sins which bring down national judgments. The prophet deals plainly with them; for what good would it do them to be flattened?
2. They were not fruitful in the fruits of righteousness, to the glory of God. Here all their other wickedness began; (v. 1.) Israel is an empty vine. The church of God is fitly compared to a vine, weak, and of an unpromising outside; yet spreading and fruitful; believers are branches of that vine, and partake of its root and fatness. But this was the character of Israel, they were as an empty vine, a vine that had no sap or virtue in it, and therefore none of those good fruits produced by it, that were expected from it, with which God and man should be honoured. Note, There are many who, though they are not become degenerate vines, are yet empty vines, they have no good in them; and though the vine is of all trees least serviceable, if it do not bear fruit. It is thenceforth good for nothing, Ezek. xv. 3, 5. And they that bring forth no grapes, will soon come to bring forth wild grapes; they that do no good, will do hurt. He is an empty vine, for he brings forth fruit to himself. What good there is in him, is not directed to the glory of God, but he takes the praise of it to himself, and prides himself in it. Christians live not to themselves, (Rom. xiv. 6.) but hypocrites make self their centre; they eat and drink to themselves, Zech. vii. 5, 6. Or, Israel is by the judgments of God emptied and spoilt of all his wealth, because he made use of it in the service of his lusts, and not to the honour of God who gave it him. Note, What we do not rightly employ we may be condemned for it.
3. They multiplied their altars and images, and the more bountiful God's providence was to them, the more prodigal they were in serving their idols; According to the multitude of his fruit which his land brought forth, he has increased the altars, and according to the goodness of his land, they have made goodly images. Note, It is a great affront to God, and an abuse of his goodness, when the more mercies we receive from him, the more sins we commit against him; and when the more wealth men have, the more mischief they do. Should not we be thus abundant in the service of our God, as they were in the service of their idols? As we find our estates increasing, we should proportionably abound the more in works of piety and charity.
3. Their hearts were divided, v. 2. (1.) They were divided among themselves; they were at variance about their idols, some for one, some for another, at variance about their kings, whose separate interests were very different. They were divided in their hearts, their very hearts were divided, and alienated one from another, and there was no such thing as cordial friendship to be found among them; it follows therefore, Now shall they be found faulty. Note, The divisions and animosities of a people are the causes of much sin, and the presages of ruin. (2.) They were divided between God and their idols. They had not only forsaken the service of God, but a reigning affection for their idols; They halted between God and Baal, that was the dividing of their heart. But God is the Sovereign of the heart, and he will by no means endure a rival; he will either have all, or none. Satan, like the pretended mother, says, Let it be neither thine nor mine, but divide it; but if that be yielded to, God will not take it; thus divided will be found faulty, and be rejected as a compromise in covenanting with God. Note, A heart divided between God and Mammon, though it may trim the matter so as to appear plausible, will, in the day of discovery, be found faulty.
4. They made no conscience of what they said, and what they did, in the most solemn manner, v. 4. (1.) Not of what they said in swearing, which is the most solemn swearing. They have said precious words, and words only, for they meant not as they said; they did verba dare—give words; they swore falsely in making a covenant, they were deceitful in their covenanting with God, the covenant of circumcision, the fair promises they made of reformation, when they were in distress; and no marvel if those that were false to their God, were false to all mankind; they contracted such a habit of treachery, that they broke through the most sacred bonds, and made nothing of them; subjects violated their oaths of allegiance, and their kings their coronation-oaths; they broke the leagues with the nations they were in alliance with, nor was any conscience made of contracts between private persons. (2.) Nor of what they did in judgment, which is the most solemn action. They have not only said, but done; they have done nothing of forsaking themselves; for thus judgment, which should have been a healing, medicinal plant, and of a sweet smell, straw up as hemlock, which is both nauseous and noxious, in the furrows of the field, in the field that was ploughed and furrowed for good corn. Note, God is greatly offended with corruptions, not only in his own worship, but in the administration of justice between man and man, and the dishonesty of a people shall be the ground of his controversy with them as well as their idolatry and impurity; for God's laws are intended for man's benefit and the good of the community, as well as for God's honour. And the profanation of courts of justice shall be avenged as surely as the profanation of temples.
4. Their judgments are, with which Israel should be punished for these sins; they sinned both in civil and religious matters, and in both they shall be punished.
1. They shall have no joy of their kings, and of their government. Because justice is turned into oppression, therefore those who are intrusted with the administration of it, and should be blessings to the state, shall be overturned; and as the burthen of it, (v. 2.) and they that would not rule their people well, should not be able to protect them; Now they shall say, We have no king; we are as if we had none, we have none to do us any good, or stand us in any stead, none to keep us from destroying ourselves, or being destroyed by our enemies, none to preserve the public peace, or to fight our battles; and justly is this come to us, because we did not trust in the Lord, who was more safe under the protection of our kings, therefore we are rejected by him; and then what shall a king do for us? What good can we expect from a king, when we have forfeited the favour of our God?" Note, Those that cast off the fear of God, are not likely to have joy of any of their creature-comforts; nor will men's loyalty to their prince befoulk them without religion, for their king is God's anointed, and must be of good will that do them, if God be against them. Those that keep themselves in the fear and favour of God, may say, with triumph, "What can the greatest of men do against us?" But those that throw themselves out of his protection, must say, with despair, "What can the greatest of men do for us?" He was a king that said, If the Lord do not help thee, whence should I help thee?" Yet he is a fool that says, If a king cannot help us, we must perish, (as these intimate here,) for God can do that for us which kings cannot. Time was, when they doted upon having a king; but now what can a king do for them, a being who, they thought, could do any thing? God can make people sick of those creature-confidences which they were most fond of. This is their complaint, when their king is disabled to help them: They thought, they had built a wall of their own, their civil government shall not only be weakened, but quite destroyed; (v. 7.) As for Samaria, the royal city, which is now almost all that is left, her king is cut off as the foam from the water. The foam swims uppermost, and makes a great show upon the face of the water, yet it is but a heap of bubbles raised by the troubling of the water; such were the kings of Israel, after their revenues, their altars, their ships, their fame, were a mere scum, their government had no foundation; no better are the greatest of kings when they set up in opposition to God; when God comes to contend with them by his judgments, he can as easily disperse and dissolve them, and bring them to nothing, as the froth upon the water. 2. They shall have no joy of their idols, and of the worship of them. And miserable is the case of these people, whose gods fall when their kings do. (1.) The idols they had made, and the altars they set up in honour of them, should be broken down, and spoiled, and carried away, as common plunder, by the victorious enemy; He shall break down their altars. God shall do it by the hand of the Assyrian, the Assyrian shall do it by order from God; he shall spoil their images. v. 2. Note, What men make idols of, it is just with God to break down and spoil. But the calf at Bethel was the sovereign idol, that was it which the inhabitants of Samaria doted most upon; now it is here foretold that that should be destroyed; The glory of it is departed from it, (v. 5.) when it is thrown down and defaced, no more to be worshipped; but that is not all, It shall also be carried to Assyria, (as some think the calf at Dan was carried to Babylon after the captivity,) or, some think, God's city; for it was there carried, (Isa. li. 21.) When they cast up their altars, it was carried to him as a rich booty, (for it was a golden calf, and, probably, adorned with the gifts and offerings of its worshippers,) and as a trophy of victory over their enemies; and what more glorious trophy could they bring than this, or more incontrovertible proof of an absolute conquest; Thus it is said, The sin of Israel shall be destroyed, (v. 8.) the idols, which they made the matter of their sin, it is said of them, They became a sin to all Israel, 1 Kings xii. 30. Note, If the grace of God prevail not to destroy the love of sin in us, it is just that the providence of God should destroy the food and fuel of sin about us. With the idols, the high places shall be destroyed, high places of Aven, of Beth aven, (v. 5.) or Bethel; it was called the house of God, (so Bethel signifies,) but now it is called the gods of iniquity, may, iniquity its throne, the kings did not, as they ought to have done, take away the high places, by the sword of justice, and therefore God will take them away by the sword of war. So that the thorn and the thistle shall come up on their altars; they shall lie in ruins. Their altars, while they stood, were as thorns and thistles, offensive to God and good men, and fruits of sin and the curse, justly therefore are they buried in thorns and thistles, as useless and contemptible objects. (2.) The destruction of their idols, their altars, and their high places, shall be the occasion of sorrow and shame and terror to them. [1.] It shall be an occasion of sorrow to them. When the calf at Bethel is broken, the people thereof shall mourn over it. They looked upon the calf to be the protector of their nation, and, when that was gone, thought they must all be undone, which made the poor ignorant people, that were deluded into the love of it, take on bitterly as Micah did; (Judg. xix. 24.) Ye have taken away my gods, and what have I more? The priests that had rejoiced in it, shall now mourn for it with the people. Note, Whatever men make a god of, they will mourn for the loss of; and inordinate sorrow for the loss of any vile idol is a sign we made an idol of it. They are used to be very merry in the worship of their idols, but now they shall mourn over them; for sinful mirth shall sooner or later be turned into mourning. [2.] It shall be an occasion of shame to them; (v. 6.) Ephraim shall receive shame, when he sees the gods he trusted to carried into captivity, and Israel shall be ashamed of his own counsel, in putting such confidence in them, and paying such adoration to them. God's altar and altars were never, so much as by any means, rejected by the people; but the idolatrous altars were thrown down when the people were doting on them, which shows that the contempt of the former, and the veneration for the latter, were the sins for which God visited them. [3.] It shall be an occasion of fear to them; (v. 5.) The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear; they shall be in pain for their gods, and afraid of losing them; or they shall be in fear for their wives, and for their children and families, when they see the judgments of God breaking in upon them, and beginning with their idols, as he executed judgment against the gods of Egypt, Exod. xii. 12. Thus idolaters are brought in trembling, when God arises to shake terribly the earth, Isa. ii. 21. And here, (v. 8.) They shall say to the mountains, Cover us; and to the hills, Fall on us. The supports of idolatry (Rev. vi. 13, 16.) are brought in, calling thus in vain to rocks and mountains to shelter them from God's wrath. 9. O Israel, thou hast sinned from the days of Gibeah; there they stood: the battle in Gibeah against the children of iniquity did not overtake them. 10. It is in my desire that I should chastise them; and the people shall be gathered against them, when they shall bind themselves in their two surrows. 11. And Ephraim is as a heifer that is taught, and loveth to tread out the corn; but I passed over upon her fair neck: I will make Ephraim to ride; Judah shall plough, and Jacob shall break his clods. 12. Sow to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy; break up your fallow ground: for it is time to seek the Lord, till he come and rain righteousness upon you. 13. Ye have ploughed wickedness, ye have reaped iniquity: ye have eaten the fruit of lies: because thou didst trust in thy way, in the multitude of thy mighty men. 14. Therefore shall a tumult arise among thy people, and all thy fortresses shall be spoiled, as Shalman spoiled Beth-arbel in the day of battle: the mother was dashed in pieces upon her children.

15. So shall Bethel do unto you because of your great wickedness: in a morning shall the king of Israel be utterly cut off.

Here,

I. They are put in mind of the sins of their fathers and predecessors, for which God would now reckon with them. It was told them, (ch. ix. 9.) that they had corrupted themselves, as in the days of Gibeah, and here (v. 9.) O Israel thou hast sinned from the days of Gibeah. Not only the wickedness that was committed in that age, is revived in this, and reacted, a copy from that original, but the wickedness that was committed in that age, has been continued in a constant series and succession through all the intervening ages down to this; so that the measure of iniquity has been long in filling; and still there has been a continual increase, till in the days of this present age, the children of iniquity have sinned more than in the days of Gibeah; (so it may be read:) "the signs of this age exceed those of the worst of former ages. The case was bad then, for they stood, the criminals stood in their own defence, and the tribes of Israel, who undertook to chastise them for their wickedness, were at a stand, when both in the first and in the second battle the murderers were the victors; and the battle in Gibeah against the children of iniquity did not overtake them till the third engagement, and then did not overtake them all, for 600 made their escape. But thy sin is worse than theirs, and therefore thou canst not expect but that the battle against the children of iniquity should overtake thee, and overcome thee."

II. They have warning given them, fair warning of the judgments of God, that were coming upon them, v. 10. God had hitherto pitied and spared them; though they had been very provoking, he had a mind to try whether they would be wrought upon by patience and forbearance; but now, "It is in my desire that I should chastise thee; it is what I have a purpose of, and will take pleasure in." He will rejoice over them to do them hurt, Deut. xvii. 63. Note, Because God does not desire the death and ruin of sinners, therefore he does desire their chastisement. And see what the chastisement is; The people shall be gathered against them, as all the other tribes were against Benjamin in the battle of Gibeah. One of the rabbins thus descants upon it, "Because they receive not chastisement from me by my prophets, who, in my name, rebuke them, I will therefore bring upon them the sword, that they may be gathered against them, when they shall bind themselves in their two furrows;" when they shall think to fortify themselves, as it were, within a double entrenchment. Or, When I shall bind them for their two transgressions; so the margin reads it, meaning their corporal and spiritual whoredom, which they are so often charged with, the last of which the prophet-gap was, (or Gaph, Beth or Bethel;) or those two great evils mentioned, Jer. ii. 13. Or, When I shall bind them to their two furrows; bring them into servitude to the Assyrians, who shall keep them under the yoke as oxen in the plough, who are bound to the two furrows up the field and down it, and dare not, for fear of the goad, sit a step out of them. The Chaldee says, Those that are gathered against them shall exercise dominion over them, in like manner as a pair of heifers are tied to their two furrows. Thus they that would not be God's freemen, shall be their enemies' slaves, and shall be made to know the difference between God's service and the service of the kingdoms of the countries, 2 Chron. ii. 11.

III. They are made to know, that their unacquaintedness with sufferings and hardships should not excuse them from a very miserable captivity, v. 11. See how nice, and tender, and delicate, Ephraim is; he is as an heifer that is taught to tread out the corn, and loves that work, because being not to be muzzled, she has liberty to eat at pleasure, and work till she is fat and easy and both its own diversion and its own wages. "But," says God, "I have a yoke to put upon her fair neck, fair as it is. I will make Ephraim to ride; I will tame them, or cause them to be ridden by the Assyrians and other conquerors that shall rule them with rigour, as men do the beasts they ride upon; (Ps. lxxv. 26.) and Judah too shall be made to plough, and Jacob to break the clods; they shall be used hardly, but not so hardly as Ephraim. Note, It is just with God to make those know what hardships mean, that indulge themselves too much in their own ease and pleasure. The learned Dr. Pocock inclines to another sense of these words, as speaking the tender, gentle methods God took with his people, to bring them into obedience to his law, as a reason why they would continue to them; yet let us not overlook the metaphor, as the husbandman does his cattle that he trains up for service. Ephraim being as a docile heifer, fit to be employed, God took hold of her fair neck to accustom her to the hand; harnessed her, or put the yoke of his commandments upon her, gave his people Israel a law, that being trained up in his institutions, they might not be tempted by the attractions of the heathen, but he had used all fair and easy means with them to keep them in their obedience, had set Judah to plough, and Jacob to break the clods, and employed them in the observance of precepts proper for them; and yet they would not be retained in their obedience, but started aside.

IV. They are invited and encouraged to return to God by prayer, repentance, and reformation, v. 12. See how here:

1. The duties they are called to. They are God's husbandry; (1 Cor. iii. 9.) and the duties are expressed in language borrowed from the husbandman's calling. If they would not be brought into bondage by their oppressors, let them return to God's service. (1.) Let them break up the fallow ground; let them cleanse their hearts from all corrupt affections and lusts, which are as weeds and thorns, and let them be humbled for their sins, and be of a broken and contrite spirit, in the sense of them; let them be full of sorrow and shame at the remembrance of them, and prepare to receive the divine precepts, as the ground that is ploughed is to receive the seed, that it may take root. See Jer. iv. 3. (2.) Let them sow to themselves in righteousness; let them sow in the spirit of faith, and be faithful in doing good works, according to the law of God, which is the rule of righteousness; let them abound in works of piety toward God, and of justice and charity toward one another, and herein let them sow to the Spirit, as the apostle speaks, Gal. vi. 7, 8. Every action is seed sown; Let them sow in righteousness; let them sow what they should sow, do what they should do, and they shall have the benefit of it. (3.) Let them seek the Lord; let them look up to him for his grace, and beg of him to bless the seed sown. The husbandman must plough and sow with an eye to God, asking of him rain in the season thereof.

2. The arguments used for the pressing of these duties. Consider, (1.) It is time to do it; it is high time. The husbandman sows in seed-time, and, if that time be far spent, he applies himself to it with the more diligence. Note, Seeking the Lord is to be every day's work, but there are some special occasions given by the providence and grace of God, when it is, in a particular manner, time to seek him.

(2.) If we do our part, God will do his. If we sow to ourselves in righteousness, if we be careful and diligent to do our duty, in a dependence upon his grace, he will shower down his grace upon us, will rain righteousness, the very thing that they need most, who are to sow in righteousness; for by the grace of God the providence and grace of God, when it is, in a particular manner, time to seek him, gives the Spirit of Christ, who should come in the fulness of time, and for whose coming they must prepare themselves; he shall come as the Lord our righteousness, and shall rain righteousness upon us, that everlasting righteousness which he has brought in, he will grant us of it abundantly. It is foretold, (Ps. lix. 5.) that he shall come down like rain. (3.) If we sow in righteousness we shall reap in mercy; which agrees with that promise, If we sow to the Spirit, we shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. We shall reap according to the measure of mercy; (so the word is;) it shall be a great reward, according to the riches of mercy; such a reward, not as becomes such mean creatures as we are to receive, but as becomes a God of infinite mercy to give, a reward of mercy above all other good; but who repays mercy, but in mercy. It is what is sown; God gives a body as it has pleased him. (4.) We have ploughed wickedness, and reaped iniquity; and the time past of our life may suffice that we have done so.

v. 13. "You have taken a great deal of pains in the service of sin, have laboured at it in the very fire; and will you grudge to bear the burthen and heat of the day in God's service, and in doing that which will be for your own advantage? You have done much to damn your souls; will you not undo it again, and do something to save them?" (5.) We never got any thing in the service of sin. They have ploughed wickedness, they have done the drudgery of sin; and they have reaped iniquity, they have got all that is to be got by it, they have carried it on to the end, and the better! It is a cheat. They have eaten the fruit of lies, fruit that is but a lie, which looks fair, but is rotten within; the works of darkness are unfruitful works, Eph. v. 11. Rom. vi. 21. Even the gains of sin yield the sinner no satisfaction. (6.) As our comforts, so our confidences, in the service of sin will certainly fail us; "Thou didst trust in thy ways, in the multitude ofthy mighty men; thou hast staid thyself upon creatures, thy own power and policy, and therefore hast ventured to plough wickedness, and thy hopes have deceived thee; come, therefore, and seek the Lord, and thy hope in him shall not deceive thee."

V. They are threatened with utter destruction, both for their carnal practices, and for their carnal confidences, v. 14, 15. They are therefore warned, therefore warned, and trusted in thy own wisdom, a tumult shall arise among thy people; either by insurrections at home, or invasions from abroad, either of which will put a kingdom into confusion, and make a noise, much more both together. 1. Their cities and strong holds shall be a prey to the enemy; The fortresses which they confidence, and trusted in thy own wisdom, a tumult shall arise among thy people; either by insurrections at home, or invasions from abroad, either of which will put a kingdom into confusion, and make a noise, much more both together. 1. Their cities and strong holds shall be a prey to the enemy; The fortresses which they confided in, and in which they trusted, shall take effect; shall be seized, and taken riddled, as Shalmaneser spoilt Beth-arbel in the day of battle. This refers to some event that had lately happened, not elsewhere recorded; and, probably, Shalman is the same with Shalmaneser king of Assyria, who had lately put some town, or castle, or house, (Beth-arbel is the house of Arbel,) under military execution, which perhaps he used with severity in the beginning of his conquests, to terrify other garrisons into a speedy surrender at the first summons; God tells them that thus Samaria should be spoiled. 2. The inhabitants shall be put to the sword, as it was at Beth-arbel, when it was taken. The mother was dashed in pieces upon her children, that is, they were both dashed in pieces together by the fury of the sword. See what cruel work war makes. Fugit ipsum et nugam. Wickedness has free course. It is strange that any of the human race could be so inhuman; but see what comes of sin. Homo homini lupus—Man is a wolf to man; and then, Homo homini agnus—Man is a lamb to man. 3. They shall all be destroyed, and both common gored; in a morning shall the king of Israel utterly be cut off; v. 15. Hosea was the last king of Israel; in him the whole kingdom was cut off, and came to a period; it may refer either to him, or to some of his predecessors, that were cut off by treachery. It shall be done in a morning, in a very little time, as suddenly as the dawning of the morning. Or, at the time appointed, for so the morning comes, punctually at its time. Or, in the morning, when they think the night of calamity is over, and expect a returning day, then shall all their hopes be dashed, by the sudden cutting off of their king, v. 7. Kings, though gods to us, are men to God, and shall die like men. And (lastly) what does all this desolation owe its rise to? What is the sport of this? 6. Because his anger is kindled against the city Bethel: And Bethel shall return unto you. Bethel was the place where one of the calves was; Gilgal, where all their wickedness is said to have been, was hard by; there was their great wickedness, the evil of their evil, (so the word is,) the sun and quintessence of their sin; and that was it that did this to them, that made all this havoc, for that was it that provoked God to bring it upon them. He does not say, So shall the king of Assyria do to you; but, So shall Bethel do to you. Note, Whatever mischief is done to us, it is sin that does it. Are the fortresses spoiled? Are the women and children murdered? Is the king cut off? It is sin that does all this. It is sin that ruins soul, body, estate, all; So shall Bethel do unto you. It is thy own wickedness that corrects thee, and thy backslidings that reproves thee.

CHAPTER XI.

In this chapter we have, I. The great goodness of God toward his people Israel, and the great things he had done for them, v. 1-4. II. Their base ingratitude toward him, notwithstanding his favours toward them, v. 2, 4, 7, 12. III. Threatenings of wrath against them for their ingratitude and treachery, v. 5, 6. IV. Mercy remembered in the midst of wrath, v. 8, 9. V. Promises of what God would yet do for them, v. 10, 11. VI. An honourable character given of Judah, v. 12.

1. When Israel was a child, then I loved him, and called my son out of Egypt, 2. As they called them, so they went from them: they sacrificed unto Baalim, and burned incense to graven images. 3. I taught Ephraim also to go, taking them by their arms; but they knew not that I healed them, 4. I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love; and I was to them as they that take off the yoke on their jaws, and I hid meat unto them. 5. He shall not return into the land of Egypt, but the Assyrian shall be his king, because they refused to return. 6. And the sword shall abide on his cities, and shall consume his branches, and devour them, because of their own counsels. 7. And my people are bent to backsliding from me: though they called them to the Most High, none at all would exalt him.

Here we find,

1. God very gracious to Israel. They were a people for whom he had done more than for any people under heaven, and to whom he had given more help than to any other nation in the world. He gave his law to them and chose his own instrument because he loved them, because he would love them, Deut. vii. 7, 8. When they were weak and helpless as children, foolish and froward as children, when they were outcasts, and children exposed, then God loved them; he pitied them, and testified his good will to them, he bore them as the nurse does the sucking child, nourished them, and nourished them up, nay, those that are grown up, ought often to reflect upon the goodness of God to them in their childhood.

2. He delivered them out of the house of bondage; I called my son out of Egypt, because a son, because a beloved son; when God demanded Israel's discharge from Pharaoh, he called them his son, his beloved son. Notice: Those whom God calls out of the bondage of sin and Satan into the glorious liberty of his children. These words are said to have been fulfilled in Christ, when, upon the death of Herod, he and his parents were called out of Egypt, (Matth. ii. 15.) so that the words have a double aspect, speaking historically of the calling of Israel out of Egypt, and prophetically of the bringing in of Christ. Note: Those whom God called out of the bondage of sin and Satan. Those whom God calls out of Egypt, and brings, bring them into the wilderness, where God led them by the pillar of cloud and fire, showed them the way in which they should go, and bore them up, taking them by the arms; he taught them to go in the way of his commandments, by the institutions of the ceremonial law, which were as tutors and governors to that people under age. He took them by the arms, to guide them, that they might not stray, and fall, and the more resolute in their evil ways; disobeying for disobedience sake. This foolishness is bound in the hearts of children, who, as soon as they are taught to go, will go from those that call them.

3. He gave them a good education, took care of them, took pains with them, not only as a father or tutor, but, such is the condescension of divine grace, as a mother, or nurse; (v. 3.) I taught Ephraim also to go, as a child in leading-strings is taught. When they were in the wilderness, God led them by the pillar of cloud and fire, showed them the way in which they should go, and bore them up, taking them by the arms; he taught them to go in the way of his commandments, by the institutions of the ceremonial law, which were as tutors and governors to that people under age. He took them by the arms, to guide them, that they might not stray, and fall, and the more resolute in their evil ways; disobeying for disobedience sake. This foolishness is bound in the hearts of children, who, as soon as they are taught to go, will go from those that call them.

4. When any thing was amiss with them, or they were ever so little out of order, he was their Physician; "I healed them; I not only took a tender care of them, a friend may do that, but wrought an effectual cure, it is a God only that can do that; I am the Lord that healeth thee," (Exod. xv. 26.) that redressed all the grievances.

5. He brought them into his service by mild and gentle methods; (v. 4.) I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love. Note, It is God's work to draw poor souls to himself; and none can come to him except he draw them, John vi. 44. He draws,

(1.) With the cords of a man, with such cords as men draw with that have a principle of humanity; or, such cords as men are drawn with; he dealt with them as men, in an equitable, rational way, in an easy, gentle way, with the cords of Adam. He dealt with them as with Adam in innocence, bringing them at one into a paradise, and encouraging them to live with himself.

(2.) With bands of love, or cart-rope love; this word signifies stronger cords than the former. He did not drive them by force into his service, whether they would or no, nor rule them with rigour, or detain them by violence, but his attractive powers were all loving and endearing, all sweet and gentle, that he might overcome them with kindness. Most men will make use of their guides, when the meekest man in the world. Kindness among men, we commonly call obligations, or bonds; bonds of love. Thus God draws with the savour of his good ointments, (Cant. i. 4.) draws with loving-kindness, Jer. xxxi. 3. Thus God deals with us, and we must deal in like manner with those that are under our instruction and government, deal rationally and mildly with them.

6. He eased them of the burdens they had been long groaning under; I was to them as they that take off the yoke on their jaws, alluding to the care of the good husbandman, who is merciful to his beast, and will not tire him with hard and constant labour. Probably, in those times, the yoke on the neck of the oxen was fastened with some brieve, or head fall, over the jaws, which muzzle the mouth of the ox. Israel in Egypt were thus restrained from the enjoyment of their comforts, and constrained to hard labour; but God eased them, removed their shoulder from the burdens, Ps. lxxx. 6. Note, Liberty is a great mercy, especially out of bondage.

7. He supplied them with food convenient in Egypt they fared hard, but when God brought them out, he laid meat unto them, as the husbandman does when he has unyoked his cow, fodder them. God rained mamma about their camp, bread from heaven, angels' food; other creatures seek their meat, but God laid meat to his own people, as we do to our children; was himself their Caterer and Carver; prevented them with the blessings of goodness.

II. Here is Israel very ungrateful to God.

1. They were fond of idols, and worshipped them; They sacrificed to Baalim, first one Baal, and then another, as in Egypt, they sacrificed for gain to Baal, and then they were called to by the prophets of the Lord again and again not to do this abominable thing which he hated. Idolatry was the sin which, from the beginning, and all along, had most easily beset them.

2. They were regardless of God, and of his favours to them; They knew not that I healed them. They looked only at Moises and Aaron, the instruments of their relief, and, when any thing was amiss, quarrelled with them, but looked not through them to God who employed them. Or, When God corrected them, and kept them under a severe discipline, they understood not that it was for their good, and that God thereby healed them; and it was ne necessary for the perfecting of their cure; else they would have been better reconciled to the methods God took. Note, Ignorance is at the bottom of ingratitude, ch. ii. 8.

4. They were strongly inclined to apostasy. This is the blackest article in the charge; (v. 7.) My people are bent to backsliding from me. Every word here is aggravating. (1.) They backslide. This is to return, and is the beginning of the evil; yet they seem to come forward toward God, but immediately they slide back again, and are as a deceitful bow. (2.) They backslide from me, from God, the chief Good, the Fountain of life and living waters, from their God, their Owner, Ruler, and Benefactor, from God who never turned from them, nor was as a wilderness to them. (3.) They are bent to backslide, that is, so bent as to incline, propensities to that which is evil; at the best, they hang in suspense between God and the world, so that a little thing serves to draw them the wrong way; they are forward to close with every temptation. It also intimates that they are resolve in sin; their hearts are fully set in them to do evil; the bias is strong that way; and they persist in their backslidings, whatever is said or done to prevent. (4.) They are, in profession, my people; They are called by my name, and profess relation to me; they are mine whom I have done much for, and expect much from, whom I have nourished, and brought up as children, and yet they backslide from me.* Note, In our repentance, we ought to lament not only our backslidings, but our bent to backslide, not only our actual transgressions, but our original corruption; the sin that dwells in us, the carnal mind.

5. They were strangely averse to repentance and reformation. Here are two expressions for that, (1.) They refused to return, v. 5. So much were they bent to backslide, that though they could not but find, upon trial, the folly of their backslidings, and that when they forsook God, they changed for the worse, yet they went on forwardly; I have loved strangers, and after them I will go. They were commanded to return, were courted and entreated to return, were promised that if they would, they should be kindly received; but they refused. (2.) Though they called them to the Most High; God's prophets and ministers called them to return to the God from whom they had revolted, to the Most High God, from whom they should rest and be saved; they called them to the worship of the idols, which were so much below them, and the worship of whom was therefore their disapparagement, to the true God, who was so much above them, and the worship of whom was therefore their preference; they called them from this earth to high and heavenly things; but they called in vain, none at all would exalt him. Though he be exalted they will not; they would not acknowledge him; they exalt in vain, none at all would exalt him.

III. Here is God very angry, and justly so, with Israel; see what are the tokens of God's displeasure, with which they are here threatened.

1. God, who brought them out of Egypt, to take them for a people to himself, since they would not be faithful to him, shall bring them into a worse condition than he at first found them in; (v. 5.) He shall not return into the land of Egypt, though that was a house of bondage grievous enough; but he shall go into a harder service, for the Assyrian shall be his king, who will use them worse than ever Pharaoh did. They shall not return into Egypt, which lies near, where they may hear often from their own country, and whence they may hope shortly to return to it again; but they shall be carried into Assyria, which lies much more remote, and where they shall be cut off from all correspondence with their own land, and from all hopes of returning to it, and justly, because they refused to return. Note, Those that will not return to the duties they have left, cannot expect to return to the comforts they have lost.

2. God, who gave them Canaan, that good land, and a very safe and comfortable settlement in it, shall bring his judgments upon them there, which shall make their habitation unsafe and uncomfortable; (v. 6.) The sword shall come upon him, the sword of war, the sword of a foreign enemy, prevailing against them, and triumphing over them. (1.) This judgment shall spread far; the sword shall lasten upon his cities, those nests of people and storehouses of wealth; it shall likewise reach to his branches, or country-villages, (so some,) the citizens themselves, (so others,) or, the bars (so the word signifies) and gates of their city, or, all the branches of their revenue and wealth, or, their children, the branches of their families. (2.) It shall last long; It shall abide on their cities. David thought three months flying before his enemies, was the only judgment of the three that was to be excepted against; but this sword here shall abide much longer than so on the cities of Israel. They continued their rebellions against God, and therefore God continued his judgments on them. (3.) It shall make a full end; it shall consume his branches, and devour them, and lay all waste, and this because of their own counsels, because they would have their own way, both in worship and conversation, would do as they listed, and pursue their own projects, which God therefore, in awav of righteous judgment, gave them up to. Note, The confusion of sinners is owing to their contrivance. God's counsels would have saved them, but their own counsels ruined them.

8. How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? how shall I deliver thee, Israel? how shall I make thee as Admah? how shall I set thee as Zebaim? My heart is turned within me, my reppentings are kindled together. 9. I will not execute the fierceness of mine anger, I will not return to destroy Ephraim: for I am God, and not man; the Holy One in the midst of thee; and I will not enter into the city. 10. They shall walk after the Lord; he shall roar like a lion: when he shall roar, then the children shall tremble from the west. 11. They shall tremble as a bird out of Egypt, and as a dove out of the land of Assyria: and I will place them in their houses, saith the Lord. 12. Ephraim compasseth me about with lies, and the house of Israel with deceit; but Judah yet ruleth with God, and is faithful with the saints.

In these verses we have,

1. God's wonderful backwardness to destroy Israel; (v. 8, 9.) How shall I give thee up? Here observe. 1. God's gracious debate within himself concerning Israel's case, a debate between justice and mercy, in which victory plainly inclines to mercy's side. Be astonished, O heavens, at this, and wonder, O earth, at the glory of God's goodness! Not that there are any such struggles in God as there are in us, or that he is ever fluctuating or unresolved; no, he is in one mind, and knows it; but they are expressions after the manner of men, designed to show what severity the sin of Israel had deserved, and yet how divine grace would be glorified in sparing them notwithstanding. The connexion of this with what goes before is very surprising; it was said of Israel, (v. 7.) that they were here; and that they were there; when they are called to him, yet they would not exalt him; upon which, one would think, it should have followed, "Now I am determined to destroy them, and never show them mercy more;" no, such is the sovereignty of mercy, such the freeness, the fulness, of divine grace, that it follows immediately, How shall I give thee up? See here, (1.) The proposals that justice makes concerning Israel, the suggestion of which is here implied; Let Ephraim be given up, as an incorrigible patient is given up to be disinhernated, as an incurable patient is given over by his physician. Let him be given up to ruin, let Israel be delivered into the enemy's hand, as a lamb to the lion, to be torn in pieces; let them be made as Admah, and set as Zoar among the waste places; The walls of Gomorrah were destroyed by fire and brimstone rained from heaven upon them; let them be utterly and irreparably ruined, and be made as like these cities in desolation as they have been in sin. Let that curse which is written in the law, be executed upon them, that the whole land shall be brimstone and salt, like the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, (Gen. xix. 24.) Let not Ephraim and Israel deserve to be thus abandoned, and God does them no wrong if he deal thus with them. (2.) The opposition that mercy makes to these proposals; How shall I do it? As the tender father reasons with himself, "How can I cast off my unward son? For he is my son, though he be unworthy, how can I find in my heart to do it?" Thus, "Ephraim is mine elder son," (Hosea iii. 4.) Thus, "Israel is my beloved," (xv. 9.) Thus, "Man's heart is changed like the sea," (xxx. 8.) "How can I do it?" He is ripe for ruin, judgments stand ready to seize him, there wants nothing but giving him up, but I cannot do it. They have been a people near unto me, there are yet some good among them, theirs are the children of the covenant, if they be ruined, the enemy will triumph; it may be, they will yet repent and reform, and therefore how can I do it?" Note, The God of heaven is slow to anger, and is especially loath to abandon a people to utter ruin, that has been in special relation to him. See how mercy works upon the mention of those severe proceedings; My heart is turned within me; as we say, Our hearts fail us, when we come to a thing that is against the grain with us. God speaks as if he were conscious to himself of a strange thing, when he leaves us, that he has left us, as Lam. i. 20. My bowels are troubled, my heart is turned within me. As it follows here, My repentings are kindled together; his bowels yearned toward them, and his soul was grieved for their sin and misery, Judg. x. 16. Compare Jer. xxxxi. 20. Since I spake against him, my bowels are troubled for him; and when God's hand is upon his head, to give up his sacrifice for a Saviour for a head and Saviour for sinners, he did not say, How shall I give him up? No, he spared not his own Son; it pleased the Lord to bruise him; and therefore God spared not him, that he might spare us: but this is only the language of the day of his patience, but when men have sinned that away, and the great day of his wrath comes, then no difficulty is made of it, my, I will laugh at their calamity.

2. His gracious determination of this debate. After a long contest, mercy in the issue rejoices against judgment, has the last word, and carries the day, v. 9. It is decreed that the reprobate shall be lengthened out yet longer, and I will not now execute the fierceness of mine anger though I am angry; though they shall not go altogether unpunished, yet he will mitigate their sentence, and abate the rigour of it. He will show himself to be justly angry, but not implacably so; they shall be corrected, but not consumed. I will not return to destroy Ephraim; the judgments that have been inflicted shall not be repeated, shall not go so deep as they have deserved. He will not return to destroy, as soldiers, when they have been unloaded and unloaded a sad day, and have overpowered, a second time, to take more, as when what the falmer-worm has left, the locust has eaten. It is added in the close of the verse, I will not enter into the city, into Samaria, or any other of their cities; I will not enter into them as an enemy, utterly to destroy them, and lay them waste, as Admah and Zeboim were.

3. The ground and reason of this determination; For I am God and not man, the Holy One of Israel. To encourage them to hope that they shall find mercy, consider, (1.) What he is in himself; he is God, and not man, as in other things, so in pardoning sin, and sparing sinners; if they had offended a man like themselves, he would not, he could not, have forgiven and forgiven thus; they might have excused his compassion, and he would have executed the fierceness of his anger; but I am God, and not man; he is Lord of his anger, whereas men's anger commonly lords it over them. If an earthly prince were in such a strict between justice and mercy, he would be at a less how to compromise the matter between them; but he who is God, and not man, knows how to contrive and determine the case, to the honour of his justice, and yet advance the honour of his mercy. Man's compassions are nothing in comparison with the tender mercies of our God, whose thoughts and ways, in receiving returning sinners, are as much above ours as heaven is above the earth, Isa. lv. 9. Note, It is a great encouragement to our hope in God's mercies, to remember that he is God, and not man. He is the Holy One. One would think this were a reason why he should reject such a provoking people; no, God knows how to spare and pardon poor sinners, not only without any reproach to his holiness, but very much to the honour of it; as he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and therein declares his righteousness, now Christ has purchased the pardon, and he has promised it. (2.) What he is to them; he is the Holy One in the midst of thee; his holiness is engaged for the good of his church, and even in this corrupt, degenerate land and age, there were some that gave thanks at the remembrance of his holiness, and he required of them all to be holy as he is, Lev. xix. 2. As long as we have the Holy One in the midst of us, we are safe and well; but we to us, if he withdraws himself, we are undone. Note. Those who submit to the influence, may take the comfort, of God's holiness.

II. Here is his wonderful forwardness to do good for Israel; which appears in this, that he will qualify them to receive the good he designs for them; (v. 10, 11.) They shall walk after the Lord. His special goodness to them is here declared, (ch. iii. 5.) They shall return, and seek the Lord. This sentence is spoken of the ten tribes, and had its accomplishment, in part, in the return of some of them, with those of the two tribes in Ezra's time; but it had its more full accomplishment in God's spiritual Israel, the gospel-church, brought together and incorporated by the gospel of Christ. The ancient Jews referred it to the time of the Messiah; the learned Dr. Pocock looks upon it as a prophecy of Christ's coming to preach the gospel to the dispersed remnant of Israel, the children of God that were scattered abroad. And then observe,

1. How they were to be called and brought together; The Lord shall roar like a lion. The word of the Lord to Edom; and as a lion shall he roar (Isa. 13. 2). Christ is called, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, and his gospel, in the beginning of it, was the voice of one crying in the wilderness. When Christ cried with a loud voice, it was as when a lion roared, Rev. x. 3. The voice of the gospel was heard far, as the roaring of a lion, and it was a mighty voice. See Joel iii. 16.

2. What impression this call should make upon them, that, as the roaring of a lion makes upon all the beasts of the forest; When he shall roar, then the children shall tremble; see Amos iii. 8. The lion has roared, the Lord God has spoken; and then who will not fear? When they whose hearts the gospel reached, trembled, and were astonished, and cried out, What shall we do? When they were by it put upon working out the new creation, and worshipping God with fear and trembling, then this promise was fulfilled. The children shall tremble from the west. The dispersed Jews were carried eastward, to Assyria and Babylon, and those that returned, came from the east; therefore this seems to have reference to the calling of the Gentiles that lay westward from Canaan, for that way especially the gospel spread. They shall tremble that shall come, and come with trembling, with care and haste, from the west, from the nations that lay that way, to the mountain of the Lord, (Isa. ii. 3.) to the gospel-Jerusalem, upon hearing the alarm of the gospel. The apostle speaks of mighty signs and wonders that were wrought by the preaching of the gospel from Jerusalem round about Illyricum, Rom. xv. 19. Then the children shall tremble. And whereas Israel after the flesh was dispersed in Egypt and Assyria, it is promised that they shall be effectually summoned from thence; (v. 11.) They shall tremble; they shall come trembling, and with all haste, as a bird upon the wing out of Egypt, and as a dove out of the land of Assyria; a dove is noted for swift and constant flight, especially when she flies to her windows, which the flocking of Jews and Gentiles to the gospel is, and is the image of Israel's dispersion.

8. Wherever they are, that belong to the election of grace, east, west, north, or south, they shall hear the joyful sound, and be wrought upon by it; they of Egypt and Assyria shall come together, those that lay most remote from each other shall meet in Christ, and be incorporated in the church. Of the uniting of Egypt and Assyria, it was prophesied, Isa. xxv. 23.

3. What effect these impressions should have upon them; being moved with fear, they shall flee to the ark; They shall walk after the Lord; after the service of the Lord; (so the Chaldee;) they shall take the Lord Christ for their Leader and Commander, they shall list themselves under him as the Captain of their salvation, and give up themselves to the direction of the Spirit as their Guide by the word; they shall leave all to follow Christ, as becomes disciples. Note, Our holy trembling at the word of Christ will draw us to him, not drive from him. When he roars like a lion, the slaves tremble, and flee from him, the children tremble, and flee to him.

4. What entertainment they shall meet with at their return; (v. 11.) I will house them in their houses; all those that come at the gospel-call, shall have a place and a name in the gospel-church, in the particular churches which are their houses, to which they pertain; they shall dwell in God, and be at home in him; both easy and safe, as a man in his own house. They shall have mansions, for there are many in our Father's house, in his tabernacle on earth, and his temple in heaven, in everlasting habitations, which may be called their houses, for they are the lot they shall stand in at the end of the days.

III. Here is a sad complaint of the treachery of Ephraim and Israel, which may be an intimation that it is not Israel after the flesh, but the spiritual Israel, to whom the foregoing promises belong, for as for this Ephraim, this Israel, they compass God about with lies and deceit; all their services of him, when they pretended to compass his altar, were rigged and hypocritical; when they surrounded him with their prayers and praises, every one having a petition to present to him, they lied to him with their mouth, and flattered him with their tongue, their pretensions were so fair, and yet their intentions so foul, that they would, if possible, have imposed upon God himself. Their professions and promises were all a cheat, and yet with these they thought to compass God about, to enclose him as it were, to keep him among them, and prevent his leaving them.

IV. Here is a pleasant commendation of the integrity of the two tribes, which they yet held fast, and which comes in as an aggravation of the perfidiousness of the ten tribes, and a reason why God had that mercy in store for Judah, which he had not for Israel; (ch. i. 5, 7.) for Judah yet rules with God, and is faithful with the saints; while Israel is the Most Holy. 1. Judah rules with God; he serves God, and the service of God is not only true liberty and freedom, but it is dignity and dominion. Judah rules; the princes and governors of Judah rule with God, they use their power for him, for his honour, and the support of his interest; those rule with God, that rule in the fear of God; (2 Sam. xxiii. 3.) and it is his honour to do so, and their privy sanctity. As God, as Judah's here is. Judah is Israel—a prince with God. 2. He is faithful with the Holy God, keeps close to his worship, and to his saints—unto his priests, to his people; faithful with the saints— with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, whose steps they faithfully tried in. They walk in the way of good men; and those that do so, rule with God, they have a mighty interest in Heaven. Judah yet rules, the power of God is with him. Now this is come when Judah also would revolt and degenerate. Note, When we see how many there are that compass God about with lies and deceit, it may be a comfort to us to think that God has his remnant that cleave to him with purpose of heart, and are faithful to his saints, and for those who are thus faithful unto death, is reserved a crown of life, when hypocrites and all liars shall have their portion without.

CHAP. XII.

In this chapter, we have, I. A high charge drawn up both against Israel and Judah for their sins, which were the ground of God's controversy with them, v. 1, 2. Particularly the sin of fraud and injustice, which Ephraim is charged with, (v. 7.) and justifies himself in, v. 8. And the sin of idolatry, (v. 11.) by which God is provoked to contend with them, v. 14. II. The aggravations of the sins they are charged with, taken from the honour God put upon his father Jacob; (v. 3-5.) the advancement of them into a people from low and mean beginnings; (v. 12, 13.) and the provision he had made them of helps for their souls by the prophets he sent them, v. 10, 11. III. A call to the people to remember what God had called them to turn to God, v. 9, and an intimation of mercy that God had in store for them, v. 9.

1. Ephraim feedeth on wind, and followeth after the east wind; he daily increaseth lies and desolation; and they do make a covenant with the Assyrians, and oil is carried into Egypt. 2. The Lord hath also a controversy with Judah, and will punish Jacob according to his ways; according to his doings will he recompense him. 3. He took his brother by the heel in the womb, and by his strength he had power with God: 4. Yea, he had power over the angel, and prevailed; he wept and made supplication unto him; he found him in Bethel, and there he spake with him; 5. Even the Lord God of hosts; The Lord is his memorial. 6. Therefore turn thou to thy God: keep mercy and judgment, and wait on thy God continually.

In these verses, 1. Ephraim is convicted of folly, in staying himself upon Egypt and Assyria, when he was in straits; (v. 1.) Ephraim feeds on wind, feeds himself with vain hopes of assistance from man, when he is at variance with God; and when he meets with disappointments, he still pursues the same game, and greedily pants and follows after the east wind, which he cannot catch hold of; nor, if he could, would it be nourishing, nay, it would be noxious; we say of the wind in the east, It is hot, it goeth not for me; Isa. liv. 7. He sways the wind; and as he sows, so he reaps, the whirlwind; and as he reaps, so he feeds on, the east wind. Note, Those that make creatures their confidence, make fools of themselves, and take a great deal of pain to put a cheat upon their own souls, and to prepare vexation for themselves; He daily increaseth lies, multiplies his corruptions and sin; he makes himself more and more deceitful to him; nay, they will prove deceitful to him; those very nations that he makes his refuge, will prove his ruin. Those that stay themselves upon lies, will be still coveting to increase them, that they may build their hopes firm upon them; as if many lies twisted together would make one truth, or many broken reeds and ropes, and broken cords, one cord, Eph. iv. 14. and they are as many cords of confusion, and will prove to them a great desolation; for they that observe lying vanities, the more they increase them, the more disappointments they prepare for themselves, and the further they run from their own mercies. The men of Ephraim did so when they thought to secure the Assyrians in their interests by a solemn league, signed, sealed, and sworn to; they make a covenant with the Assyrians, but they will find there is no hold of them; that potent prince will be a slave to his word no longer than he pleases. They thought to secure the Egyptians for their confederates by a rich present of the commodities of their country, not only to purchase their favour, but to show that their friendship was worth having; Oil is carried into Egypt. But the Egyptians, when they had got the bribe, dropped the cause, and Ephraim was never the better for them. Oleum hereditid et operam.—He has lost both his money and his labour. This was feeding on wind; this was increasing lies and desolation.

II. Judah is contended with too, and Jacob, which includes both Ephraim and Judah; (v. 2.) The Lord has also a controversy with Judah: for though he had awhile ago ruled with God, and been faithful with the saints, yet now he begins to degenerate; or, though in keeping close to the house of David, and the house of Aaron, and in them to the covenants of royalty and priesthood, they were so far in the right, in the former they ruled with God, and in the latter were faithful to the saints, yet, upon other accounts, God had a controversy with them, and would punish them. Note, Men's being in the right in some things, in the main things, shall not exempt them from correction, and therefore should not exempt them from reprood, for those things wherein they stand and are degenerate. Thus here of those of the seven churches of Asia, which Christ approved of and commended, and yet he adds, Nevertheless I have something against thee. So here; though Jacob is a people near to God, yet God will punish him according to the evil ways he was found in, and the evil doings he was found guilty of; for God sees sin even in his own people, and will take with his hand.

III. Both Ephraim and Judah are put in mind of their father Jacob, whose seed they were, and whose name they bore, and it was their honour; they are put in mind of the extraordinary things he did, and God did for him; that they might be more ashamed of themselves for degenerating from so illustrious a progenitor, and staining the lustre of so great a name, and yet that they might be engaged and encouraged to return to God, the God of their father Jacob, in hopes for his sake to find favour with him. He had called this people Jacob, (v. 2.) threatening to punish them; but how shall I give them up? How shall that dear name be forgotten? Three glorious things concerning Jacob the person, Jacob the people are here put in mind of; but by brief hints only, for it is presumed that they knew the story.

1. His struggling with Esau in the womb. There he took his brother by the heel, v. 3. We have the story, Gen. xxvi. 26. It was an early act of bravery, and an effort for the best precedence, a fious ambition of that birthright in the covenant, which Esau is justly branded as profane for desiring. But his degenerate sons, they despising their birthrights, and making league with them, profaned that crown, and laid that honour in the dust, which he so gloriously put in for. Then it was that the dominion was given him; The elder shall serve the younger; then he was owned of God as his beloved; Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated; but they had by their sin forfeited both the love of God, and dominion over them.

2. His wrestling with the angel; "Remember how your father Jacob had power with God by his own strength, the strength he had by the gift of God, who pleaded not against him by his great power, but put strength into him," Job xxii. 6. The angel he wrestled with, is called God, and therefore is supposed to be the Son of God, the Angel of the Covenant. "God was both a Covenant with Jacob, and an Assistant of him, showing, in the latter regard, greater strength than in the former, fighting, as it were, against him with his left hand, and for him with his right, and to that putting greater force." So Dr. Pocock. The providence of God fought against him, when he met with one danger after another, in his return from Babylon, and he had a great deal of success on cheerfully in his way, and when his faith acted upon the divine promise that was for him, prevailed above his fears that arose from the divine providences that were against him, then by his strength he had power with God. But it refers especially to his prayer for deliverance from Esau, and for a blessing; He had power over the angel, and prevailed, for strength, and made vengeance there. Here was a mixture of the greatest courage and the greatest tenderness; Jacob wrestling like a cham- pion, and yet weeping like a child. Note, Prayers and tears are the weapons with which the saints have obtained the most glorious victories. Thus Jacob convinced Israel, a prince with God; his posterity was called Israel, but they were unworthy the name, for they had forfeited and lost their communion with God, and their interest in him, by revolting from their duty to him.

3. His meeting with God at Bethel; God found him in Bethel, and there he spake with us. God found him the first time in Bethel, as he went to Padan-aram, (Gen. xxviii. 10,) and a second time after he returned from Padan-aram; the prophet says this of God; that this refers to both; for in both God spake to Jacob, and renewed the covenant with him, and the prophet might very well say, There he spake with us who are the seed of Jacob, for both times that God spake with Jacob at Bethel, he spake with him concerning his seed; (Gen. xxviii. 14.) Thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth; and, (Gen. xxxv. 12.) Jacob said of God: There God spake with him. Thus God then covenanted with him, and his seed after him. Now justly are they upbraided with this; for in that very place which their father Jacob called Bethel—the house of God, in remembrance of the communion he there had with God, did they set up one of the calves, and worship it; so thus they turned that Bethel into a Beth-aven—a house of iniquity; for God spake with them exceeding great and precious promises, which they had despised and lost the benefit of.

Two inferences are here drawn from these stories concerning Jacob, for instruction to his seed.

(1.) Here is a use of information; from what passed between God and Jacob, we may learn that Jehovah, the Lord God of hosts, is the God of Israel; he was the God of Jacob, and this is his memorial throughout all the generations of the seed of Jacob; (v. 5.) the more shame for them who forgot the memorial of their church, deserted the God of their fathers, and exchanged a Lord of hosts for Baalim. Note, Those only are accounted the people of God, that keep up a memorial of God, such memorials of him as he himself has instituted, by which he makes himself known, and will have us to remember him. Here are two memorials of his, by which he is distinguished from all others, and is to be acknowledged and adored by us. [1.] The former speaks his existence of himself. He is Jehovah, much the same with I AM, the same that was, and is, and is to come, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable. Jehovah is his memorial, his peculiar name. [2.] The latter speaks his dominion over heaven and earth. He is the God of hosts; he has all the hosts of heaven and earth at his beck and command, and makes what use he pleases of them. Jacob saw Mahanaim, God's two hosts, about the time that he wrestled with the angel, (Gen. xxxii. 1, 2.) and so learned to call God the God of hosts, and transmitted it to us as his memorial. God's names, titles, and attributes, are the memorials of him; there is no need for images to be such. And that which was a revelation of God to one, is his memorial to many, to all generations.

(2.) Here is a use of exhortation; (v. 6.) Is this so, that Jacob thy father had this communion with the Lord God of hosts, and is this still his memorial? [1.] Then let those that have gone astray from God be converted to him; Therefore turn thou to God from thy going aside, and be gathered unto Jacob; is the God of Israel, is thy God, from whom thou hast unprofitably and unkindly revolted; therefore turn thou to him by repentance and faith, turn to him as thou, to love him, obey him, and depend upon him. [2.] Then let those that are converted to him, walk with him in all holy conversation and godliness; Keep mercy and judgment, mercy in relieving and supporting those that need it, and judging in rendering to all their due; be kind to all, do wrong to none. Keep piety and judgment; (so it may be read,) live righteously and godly in this present world; be devout, and be honest. Do not only practise these occasionally, but be careful and constant, and conscientious, in the practice of them.” [3.] Let those that walk with God, be encouraged to live a life of dependence upon him; “Wait on thy God continually, with a believing expectation to receive from him all the succours and supplies thou standest in need of.” Those that live a life of conscientiousness are hereby blessed; they shall have comfort in him, if he be not their own fault. Let our eyes be ever toward the Lord, and let us preserve a holy security and serenity of mind under the protection of the divine power, and the influence of the divine favour, looking, without anxiety, for a dubious event, and by faith keeping our spirits sedate and even; that is waiting on God as our God in covenant, and this we must do continually.

7. He is a merchant, the balances of deceit are in his hand: he loveth to oppress.

8. And Ephraim said, Yet I am become rich, I have found me out substance: in all my labours they shall find none iniquity in me that were sin. 9. And I, that am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt, will yet make thee to dwell in tabernacles, as in the days of the solemn feast. 10. I have also spoken by the prophets, and I have multiplied visions, and used similitudes, by the ministry of the prophets. 11. Is there iniquity in Gilgal? surely they are vanity: they sacrifice bullocks in Gilgal; yea, their altars are as heaps in the furrows of the fields. 12. And Jacob fled into the country of Syria, and Israel served for a wife, and for a wife he kept sheep. 13. And by a prophet the Lord brought Israel out of Egypt, and by a prophet was he preserved. 14. Ephraim provoked him to anger most bitterly: therefore shall he leave his blood upon him, and his reproach shall his Lord return unto him.

Here are instructions in these verses.

Rejoice with sin. When God is coming forth to contend with a people, that he may demonstrate his own righteousness, he will demonstrate their unrighteousness. Ephraim was called to turn to his God and keep judgment; (v. 6.) now, to show that he had need of that call, he is charged with turning from his God by idolatry, and breaking the laws of justice and judgment.

Now he is here charged with injustice against the precepts of the second table, v. 7, 8. Where observe,

(1.) What the sin is, wherewith he is charged; He is a merchant. The margin reads it as a proper name, He is Canaan, or a Canaanite, unworthy to be denominated from Jacob and Israel, and worthy to be cast out with a curse from this good land, as the Canaanites were. See Amos ix. 7. But Canaan sometimes signifies a merchant, and therefore most likely to do so here, where Ephraim is charged with deceit in trade. Though God had given his people a land flowing with milk and honey, yet he did not forbid them to enrich themselves by merchandise, and they succeeded the Canaanites in that as well as in their husbandry; they sucked the abundance of the seas, and the treasures hid in the sand, Deut. xxxiii. 19. And if they had been true merchants, it had been no reproach at all to them, but an honour and blessing; but he is such a merchant as the Canaanites were, who were honest only with good looking to, and, if they could, cheat all they could. Ephraim does so; he deals in meats and oppressions. Note, There is oppression by fraud as well as oppression by force. It is not only princes, lords, and masters, that oppress their subjects, tenants, and servants, but merchants and traders are often guilty of oppressing those they deal with, when they impose upon their ignorance, or take advantage of their necessity, to make them heavy burdens, and charge them more than their debts. Ephraim cheated. [1] With a great deal of art and cunning; The balances of deceit are in his hand; he uses balances, and delivers his goods by weight and measure, as if he would be very exact; but they are balances of deceits, false weights and false measures, and thus, under colour of doing right, he does the greatest wrong. Note, God has his eye upon merchants and traders when they are weighing their goods and paying their money, whether they do honestly or deceitfully; he observes what balances they have in their hand, and how they hold them; and though those they deal with may not be aware of that slight of hand with which they make them balances of deceit, God sees it, and knows it. Trades by the will of man away; in other words, he triumphed over his convictions, that he not only loves the gain of oppression, but he loves to oppress; he loves for sinning sake, and takes a pleasure in out-witting and over-reaching those that suspect him not.

(2.) How he justifies himself in this sin, v. 8. Wicked men will have something to say for themselves now when they are told of their faults, some frivolous turn-off or other, whereby to evade the convictions of the word. Ephraim stands indicted for a common cheat; now see what he pleads to the indictment; he does not deny the charge, or plead, Not guilty, yet does not make a penitent confession of it, and ask pardon, but insists upon his own justification. Suppose it were so that he did use balances of deceit, yet,

He sheds that he had got a good estate. Let the prophet say what he pleased of his deceit, of the sin of it, and the curse of God that attended it, he could not be convinced there was any harm or danger in it, for this he was sure of, that he had thriven in it; "Yet I am become rich, I have found me out substance. Whatever you make of it, I have made a good hand of it." Note, Carnal hearts are often confirmed in a good opinion of their evil ways by their worldly prosperity and success in those ways. But it is a great mistake; every word in what Ephraim says here, speaks his folly. First, It is folly to call the riches of this world substance, for they are thin; that is not, Prov. xxiii. 3. Secondly, It is folly to think that we have them of ourselves, to say, as some read it, I have made my religion; not religion is among them, nor religion in them, no, but brought them with satisfaction to our ingenuity and industry, I have found it, My might and power of my hand have gotten me this wealth. Thirdly, It is folly to think that what we have, is for ourselves. I have found me out substance, as if we had it for our own proper use and behoof, whereas we hold in trust, only as his stewards. Fourthly, It is folly to think that we are growing rich in a sinful way either does make us innocent, or will make us safe, or make us easy, in that way; for the prosperity of fools deceives and destroys them. See Isa. xlvii. 10. Prov. i. 32.

[2.] He pleads that he had kept a good reputation. It is common for sinners when they are justly reproved by their neighbours, to appeal to their neighbours, and, because they know no ill of them, or will say none, or think well of what the prophets have said of them, they imagine themselves approved; In all my labours (says Ephraim) they shall find no iniquity in me, that were sin. Note, Carnal hearts are apt to build a good opinion of themselves upon the fair character they have among their neighbours. Ephraim was very secure, for, First, All his neighbours knew him to be diligent in his business; they had an eye upon all his labours, and commended him for these; You shall praise thee when thou dost well for thyself. Secondly, None of them knew him to be deceitful in his business. He acted so well, that nobody could say to the contrary but that he played fair. For either, 1. He concealed the fraud, so that none discovered it. Whatever iniquity there is, they shall find none; we were thorough cunning, and damming to the soul, but that which is open and scandalous before men. What will it avail us that men shall find no iniquity in us, when God finds a great deal, and will bring every secret work, even secret frauds, into judgment. Or, 2. He excuses the fraud, so that none condemned it. They shall find no iniquity in me, that were sin, nothing very serious, nothing that will not buy itself; nothing venial sins, sins not worth speaking of, which they think God will make nothing of, because they do not. It is a fashionable iniquity, it is customary, it is what every body does, it is pleasant, it is gainful, and this, they think, is no iniquity that is sin, nobody will think the worse of them for it; but God sees not as man sees, he judges not as man judges. He is here charg'd with idolatry against some of the precepts of the first table; with that iniquity which is in a special manner vanity, the making and worshipping of images, which are vanities; (v. 11.) Surely they are vanity; they do not profit, but deceive. Now the prophet mentions two places notorious for idolatry. (1.) Gilead on the other side Jordan, which had been branded for it before, (ch. ii.) Is there any iniquity in thine house, etc. (2.) It is here charg'd with idolatry against some of the precepts of the second table; with that iniquity which is to be wondered at, it is a thing to be sadly lamented. What iniquity in Gilead? Idolatry there? Gilead was a fruitful, pleasant country; (pleasant to a proverb, Jer. xxvii. 6.) and does it so ill require the Lord? It was a frontier country, and lay much exposed to the insults of enemies, and therefore stood in special need of the divine protection; what! and yet by iniquity throw itself out of that protection? Is there iniquity in Gilead? Yea, (2.) And in Gilgal too; there they sacrifice bullocks, (ch. ix. 15.) and there their altars which they have set up, either to strange gods, in opposition to God himself, or to the God of Israel, in opposition to his own appointed altar, are as thick as heaps in the furrows of the field that is to be sown, ch. viii. 11. Is there iniquity in Gilead only? So some. Is it only in those remote parts of the nation, that people are so superstitious, where they border upon other nations? No, they are as bad at Gilgal. In Gilead God protected Jacob their father (of whom he had been speaking) from the rage of Laban; and will you there commit iniquity? Here are threatening's of wrath for sin. Some make that to be so; (v. 9.) I will make thee to dwell in tabernacles as in the days of the appointed time; I will bring thee into such a condition as Israel was in, when they dwelt in tents, and wandered for forty years; that was the time appointed; in the wilderness.
nness. Ephraim forgot that God brought him out of Egypt, and brought him up to be what he was, and was proud of his wealth, and took sinful courses to increase it; and therefore God threatens to bring him to a tabernacle-state again, to a poor, mean, desolate, unsettled condition. Note, It is just with God, when men have by their sins turned their tents into houses, by his judgments to turn their houses into tents again. However, that is certainly a benediction to him (v. 4.) Ephraim provoked him to anger most bitterly. See how men are deceived in their opinion of themselves, and how they will one day be undeceived. Ephraim thought that there was no impiety in him, that deserved to be called sin; (v. 8.) but God tells him that there was that in him, which was sin, and would be found so, if he did not repent and reform; for, 1. It was extremely often. He shall take away his blood upon him; he shall not hold him guiltless, but bring upon him that death which is the wages of sin; his blood shall be upon his own head, (2 Sam. i. 16.) for his own iniquity has testified against him, and he alone shall bear it. Note, When sinners sin, their hands are laid upon them, (v. 2.) He shall take away his forfeited honour; His reproach shall his Lord return upon him. God is his Lord; he had by idolatry and other sins reproached the Lord, and done dishonour to him, and to his name and family, and had given occasion to others to reproach him; and now God will return the reproach upon him, according to the word he has spoken, that those who despise him, shall be lightly esteemed. Note, Shameful sins shall have shameful punishments. If Ephraim put contempt on his God, he shall be so reduced, that all his neighbours shall look with contempt upon him.

III. Here are memorials of former mercy, which come in to convict them of base ingratitude in revolting from God. Let them blush to remember, 1. The God who had trained them. When Ephraim was become rich, and was proud of that, he forgot that which God (that he might not forget it) obliged them every year to acknowledge, (Deut. xxvi. 5.) A Syrian ready to perish was my father. But God here puts them in mind of it, v. 12. Let them remember, not only the honours of their father Jacob, which a mighty prince he was with God, v. 3. (an honour which they had no more to it than God against them,) but what a poor servant he was to Laban, which was sufficient to mortify them that were puffed up with the estates they had raised. Jacob fled into Syria from a malicious brother, and there served a covetous uncle for a wife, and for a wife he kept sheep, because he had no estate to endow a wife with. Jacob was poor, and low, and a fugitive; therefore, when he became rich, he was to be a plain man, dwelling in tents, and keeping sheep, therefore balances of deceit ill became them; he served for a wife that was not a Canaanitess, as Esau's wives were, therefore it was a shame for them to degenerate into Canaanities, and mingle themselves with the nations. God wonderfully preserved him in his flight, preserved him in the service, so that he multiplied exceedingly, and from that spot, in a dry ground sprang an illustrious nation, that bare his name which magnifies the goodness of God both to him and them, and leaves them under the stain of base ingratitude to that God who was their Founder and Benefactor.

2. That God had rescued them from misery, had raised them to what they were, not only out of poverty, but out of slavery, (v. 13.) which laid them under much stronger obligations to serve him, and under a yet deeper guilt in serving other Gods. (1.) God brought Israel out of Egypt on purpose that they might not serve other Gods, Deut. xxviii. 55. (2.) God gave a title to them, by the bond of service, for they were his bondmen, and so they were his house servants, who were of his own suit. The servitude of bondage acquired a special title to them and to their service. (2.) He preserved them, as sheep are kept by the shepherd's care. He preserved them from Pharaoh's rage at the sea, even at the Red sea, protected them from all the perils of the wilderness, and provided for them. (3.) He did this by a prophet, Moses, who, though he is called king in Deuteronomy, (Deut. xxxiii. 5.) yet did what he did for Israel, as a prophet, by direction from God, and by the power of his word. The ensign of his authority was not a royal sceptre, but the rod of God; with that he summoned both Egypt's plagues and Israel's blessings. Moses, as a prophet, was a type of Christ, (Acts iii. 22.) and it is by Christ as a Prophet that we are brought out of Egypt, and delivered unto the wilderness; and again, the Lord will make a new covenant, (Jer. xxxi. 31.) but this covenant was made by God; and the latter, the better covenant, established by the blood of Jesus Christ. Now this shows how very unworthy and ungrateful this people were, [1.] In rejecting their God, who had brought them out of Egypt, which, in the preface to the commandments, is particularly a reason for the first, why they should have no other gods before him. [2.] In despising and persecuting his prophets, whom they should have loved and valued, and him that bought them out of Egypt and intending them, for the sake of that prophet by whom God had brought them out of Egypt, and preserved them in the wilderness. Note, The benefit we have had by the word of God, greatly aggravates our sin and folly, if we put any slight upon the word of God. 3. That God had taken care of their education as they grew up. This instance of God's goodness we have, v. 10. As by a prophet he delivered them, so by prophets he still continued to speak to them. Man, who is formed out of the earth, is fed out of the earth; so that nation that was formed by prophecy, by prophecy was fed and taught; beginning at Moses and so going on to all the prophets through the several ages of that church, we find that divine revelation was, all along, their tuition. (1.) They were taught the fullness of the truth, (Amos xi. 8.) a succession of them scarcely ever without a Spirit of prophecy among them more or less, from Moses to Malachi. (2.) These prophets were seers; they had visions and dreams, in which God discovered his mind to them immediately, with a full assurance that it was his mind, Numb. xii. 6. (5.) These visions were multiplied; God spake not only once, yea, twice, but many times. If one vision was not heard of, he sent another. The prophets had variety of visions, and frequent repetitions of the same. (4.) God spake to them by the prophets; what the prophets received from the Lord they plainly and faithfully delivered to them. The people at mount Sinai begged that God would speak to them by men like themselves; and he did so. (5.) In every case, God dealt not by similitudes, to make the messages he sent by them intelligible, more affecting, and more likely to be remembered. The visions they saw, were often similitudes, and their discourses were embellished with very apt comparisons. And as God by his prophets, so by his Son, he used similitudes, for he opened his mouth in parables. Note, God keeps an account, he reveals his mind, not by similitudes, but by those that have long enjoyed the means of grace in purity, plenty, and power, that have been frequently, faithfully, and familiarly told the mind of God, will have a great deal to answer for another day, if they persist in a course of iniquity.

IV. Before the intimation of further mercy, and this remembered too in the midst of sin and wrath, as some understand; (v. 9.) "I that am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt, who then and there took thee to be my people, and have approved my- self thy God ever since, in a constant series of meri-ciful providences, have yet a kindness for thee, bad as thou art; and I will make thee to dwell in tab-neries, not as before wasteful, but as in the days of the solemn feasts," the feast of tabernacles, which was celebrated with great joy, Lev. xxvii. 40. 1.

They shall be made to see, by the grace of God, that though they are rich, and have found out substance, yet they are but in a tabernacle state, and have in their worldly wealth no continuing city. 2.
This was the one solemn feast of which God spake, as was the feast of tabernacles, Zech. xiv. 12, 13.

CHAP. XIII.

The same strings, though generally unpleasing ones, are harped upon in this chapter, that were in those before. People care not to be told either of their sin, or of their danger by sin; and yet it is necessary, and for their good, that such a terror be told of both, nor can there be better hearers of either than from the word of God, and from their faithful ministers while the sin may be repent'd of, and the dangger prevented. Here, 1. The people of Israel are re-proved and threatened for their wantonness, pride, and luxury, and other abuses of their wealth and prosperity, v. v. 5. 9. III. The rain that is coming upon them, for the punishment of their sin, is described as a terrible rain, v. 13, 15, 16. IV. Those among them that yet retain a respect for their God, are here encouraged to hope that he will yet appear for their relief, though their kings and princes, and all their other supports and succours, fail them, v. 9. 11, 14.

1. WHEN Ephraim spake trembling, he exalted himself in Israel; but when he offended in Baal, he died. 2. And now they sin more and more, and have made them molten images of their silver, and idols according to their own understanding, all of it the work of the craftsmen: they say of them, Let the men that sacrifice kiss the calves. 3. Therefore they shall be as the morning cloud, and as the early dew that passeth away; as the chaff that is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor, and as the smoke out of the chimney. 4. Yet I am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt, and thou shalt know no God but me: for there is no saviour besides me.

Idolatry was the sin that did most easily beset the Jewish nation till after the captivity; the ten tribes from the first were guilty of it, but especially after the days of Ahab; and this is the sin which, in these verses, they are charged with. Observe,

1. The provision that God made to prevent their falling into idolatry. This we have, v. 4. God did what was fit to be done, to keep them from sinning again of themselves; what could be done more? (1.) He made himself known to them as the Lord their God, and took them to be his people in a peculiar manner; both by his word and by his works all along from the land of Egypt, he declared, I am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt. (2.) He made them a land for their possession, which they had not possessed before; they were in the mountain Sinai, that he was the Lord, and their God, who brought them out of the land of Egypt. This he continued both to declare and to prove to them by his prophets and by his providences. (2.) He gave them a law forbidding them to worship any other; Thou shalt know no god but me; not only shall not own and worship any other, but shall not be joined with him in any manner in any thing, and usages of the Gentiles familiar to thee." Note,
It is a happy ignorance not to know that which we ought not to meddle with. We find those praised, who have not known the depths of Satan. (3.) He gave them a good reason for it; There is no saviour beside me. Whatever we take for our God, we expect to have to serve our adviser, to make us happy here and hereafter; as, where we have protection we owe allegiance, so, where we have salvation, and hope for it, we owe adoration.

2. The honour that Ephraim had while he kept himself clear from idolatry; (v. 1.) While Ephraim shake trembling, or with trembling, that is, (as Dr. Pocock understands it,) while he behaved himself toward God as his father Jacob did, with weeping and self-lamming, and speedily and strongly against God and his prophets, while he kept up a holy fear of God and worshipped him in that fear, so long he exalted himself in Israel, he was very considerable among the tribes, and made a figure. Jeroboam, who was of that tribe, exalted himself and his family; when he spake, there was trembling all about him, stood in awe of him, so some understand it. Note, Those that humble themselves, especially that humble themselves before God, shall be exalted. When people speak with modesty and jealousy of themselves, with a diffidence of their own judgment, and a deference to others, they exalt themselves, they gain a reputation. But as for Ephraim, he soon lost himself; when he offended in Baal, he died, he lost his reputation, his honour soon dwindled and sunk, and was laid in the dust. Baal is here put for all idolatry; when Ephraim forsook God, and took to worship images, the state received its death's wound, and was never good for any thing after. Note, Destructing God is the death of any person or persons.

3. The lamentable growth of idolatry among them; (v. 2.) Now they sin more and more; when once he is offended in Baal, he grows more and more, and he grew worse and worse; coveted more idols, dotted more upon those he had, and grew more ridicuulous in the worship of them. Note, The way of idolatry, as of other sins, is down-hill, and men cannot easily stop themselves. It is the sad case of all those who have forsaken God, that they sin yet more and more. Let us take those in their apparance, (1.) They made these molten images, proud to have Gods that they could cast into what mould they pleased; probably, these were the calves in little, like the silver shrines for Diana; the zealots for the calf-worship carried about with them, it may be, images of the gods they worshipped, made on purpose for themselves. (2.) They made them of their silver, and then doubt them in their appa-
rance. They made these molten images, proud to have Gods that they could cast into what mould they pleased; probably, these were the calves in little, like the silver shrines for Diana; the zealots for the calf-worship carried about with them, it may be, images of the gods they worshipped, made on purpose for themselves. (3.) They made them according to their own understanding, according to their own fancy; they did not let themselves what shape they should make it in, and made it accordingly; a god, according to the best of their judgement. Or, according to their own like ness, in the form of a man. And when they made their idols men like themselves, in shape, they made themselves gods, and stones like them, in reality; for they that make them, are like unto them, and so is every one that trusts in them. (4.) It was all the work of the craftsmen. Their images do not pretend, like that of Diana, to come down from Jupiter, (Acts xix. 35.) no, perhaps the workmen stamped their names upon them, such an idol was such a man's work. See ch. viii. 6. Isa. xlv. 9, &c. (9.) They are so fond of kissing their calves, therefore God will give them sensible convulsions of their folly, vi. 3. They promise themselves a great deal of safety and satisfaction in the worship of their idols, and that their prosperity will thereby be established; but God tells them that they shall be disappointed, and driven away in their wickedness. This is illustrated by four similitudes; They shall be, (1.) As the morning cloud, which promises showers of rain to the parched ground. (2.) As the early dew, which seems to be an earnest of such showers; but both pass away, and the day proves as dry and hot as ever; so fleet and transitory their profession of pietas was, (ch. vi. 4.) and so had they disappointed God's expectation from them; and therefore it is just that so their prosperity should be, and so their expectations from their idols should be disappointed, and so will their bellies hunger for an idol of this world. (3.) They are like the chaff, light and worthless; and they shall be driven as the chaff is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor, Ps. i. 4.—xxxv. 5. Job xxii. 18. Nay, (4.) They are as the smoke, noisome and offensive; (see Isa. lxv. 5.) and they shall be driven away as the smoke out of the chimney, that is soon dissipat'd and disappears, Ps. lxxviii. 2. Note, No solid, lasting comfort is to be expected any where but from God.

3. I did know thee in the wilderness, in the land of great drought. 4. According to their pasture, so were they filled; they were filled, and their heart was exalted; therefore have they forgotten me. 7. Therefore I will be unto them as a lion; as a leopard by the way will I observe them. 8. I will meet them as a bear that is bereaved of her whelps, and will rend the caul of their heart, and there will I devour them like a lion; the wild beast shall tear them.

We may observe here,

1. The plentiful provision God had made for Is-
The first of these verses is the summary, or contents, of all the rest, ver. 9. Where we have, (1.) All the blots of Israel's history, from the beginning; O Israel, thy hereditats is thence; it is of and from thyself; or, "It has destroyed thee, O Israel, all that sin and folly of thine which thou art before charged with. As thy own wickedness has many a time corrected thee, so that has now at length destroyed thee." Note, Wilful sinners are self-destroyers; obstinate impenitence is the grossest self- murder. Those that are destroyed of the Lord, have their blood upon their own heads, they have destroyed themselves. 2. All the glory of Israel's relief ascribed to God; But in me is thy help. That is, (1.) It might have been; "I would have helped thee, and healed thee, but thou wouldst not be healed and helped, but wast resolutely set upon thine own destruction." This will aggravate the condemnation of sinners, not only that they did that which tended to their own ruin, but that they opposed the offers God made them, and the methods he took with them to have prevented it; I would have gathered them, and they would not. They might have been easily and effectually helped, but they put the help away from them. Nay, (2.) It may yet be; Thy case is bad, but it is not despe- rate. Those who have destroyed themselves may yet have salvation, and I will help thee." This is a planked out way after shipwreck, and greatly magnifies not only the power of God, that he can help when things are at the worst, can help those that cannot help themselves, but the riches of his grace, that he will help those that have destroyed themselves, and therefore might justly be left to perish, that he will help these that had long refused his help. Dr. Pockock gives a different reading and sense of this verse; O Is- rael, this has destroyed thee, that in me is thy help. Presuming upon God and his favour has imbold- ened thee in those wicked ways which have been thy ruin.

Now, in the rest of these verses, we may see,

1. How Israel destroyed themselves. It is said, (v. 16.) They rebelled against their God, revolted from their allegiance to him, entered into a con- federacy with his enemies, and took up arms against him; and this was the thing that ruined them, for never any hardened themselves against God, and prospered. Note, Those that rebel against their God, destroy themselves, for they make him their Enemy, for whom they are an une- quable matter.

1. They treasure up wrath against the day of wrath, and so they destroy themselves; they are doing that every day, which will be remembered against them another day; (v. 12.) The iniquity of Ephraim is bound up, and his sin is hid. 12. The sorrows of a travelling woman shall come upon him: he is an unwise son; for he should not stay long in the place of the breaking forth of children. 13. I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plague; O grave, I will be destruction: repentance shall be hid from mine eyes. 15. Though he be fruitful among his brethren, an east wind shall come, the wind of the Lord shall come up from the wilderness, and his spring shall become dry, and his fountain shall be dried up: he shall spoil the treasure of all pleasant vessels. 16. Samaria shall become desolate; for she hath rebelled against her God; they shall fall by the sword; their infants shall be dashed in pieces, and their women with child shall be ripped up.

yet, like the pains of a woman in labour, hopeful and promising, in order to deliverance; and by these, though God corrects him, yet he designs his good. He is chastened, that he may not be destroyed. But, (2.) They are not by these forwarded as they ought to be toward repentance and reformation, which would cause their sorrows to issue in true joy; He is an unwise son, for he should not stay long, as he does, in the place of the breaking forth of children; it is too soon for him to go forth to get forth, lest he be stiffened and still-born at last. Were the child which the mother is in travail of, capable of understanding its own case, we should reckon it an unwise child that would choose to stay long in the birth; for the captive exile hasteth to be loose, lest he die in the pit, Isa. li. 14. Note, These may justly be reckoned their own destroyers, who defer and put off their repentance, by which alone they might help themselves. These are in danger of miscarrying in conversion, who delay it, and will not put forth themselves to speed the work, and bring it to an issue.

3. Therefore he is destroyed, because he has done that which would be his certain ruin, and neglected that which would be his only relief. Here is a sad description of his case, who have presumed to come at 15, 16. It is here taken for granted that Ephraim's fruitfulness is fruitful among his children; his name signifies, fruitfulness. He is fruitful in respect of the plentiful products of his country, and the great numbers of its inhabitants; it was both a rich and a populous tribe, as was foretold concerning it; but sin turns this fruitful tribe into barrenness. Joseph was a fruitful bough, but for sin, was blasted. The sentence is an east wind, representing a foreign enemy that should invade it. It is called the wind of the Lord, not only because it shall be a very great and strong wind, but because it shall be sent by divine direction; it shall come from the Lord, and do whatever he appoints; and see what effect it shall have upon that flourishing tribe, what desolations war shall make. (1.) Was it a rich tribe? The foreign enemy shall make it poor enough. This wind of the Lord shall come up from the wilderness, a freezing, blasting wind, and shall dry up the springs and fountains with which this tree is watered, shall exhaust the sources of its wealth; the intruder shall waste the country, and so impoverish the husbandman; shall intercept trade and commerce, and so impoverish the merchant; and let not the rich in them either represent it to themselves, or think that they shall be exempted from the judgment; for he shall spoil the treasure of all pleasant vessels. See the folly of those that lay up their treasure on earth, that lay it up in pleasant vessels, (vessels of desire, so the word is,) on which they set their affections, and in which they place their comfort and satisfaction. This is treasure that melts away. It shall not be, that they say, This is that which either moth or rust may corrupt, or what thieves and soldiers may steal and carry away; but wise and happy they who have laid up their treasure in heaven, and in the pleasant things of that world which cannot be spoiled, which they cannot be stripped of; ever happy are they, and therefore truly rich. (2.) Did it a populous tribe, and numerous? The enemy should have demolished it, and made its men few; Samaria shall become desolate, without inhabitants. [1.] Those shall be cut off, who are the guard and joy of the present generation; the men who bear arms, shall bear them to no purpose, for they shall fall by the sword, so that there shall be none to make head against the fury of the conquerors. [2.] Those shall be cut off, who are the seed and hope of the next generation, who should rise up in the places of those who fell by the sword; the whole nation must be rooted out. But, therefore the sword shall be dashed in pieces, in two most cruel and barbarous ways, and, which is, if possible, yet more inhuman, the women with child shall be ripped up. Thus shall the glory of Samaria flee away from the birth, and from the womb, ch. ix. 11.—x. 14. See instances of this cruelty, 2 Kings viii. 12.—xxv. 16. Amos i. 13. 11. Let us now see how God was the Heft of this self-destroying people, God, who had only Help, v. 10. Note, Though they had refused to be his subjects, and had rebelled against him, yet he would still be their King, and would not abandon them. The business and care of a good king is, to keep his people, not only from being ruined by foreign enemies, but from ruining themselves and one another. Thus will God yet be Israel's King, as he the husband of old. Note. Our case would be sad indeed, if God were not better to us than we are to ourselves.

1. God will be their King, when they have no other king; he will protect and save them, when those are cut off and gone, who should have been their protectors and saviours; I will be He, (so v. 10. may be read,) He that shall help thee. There is the king that may save thee in all thy cities; and before thee fight thy battles, when thy cities are invaded by a foreign power, and suppress the more dangerous quarrels of thy citizens among themselves? Where are thy judges, who administering public justice should preserve the peace? (For they are righteous and peace, that kiss each other.) Where are thy judges that thou hadst such a desire of, and such a dependence on, of whom thou saidst, Give me a king and princes? This refers to the foolish, wicked desire, (1.) Which the whole nation had of a kingly government, being weary of the theocracy, or divine government, which they had been under during the time of the Judges, because it looked too mean for them; they rejected Samuel, and in him the Lord, when they said, Give us a king like the nations, whereas the Lord was their King. (2.) To the desire which the ten tribes had of a kingly government different from that of the house of David, because they thought that was too absolute, and bore too hard upon them, and they hoped to mend themselves by setting up Jeroboam. Both these are instances, [1.] Of men's improvidence for themselves; when they are uneasy with their present lot, they turn and cry out, What will the king do for us? Conume them who think that they are relieved by a change; but they are commonly disappointed, and do not find that advantage in the alteration, which they promised themselves. [2.] Of men's impolicy toward God, in thinking to refine upon his appointments, and amend them. God gave Israel judges and prophets for their conduct; but they were weary of them, and cried, Give us a king and princes. God gave them the house of Saul, and established it by a covenant of royalty; but they were soon weary of that too, and cried, We have no part in David. Those destroy themselves, who are not pleased with what God does for them, but think they can do better for themselves. Well, in both these requests, Providence humoured them; gave them Saul first, and afterward Jeroboam. God gave them the house of Saul, and given in anger, (given in thunder, 1 Sam. xii. 18, 19.) and soon after was taken away in wrath, upon mount Gilboa. The kingly government of the ten tribes was given in anger, not only against Solomon for his defection, but against the ten tribes that desired it, for their discontent and disaffection to the house of David; and God was now about to judge that way away in wrath, by the power of the king of Assyria. And then, where is thy king? He is gone, and thou shalt abide many days without a king. and without a prince, (ch. iii. 4.) shall have none to save thee, none to rule thee. Note, First, God often gives in anger; and he sinfully de­serves it; this is sometimes, by a curse, and with it gives us up to our own hearts’ lusts. Thus he gave Israel quails. Secondly, What we inordinately desire we are commonly disappointed in, and it cannot save us, as we expected it should. Thirdly, What God gives in anger, he takes away in wrath; what he gives because we did not desire it well, he takes away because we did not use it well. It is the happiness of the saints, that, whether God gives or takes, it is all in love, and furnishes them with matter for praise. To the pure all things are pure. It is the misery of the wicked, that whether God gives or takes, it is all in wrath; to them nothing is pure, nothing is comfortable.

2. God will do this for them, which no other king could do if they had one; (v. 14.) I will ransom them from the flower of the grave. Though Israel, according to the flesh, be abandoned to destruction, God has mercy in store for his spiritual Israel, in whom all the promises were to have their accomplishment, and this among the rest, for to them the apostle applies it, (1 Cor. xv. 53.) and particularly to the blessed resurrection of the dead. It is Christ who is exalting their spiritual resurrection from the death of sin, to a holy, heavenly, spiritual, and divine life. It is promised, (1.) That the captives shall be delivered, shall be ransomed from the power of the grave. Their deliverance shall be by ransom; and we know it was that paid their ransom, and what the ransom was, for it was the Son of man, that gave himself a ransom for many, (Mark xvi. 28.) It is he that thus redeemed them. Those who, upon their repenting and believing, are, for the sake of Christ’s righteousness, acquitted from the guilt of sin, and saved from death and hell, which are the wages of sin, are those ransomed of the Lord, that shall, in the great day, be brought out of the grave in triumph, and it shall be as impossible for the bands of death to hold them as it was to hold their Master. (2.) That the conqueror shall be destroyed; O death, I will be thy plague. Jesus Christ was the Plague and Destruction of death and the grave, when by death he destroyed him that had the power of death, and when in his own resurrection he triumphed over the grave; but the complete destruction of them will be in the resurrection of the body, when there shall be no more death, nor destruction, no more curse. God shall for ever be swallowed up in victory, and it is the last enemy that shall be destroyed. But the word which we translate, I will, may as well be rendered, Utinunnu—Where now are thy plagues? And so the apostle took it; “O death, where is thy plague, or singing, with which thou hast so long possessed the world? O grave, where is thy victory, or thy destruction, wherewith thou hast destroyed mankind?” Christ has abolished death, has broken the power of it, and altered the property of it, and so enabled us to triumph over it. This promise he has made, and it shall be made good to all that are his; for repentance shall be hid from his eyes, he will never recall this sentence passed on death and the grave, for he is not a man that he should repent. Thanks be to God therefore who gives us the victory.

CHAP. XIV.

The strain of this chapter differs from that of the foregoing chapters. Those were generally made up of reproofs for sin, and threatenings of wrath; this is made up of promises of love and clemency, and promises of mercy, and with these the prophet closes; for all the foregoing convictions and terrors he had spoken, were designed to prepare and make way for these; he wounds, that he may heal; the Spirit convinces, that he may comfort. This chapter is a lesson for penitents; and some such there were in Israel at this day, bad as things were. We have here, I. Directions in repenting, what to do, and what to say, v. 1. 3. II. Encouragement to repent, taken from God’s readiness to receive returning sinners, (v. 4, 8.) and the comforts he had treasured up for them to our serious thoughts, v. 9.

1. O ISRAEL, return unto the Lord thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity. 2. Take with you words, and turn to the Lord; say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously; so will we render the calves of our lips. 3. Asshur shall not save us; we will not ride upon horses; neither will we say any more to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods: for in thee the fatherless findeth mercy. Here we have,

I. A kind invitation given to sinners to repent, v. 1. It is directed to Israel, God’s professing people; they are called to return. Note, Conversion must be preached even to those that are within the pale of the church, and it is a help to our faith in Christ. It is a coldness in God, and therefore art bound to thy God in duty, gratitude, and interest; thy revolt from him is so much the more heinous, and thy return to him so much the more necessary.” Let Israel see, 1. What work he has made for repentance; “Thou hast fallen by thine iniquity.” Thou hast stumbled; so some read it. Their idols were their stumbling­blocks. “Thou art fallen from God into sin, far off from all good, fallen down under the load of guilt and curse.” Note, Sin is a fall; and it concerns those that are fallen by sin, to get up again by repentance. 2. What work he has to do in his repentance; “Return to the Lord thy God; return to him as the Lord whom thou hast a dependence upon, as thy God, thine in covenant, whom thou hast an interest in.” Note, It is the great concern of those that have revolted from God, to return to God, and so to do their first works; Return to him from whom thou hast fallen, and who alone is able to raise thee up. Return even to the Lord; or quite home to the Lord; do not only look to him, or take some steps toward him, but make thorough work of it. The ancient Jews had a saying, grounded on this, Return, and as a spring growing, for it brings men quite up to the throne of glory.

II. Necessary instructions given them how to repent. 1. They must bethink themselves what to say to God, when they come to him; Take with you words. They are required to bring, not sacrifices and offerings, but penitent prayers and supplications, the fruit of thy lips; yet not of the lips only, but of the heart, else words are but wind. One of the rabbins says, They must be such words as proceed from what is spoken first in the inner man; the heart must dictate to the tongue. We must take good words with us, by taking good thoughts and good affections with us. Verba praecvisam rem non urita sequuntur—Those who master a subject, are seldom at a loss for language. Note, Words are the ministers of the heart, but God should be consulted; not to say what we will, but what would please God, we should consider what we have to say to him; for if we come without an errand, we are likely to go without answer, (Ezra ix. 10.) What shall we say? We must take with us words from the scripture, take them from the Spirit of grace and supplication, who teaches us to cry, Abba, Father, and makes intercession in us. 2. They must bethink themselves what words to take with them; they must not only take with them words, but must turn to the Lord; inwardly in their hearts, outwardly in their lives.

Now, for their assistance herein, and encourage.
HOSEA, XIV.

1. The be is another, When this trust no Poor Nor mercy God It God's cere, li/is. sacrifice, sacrifice, for vows be prayers mised, it of to will with pray. direct ment, They directed and are, that see their cress, against, them so Faith thanksgiving; for, that sin, this we, and this He, are the temple, and the walls of our city are broken down, and our sanctuary is desolate.

1. Petitioning words. Two things we are here directed to petition for. [1.] To be acquitted from guilt. When we return to the Lord, we must say to Him, as the prophet Hosea has done, "Thou wilt hear my prayer, O Lord, and will not seja my sins." When God pardons sin, he pardons all that great debt; and when we pray against sin, we must pray against it all; and not except any. [2.] To be accepted as righteous in his sight, "Receive us graciously; let us have thy favour and love, and have thou respect to us and to our performances." Receive our prayer graciously; be well pleased with that good which by thy grace we are enabled to do. Take good, so the word is; Take it to bestow upon us, so the margin reads it; Give good. This follows upon the petition for the taking away of iniquity; for till iniquity is taken away, we have no reason to expect any good of God; but the taking away of iniquity makes way for the conferring of good, removing prohibitions by taking that out of the way which hindered. Give good. They do not say what good, but refer themselves to God; it is not good of the world's showing, (Ps. iv. 6.) but good of God's giving. "Give good, that good which we have forfeited, and which thou hast pro nounced our trespass against us, may be restored to us," Note, God's gracious acceptance, and the blessed fruits and tokens of that acceptance, are to be earnestly desired and prayed for by us, in our returning to God. "Give good, that good which will make us good, and keep us from returning to iniquity again."

2. Promising words. These also are put into their mouths, not to move God, or to oblige him to show them mercy, but to move themselves, and oblige themselves to return of duty. Note, Our prayers for pardon and acceptance with God should be always accompanied with sincere purposes and vows of new obedience. Two things they are to promise and vow. [1.] Thanksgiving; Pardon our sins, and accept of us, so will we render the calves of our lips. The fruit of our lips, and the fruits of our lips for burnt-offerings, and so it agrees with the Hebrew. The Apostle quotes this phrase, (Heb. xiii. 15.) and by the fruit of our life understands the sacrifice of praise to God, giving thanks to his name. Note, Praise and thanksgiving are our spiritual sacrifice, and if they come from an upright heart, shall please the Lord better than an ox or bullock, (Ps. lix. 3.) And the fruits of our lips, and the calves of our lips, are the tokens of our acceptance with God will enhance our hearts in praise and thankfulness. Those that are received graciously, may and must render the calves of their lips. Poor returns for rich receivings, yet, if sincere, more acceptable than the calves of the stall.

2. Amendment of life. They are taught to promise, not only verbal acknowledgments, but a real reformation. And we are taught here, First in our return to God to covenant against sin. We cannot or we should not God should take it away by giving it, if we do not just it away by forsaking it. Secondly, To be particular in our covenants and resolutions against sins, as we ought to be in our confessions; because deceit lies in generals. Thirdly, To covenant especially and expressly against those sins which we have been most subject to, which have most easily beset us, and which we have been most frequently overcome by. We must keep covenant in God, in him there is mercy for such, ourselves against, our own iniquity, Ps. xlviii. 28. The sin they here covenant against, owning thereby that they had been guilty of it, is, giving that glory to another, which is due to God only; this they promise they will never do, 1. By putting that confidence in creatures, which should be put in God only. They will not trust to their alliances abroad: Astar, Assyria, shall not save us. "We will not court the help of the Assyrians when we are in distress, as we have done; (ch. v. 13.—vii. 11.—viii. 9.) we will not contract for it, nor will we confide in it, or depend upon it. Having a God to go to, a God all-sufficient to trust in, we scorn to be beholden to the Assyrians for help." They will not trust to their warlike preparations at home, especially not to the broken and the stumbling-block of Israel. They will not use the" We will not ride upon horses; we will not make court to Egypt." (For thence they fetched their horses, Deut. xvii. 16. Isa. xxx. 16.—xxxii. 3.) "When our enemies invade us, we will depend upon our God to succour our infantry, and will be in no case to remount our cavalry." Or, "We will not trust on horseback, for haste, from one creature to another; to seek relief, but will take the nearer way, and the easier way, to multiply; "We will not ride upon horses; we will not make court to Egypt." (For thence they fetched their horses, Deut. xvii. 16. Isa. xxx. 16.—xxxii. 3.) "When our enemies invade us, we will depend upon our God to succour our infantry, and will be in no case to remount our cavalry." Or, "We will not trust on horseback, for haste, from one creature to another; to seek relief, but will take the nearer way, and the easier way, to multiply; "We will not ride upon horses; we will not make court to Egypt." (For thence they fetched their horses, Deut. xvii. 16. Isa. xxx. 16.—xxxii. 3.) "When our enemies invade us, we will depend upon our God to succour our infantry, and will be in no case to remount our cavalry."

3. Pleading words are here put into their mouths; For in thee the fatherless findeth mercy. We must take our encouragement in prayer, not from any merit God finds in us, but purely from the mercy we hope to find in God. This contains in itself a great truth, that God takes special care of fatherless children, Ps. lxviii. 4, 5. So he did in his law, Exod. xxiii. 22. "So he does in his providence, Ps. xxxvii. 16. It is God's prerogative to provide for the wants of the widows and orphans, for they are proper objects of mercy; in him they find it, there it is laid up for them, and there they must seek it; seek and ye shall find. It comes in here as a good plea for mercy and grace, and an encouragement one to their faith. [1.] They plead the distress of their state and condition; We are fatherless orphans, destitute of help. Those may expect to find help in God, that say there forlorn, and are helpless in themselves, and are willing to acknowledge it. This is a good step toward comfort. If we have not yet boldness to call God Father, yet we look upon ourselves as fatherless without him, and therefore lay ourselves at his feet, to be looked upon by him with compassion. [2.] They plead God's wonted loving-kindness to such as were in that condition: With thee the fatherless not only may find, but does find, and shall find, mercy. It is a great encouragement to our faith and hope, in returning to God, that it is his glory to father the fatherless, and help the helpless.

4. I will heal their backslidings, I will love them freely for mine anger is turned away from him. 5. I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily, and cast forth his roots as Lebanon. 6. His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive-tree, and his smell as Lebanon.

7. They that dwell under his shadow shall return; they shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine: the scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon.

We have here an answer of peace to the prayers of returning Israel; they seek God's face, and they shall not seek in vain; God will be sure to meet them in a way of mercy, who return to him in a way of prayer. We break an arm of mercy when we break a leg of prayer; God will speak to us in good promises; as he answered the angel with good words, and comfortable words, Zech. i. 13. If we take with us the foregoing words, in our coming to God, we may take home with us these following words for our faith to feast upon; and see how these answer those.

I. Do they dread and depreciate God's displeasure, as a just punishment for their sins? He assures them that, upon their submission, his anger is turned away from them. This is laid as the ground of all the other favours here promised. I will do so and so, for mine anger is turned away, and thereby a door is opened for all good to flow to them, Isa. xii. 1. Note, Though God is justly and greatly angry with sinners, yet he is not implacable in his anger; it may be turned away, it shall be turned away, from those that turn away from their iniquity. God will be reconciled to those that are reconciled to him and to his whole will.

II. Do they pray for the taking away of iniquity? He assures them that he will heal their backslidings; so he promised, Jer. iii. 22. Note, Though backslidings from God are the dangerous diseases and wounds of the soul, yet they are not incurable, for God has graciously promised, that if backsliding sinners will apply themselves to him as their Physician, and comply with his methods, he will heal their backslidings. He will heal the guilt of their backslidings by pardoning mercy, and their bent to backslide by renewing grace. Their iniquity shall not be their ruin.

III. Do they pray that God will receive them graciously? In answer to that, behold, it is promised, I will love them freely. God had hated them while they went on in sin; (eb. ix. 13.) but now that they return and repent, he loves them; not only ceases to be angry with them, but takes complacency in them, and designs their good. He loves them freely with an absolute, entire love, so sincere; so sincere, that it is not to be extinguished even in their poorest times. He will be open-handed in his love to them, and will think nothing too much to bestow upon them, or to do for them. Or, with a cheerful, willing love; he will love them without reluctancy or penitence. He will not say in the day of thy repentance, How long? nor so, after the apostasy, How shall thy grace be given thee up? Or, with an unmerited, preventing love. Whom God loves he loves freely, not because they deserve it, but of his own good pleasure. He loves because he will love, Dent. vii. 7, 8.

IV. Do they pray that God will give good, will make them good? In answer to that, behold, it is promised, I will be as the dew unto Israel, v. 5. Observe, 1. What shall be the favour God will bestow upon them. It is the blessing of their father Jacob, God give thee the dew of heaven, Gen. xxvii. 28. Nay, what they need God will not only give them, but he will give it in a manner that will be to them, not all that which they need; I will be as the dew unto Israel. This speaks spiritual blessings in heavenly things; and it follows upon the healing of their backslidings; for pardoning mercy is always accompanied with renewing grace. Note, To Israelites indeed God himself will be as the dew. He will instruct them, his doctrine shall drop upon them as the dew, Dent. xxvii. 12. They shall know more and more of him for he will come to them as the rain, Hos. vi. 3. He will refresh them with his comforts, so that their souls shall be as a watered garden, Isa. lviii. 11. He will be to true penitents as the dew to Israel, when they were in the wilderness, dew that had manna in it, Exod. xvi. 14. Numb. xi. 9. The graces of the Spirit are the hidden manna, hidden in the dew; God will give them bread from heaven, as he did to Israel in the dew, in abundance, John i. 16.

2. What shall be the fruit of that favour which shall be produced in them? the grace thus freely bestowed on them shall not be in vain. Those souls, those Israelites, to whom God is as the dew, on whom his grace disdils.

3. The dew grows growing. The bad being by the grace of God made good, shall by the same grace be made better; for grace, wherever it is, is growing. [1.] They shall grow upward, and be more flourishing, shall grow as the lily; or, as some read it, shall blossom as the rose. The growth of the lily, as that of all bulbous roots, is very quick and speedy; the root of the lily seems lost in the ground all winter, but, when it is refreshed with the dews of the spring, it starts up in a little time; so the grace of God improves young converts sometimes very fast. The lily, when it is come to its height, is a lovely flower; (Matth. vi. 29.) so grace is the comeliness of the soul, Ezek. xvi. 14. It is the beauty of holiness that is produced by the dew of the morning, Ps. cx. 3. [2.] They shall grow away from sin; they must be separated from the world, Rom. vi. 14, and not only so, but may be said to go, to be plucked up, and therefore it is here promised to Israel, that with the flower of the lily he shall have the root of the cedar; he shall cast forth his roots as Lebanon; as the trees of Lebanon, which, having taken deep root, cannot be plucked up, Amos ix. 15. Note, Spiritual growth consists most in the growth of the root, which is out of sight. But the more we depend upon Christ, and draw sap and virtue from him, the more we act in religion from a principle; and the more steadfast and resolved we are in it, the more we cast forth our roots. [3.] They shall grow round about; (v. 6.) His branches shall spread on all sides. And (v. 7.) he shall grow as the vine, whose branches extend furthest, not only in every time and season, but as far as God will, Gen. xlix. 22. When many are added to the church from without, when a hopeful generation rises up, then Israel's branches spread. When particular believers abound in good works, and increase in the knowledge of God, and in every good gift, then their branches may be said to spread. The inward man is renewed day by day. III. The growth is easy, it is freely, bountifully, and plentifully, and it is accompanied with muscles, growth. [1.] It is accompanied with fragrance, The smell thereof is as a field of Lebanon. It is as that field of Lebanon where there is great fragrance, and makes those that have it truly amiable. They are here compared to such trees as are pleasant, [1.] To the sight; his beauty shall be as the olive-tree, HOSEA, XIV.

1. Concerning Ephraim; he is spoken of, and spoken to, v. 8.

1. Here is his repentance and reformation; Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols? As some read it, God here reasons and argues with him, why he should renounce idolatry; “O Ephraim, what to me and idols? What concord or agreement can there be between me and idols? What communion between light and darkness, between Christ and Belial? (2 Cor. vi. 14, 15.) Therefore they must break off from them, and walk with him, who will then come into covenant with me.” As we read it, God promised to bring Ephraim and keep him to this, Ephraim shall say, God will put it into his heart to say it, What have I to do any more with idols? He had promised (v. 3.) not to say any more to the works of his hands, Ye are my gods. But God’s promises to us are much more our security and our strength for the mortifying of sin, than our promises to God; and therefore God himself is here Surety for his servant to good, will put it into his heart, and into his mouth. And whatever good we say or do at any time, it is he that works it in us. Ephraim had solely engaged not to call his idols his gods; but God here engages further for him, that he shall resolve to have no more to do with false gods; because he disliketh them; and that with the utmost detestation; for it is necessary not only that in our lives we be turned from sin, but that in our hearts we be turned against sin. See here, (1.) The power of divine grace; Ephraim had been joined to idols, (ch. iv. 17.) was so fond of them, that one would have thought he could never have fallen out with them; and yet God will work upon him, and make such a change in him, that he shall loathe them as much as ever he loved them. (2.) See the benefit of sanctified affections. Ephraim had smar ted for his idolatry, it had brought one judgment after another upon him, and this at length is the fruit, even the taking away of his sin, Isa. xxvii. 9. (3.) See the nature of repentance; it is a firm and fixed resolution to have no more to do with sin; this is the language of a penitent; “I am ashamed that ever I had to do with sin; but I have had enough of it, I hate it, and by the grace of God I will never have any thing to do with it again; no, not with the occasions of it.” Then shalt say to thine idol, Get thee hence, (Isa. xxx. 22.) shalt say to the tempter, Get thee behind me, Satan. 2. Here is the gracious notice God is pleased to take of it, the penitent’s heart, his tears, and observed him; I have heard, and will look upon him; so some read it. Note, The God of heaven takes cognizance of the penitent reflections and resolutions of returning sinners. He expects and desires the repentance of sinners, because he has no pleasure in their ruin. He looks upon men, (Job xxxii. 27.) hearten and hears, Jer. viii. 6. And if there be any disposition to repent, he is well pleased with it, when Ephraim becometh himself before God, he is well pleased with it, when he is a pleasant child, Jer. xxxi. 20. He meets penitents with mercy, as the father of the prodigal met his returning son. God observed Ephraim, to see whether he would bring forth fruits meet for this profession of repentance that he made, and whether he would continue in this good mind. He observed him, to do him good service, and comfort him, according to the exigencies of his case. 3. Here is the mercy God designed for him, in order to his comfort, and perseverance in his resolutions; still God will be all in all to him. Before, Israel was compared to a tree, now, God compares himself to one. He will be to his people, (1.) As the branches of a tree; “I am like a green fir-tree, and will be so to thee,” The fir-trees, in those countries, were exceeding large and thick, and a shelter against sun and rain. God will be to all true converts both a Delight and a Defence; under his
HOSEA, XIV.

3. The different use which men make of them.

1. The character of those that do profit by the truths he delivered. Who is wise and prudent? He shall understand these things, and know them; those that set themselves to understand and know these things, thereby make it appear that they are truly wise and prudent, and will thereby be made more so; and if any do not understand and know them, it is because they are foolish and unwise. Those that are wise in the doing of their duty, that are prudent in practical religion, are most likely to know and understand both the truths and providences of God, which are a mystery to others. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, Ps. xxv. 14. Who is wise? This intimates a desire that those who read and hear these things, would understand them; or that they were wise? And a complaint that few were so, Who has believed our report?

2. The excellency of the things concerning which we are here instructed; The ways of the Lord are right; and therefore it is our wisdom and duty to know and understand them. The way of God's precepts, in which he requires us to walk, is right, agreeing with the rules of eternal reason and equity, and having a direct tendency to our eternal felicity. The ways of God's providence, in which he walks towards us, are all right; no fault is to be found with any thing that God does, for it is all well done. His judgments upon the impudent, his favours to the penitent, they are all right; however they may be perverted and misinterpreted, God will at last be justified and glorified in them all; his ways are equal.

II. Concerning every one that hears and reads the words of the prophecy of this book; (v. 9.) Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? Perhaps the prophet was wont to conclude the sermons he preached with these words, and now he closes the whole book with them, in which he had committed to writing some fragments of the many sermons he had preached. Observe,

1. The character of those that do profit by the truths he delivered. Who is wise and prudent? He shall understand these things, he shall know them; those that set themselves to understand and know these things, thereby make it appear that they are truly wise and prudent, and will thereby be made more so; and if any do not understand and know them, it is because they are foolish and unwise. Those that are wise in the doing of their duty, that are prudent in practical religion, are most likely to know and understand both the truths and providences of God, which are a mystery to others. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, Ps. xxv. 14. Who is wise? This intimates a desire that those who read and hear these things, would understand them; or that they were wise? And a complaint that few were so, Who has believed our report?

protection and influence they shall both dwell in safety and dwell at ease. He will be either a Sun and a Shield, or a Shade and a Shield, according as their case requires. They shall sit down under his shadow with delight, Cant. ii. 3. He will be so all weathers, Isa. iv. 6. (2.) As the root of a tree; From me is thy fruit found. Which may be understood either of the fruit brought forth to us— to him we owe all our comforts; or of the fruit brought forth by us— from him we receive grace and strength to enable us to do our duty. Whatever fruits of righteousness we bring forth, all the praise of them is owing to God; for he works in us both to will and to do that which is good.

The way of God's precepts, in which he requires us to walk, is right, agreeing with the rules of eternal reason and equity, and having a direct tendency to our eternal felicity. The ways of God's providence, in which he walks towards us, are all right; no fault is to be found with any thing that God does, for it is all well done. AN

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET

JOEL.

We are altogether uncertain concerning the time when this prophet prophesied; it is probable that it was about the same time that Amos prophesied, not for the reason that the rabbins give, because Amos begins his prophecy with that wherewith Joel concludes his; The Lord shall roar out of Zion, but for the reason Dr. Lightfoot gives, because he speaks of the same judgments of locusts, and drought, and fire, that Amos laments, which is an intimation that they appeared about the same time, Amos in Israel, and Joel in Judah. Hosea and Obadiah prophesied about the same time; and it appears that Amos prophesied in the days of Jeroboam, the second king of Israel, Amos vii. 10. God sent a variety of prophets, that they might strengthen the hands one of another, and that out of the mouth of two or three witnesses every word might be established. In this prophecy,

I. The desolation made by hosts of noxious insects is described, ch. i. and part of ch. ii.

II. The people are hereupon called to repentance, ch. ii.

III. Promises are made of the return of mercy upon their repentance, (ch. ii.) and promises of the pouring out of the Spirit in the latter days.

IV. The cause of God's people is pleaded against their enemies, whom God would in due time reckon with; (ch. iii.) and glorious things are spoken of the gospel-Jerusalem, and of the prosperity and perpetuity of it.

JOEL, I.

CHAP. I.

This chapter is the description of a lamentable devastation made of the country of Judah by locusts and caterpillars; some think that the prophet speaks of it as a thing to come, and gives warning of it beforehand, as usually the prophets did of judgments coming. Others think that it was now present, and that his business is to affect the people with it, and awaken them by it to repentance. I. It is spoken of as a judgment which there was no precedent of in former ages, v. 1. 7. II. All sorts of people sharing in the calamity are called upon to lament it, v. 8. 13. III. They are directed to look up to God in their lamentations, and to humble themselves before him, v. 14. 20.

1. THE word of the Lord that came to Joel, the son of Pethuel. 2. Hear this, ye old men, and give ear, all ye inhabitants of the land. Hath this been in your days, or even in the days of your fathers? 3. Tell ye your children of it, and let your children tell their children, and their children another generation; 4. That which the palmer-worm hath left, hath the locust eaten; and that which the locust hath left, hath the canker-worm eaten; and that which the canker-worm hath left, hath the caterpillar eaten.

5. Awake, ye drunkards and weep; and howl, all ye drinkers of wine, because of the new wine; for it is cut off from your mouth.

6. For a nation is come up upon my land, strong, and without number, whose teeth are the teeth of a lion, and he hath the cheek-teeth of a great lion.

7. He hath laid my vine waste, and barked my fig-tree; he hath made it clean bare, and cast it away; the branches thereof are made white.

It is a foolish fancy which some of the Jews have, that this Joel the prophet was the same with that Joel who was the son of Samuel; (1 Sam. viii. 2;) yet one of their rabbins very gravely undertakes to show why Samuel is here called Pethuel. This Joel was long after that. He here speaks of a sad and sore judgment which was now brought, or to be brought, upon Judah, for their sins. Observe, 1. The greatness of the judgment, expressed here in two things. {1.} It was such as could not be paralleled in the ages that were past; in history, or in the memory of any living. v. 2. The plagues here are appealed to, who could remember what had happened long ago; nay, and all the inhabitants of the land are called on to testify, if they could any of them remember the like. Let them go further than any man's memory, and prepare themselves for the search of their fathers, (Job viii. 8,) and they would find an account of the like. Remember this, that out of those predecessors of yours, you may justly expect to fall under greater and sorer judgments than any of their predecessors knew. {2.} It was such as would not be forgotten in the ages to come; (v. 3.) "Tell ye your children of it, let them know what dismal tokens of the wrath of God you have been under, that they may take warning, and may learn obedience by the things which you, who have suffered for, is designed for warning them also. Yea, let your children tell their children, and their children another generation; let them tell it not only as a strange thing, which may serve for matter of talk," (as such uncommon accidents are recorded in our almanacks—It is so long since the plague, and fire—so long since the great frost, and the great wind,—that a man cannot stand in awe of God and of his judgments, and to tremble before him." Note, We ought to transmit to posterity the memorial of God's judgments as well as of his mercies.

2. The judgment itself; it is an invasion of the country of Judah by a great army. Many interpreters both ancient and modern understand it of armies of locusts and other insects, which, after the Assyrians, took all the defenced cities of Judah, and then, no doubt, made havoc of the country, and destroyed the products of it; nay, some make the four sorts of animals here named, (v. 4.) to signify the four monarchies, which, in their turns, were oppressive to the people of the Jews, one destroying what had escaped the fury of the other. Many of the insects of this sort are destructive to the crops, the expression of the coming of enemies, and their multitude, to lay all waste. So the Chaldee Paraphrast mentions these animals here; (v. 4.) but afterward, (ch. ii. 25.) puts instead of them, Nations, peoples, tongues, languages, potentates, and revenging kingdoms. But it seems much rather to be understood literally of armies of insects coming upon the land, and eating up the fruits of it. Locusts are one of the plagues of Egypt; of them it is said, There never were any like them, nor should be, Exod. x. 14. None such as those in Egypt, none such as these in Judah; none like these locusts for bigness, none like these for multitude, and the mischief they did; that lasted but for a few days, this here seems to have continued for four years successively, as some think. The best part of the country by a foreign enemy invading it, because if the people were not humbled and reformed by that lesser judgment which devoured the land, God would send this greater upon them, which would devour the inhabitants; and by the description of that they are bid to take it for a warning. If this nation of worms does not reduce them, another nation shall come to ruin them.

Observe, (1.) What these animals are, that are sent against them—locusts and caterpillars, falmer-worms and canker-worms, v. 4. We cannot now describe how these differed one from another; they were all little insects, any of them destructive and which a man might be afraid to come near; with his foot or with his finger; but when they came in vast swarms, or shoals, they were very formidable, and ate up all before them. Note, God is Lord of hosts, has all creatures at his command, and, when he pleases, can humble and mortify a proud and rebellious people by the weakest and most contemptible creatures. Many things appear to be small, but they are greater than is at first sight, for, where God pleases, worms are too hard for him, plander his country, eat up that for which he laboured, destroy the forage, and cut off the subsistence of a potent nation. The weaker the instrument is that God employs, the more is his power magnified. (2.) What force and fury they came with. They are here called a nation, (v. 5.) because they are embodied, and act by consent, and as it were with a common design; for though the locusts have no king, yet go they forth all of them by bands; (Prov. xxx. 27,) and it is there mentioned as an instance of their wisdom. It is prudence for those that are weak severally, to unite and act jointly. They are strong, for they are without number. The small dust of the earth is not contemptible to God, but a heap of dust is weighty; so a worm can do little, (yet one worm served to wither Jonah's gourd,) but numbers of them can do wonders. They are said to have the teeth of a lion, of a great lion, because of the great and terrible execution they do. Note, Locusts become as lions, when they come armed with a divine commission. We read of the locusts out of the bottomless pit, Rev. xix. 17, that these were as the teeth of lions, Rev. ix. 8. (3.) What mischief they do. They eat up all before them; (v. 4.) what one leaves, the other devours; they destroy not only the grass and corn, but the trees; (v. 7.) The vine is laid waste. These vermin eat the leaves which should be a shelter to the fruit while it ripens, and so that also perishes, and comes to nothing. They eat the very bark of the fig-tree, and will kill it. The fig-tree does not blossom, nor is there fruit in the vine.

3. A call to the drunkards to lament this judgment; (v. 5.) Awake and weep, all ye drinkers of wine. This intimates, (1.) That they should suffer very sensibly by this calamity; it should touch them in a tender part, the new wine which they loved so well, should be cut off from among them. Note, It is just with God to take away those comforts which are abused to luxury and excess, to recover the corn and wine which are prepared for Baal, which are made the food and fuel of a base lust. And to them judgments of that kind are most grievous. The more men place their happiness in the gratifications of sense, the more pressing temporal afflictions are upon them. (2.) They are desired not to care when the vine was laid waste, they could live as well without it as they had done, it was no trouble to the Nazarites; but the drinkers of wine will weep and howl. The more delights we make necessary to our satisfaction, the more we expose ourselves to trouble and disappointment. (3.) It intimates that they had been very senseless and stupid people, that they might as well be crushed with God's displeasure; and therefore they are here called to awake and weep. They that will not be roused out of their security by the word of God, shall be roused by his rod; those that will not be startled by judgments at a distance, shall be themselves arrested by them; and when they are going to take of the for hidden fruit, a prohibition of another nature shall come between the cup and the lip, and cut off the wine from their mouth.

8. Lament like a virgin girded with sackcloth for the husband of her youth. 9. The meat-offering and the drink-offering is cut off from the house of the Lord: the priests, the Lord's ministers, mourn. 10. The field is wasted, the land mourneth; for the corn is dried up, the oil languiseth. 11. Be ye ashamed, O ye husbandmen; howl, O ye vine-dressers, for the wheat and for the barley; because the harvest of the field is perished. 12. The vine is dried up, and the fig-tree languiseth; the pomegranate-tree, the palm-tree also, and the apple-tree, even all the trees of the field, are withered: because joy is withered away from the sons of men. 13. Gird yourselves; and lament, ye priests; howl, ye ministers of the altar; come, lie all night in sackcloth, ye ministers of my God: for the meat-offering and the drink-offering is withholden from the house of your God.

The judgment is here described as very lamentable, and such as all sorts of people should share in; it shall not only rob the drunks of their pleasures (if that were the worst of it, it might be the better borne, but it shall deprive others of their necessary subsistence, who are therefore called to lament, (v. 8.) as a virgin laments the death of her lover, to whom she was espoused, but not completely married, yet so that he was in effect her husband; or, as a young woman lately married, from whom the husband of her youth, her young husband, or the husband to whom she was married when she was young, is suddenly taken away by death. Betwixt a new-married couple that are young, that married for love, and that are every way amiable and agreeable to each other, there is great fondness, and, consequently, great grief if either be taken away. Such lamentation shall there be for the loss of children and children's children. The former came from our creature-comforts, the latter is it to part with them. See that parallel place, Isa. xxxviii. 10.—12.

Two sorts of people are here brought in, as concerned to lament this devastation, countrymen and clergymen.

1. Let the husbandmen and vine-dressers lament, v. 11. Let them be ashamed of the care and pains they have taken about their vineyards, for it will all labour lost, and they shall gain no advantage by it; They shall see the fruit of their labour eaten up before their eyes, and shall not be able to save any of it. Note, Those who labour only for the meat that perisheth, will, sooner or later, be ashamed of their labour. The vine-dressers will then express their extreme grief by howling, when they see their vines withered, and it shall have been all in vain. The vine and the fig-tree are withered, so that nothing is to be had, or hoped for, from them, whereas they might pay their rent, and maintain their families. The destruction is particularly described here; The field is laid waste, (v. 10.) all is consumed that it produced, the land mourns, the ground has a melancholy aspect, and looks gauntly; all the inhabitants of the land are in tears for what they have lost, are in tears of grief for what they want, Isa. xxix. 4.—Jer. iv. 28. The corn, the bread-corn, which is the staff of life, is wasted; the new wine, which should be brought into the cellars for recruits, when the old is drunk, is dried up; is ashamed of having promised so fair what it is not now able to perform; the oil languishes, or is diminished, because (as the Chaldee renders it) the olives are fallen off. The people were not thankful to God as they should have been for the bread that strengthens man's heart, the wine that makes glad the heart, and the oil that makes the face to shine; (v. 4.) and thus it is brought to lament the loss and want of them, of all the products of the earth, which God had given them either for necessity or for delight. This is repeated, v. 11. 12. The wheat and barley, the two principal grains bread was then made of, wheat for the rich, and barley for the poor; so that rich and poor meet together in the calamity. The trees must toil not only the vine and the fig-tree, as before, (v. 7.) which were more useful and necessary, but other trees also that were for delight; the pomegranate, palm-tree, and apple-tree, yea all the trees of the field, as well as those of the orchard, timber-trees as well as fruit-trees. In short, all the harvest of the field is perished, v. 11. And by this means joy is withered away from the children of men; (v. 11.) the joy of harvest, which is used to express so great a general benefit; and every concert of joy, is turned into shame, is turned into lamentation. Note, The perishing of the harvest is the withering of the joy of the children of men. Those that place their happiness in the delights of sense, when they are deprived of them, or any way disturbed in the enjoyment of them, lose all their joy; whereas the children of God, who look upon the pleasures of sense with holy indifference and contempt, and know what it is to make God their heart's delight, can rejoice in him as the God of their salvation, even when the fig-tree does not blossom; spiritual joy is so far from withering then, that it flourishes more than ever, Hab. iii. 17, 18.

Let us see here, (1.) What perishing, uncertain things all our creature-comforts are, we can never be sure of the continuance of them. Here the heavens had given their rains in due season, the earth had yielded her strength, and when the appointed weeks of harvest were at hand, they saw no reason to doubt but that they should have a very plentiful crop; yet then they are invaded by these unthought-of enemies, that lay all waste, and not by fire and sword. It is our wisdom not to lay up treasures in this world, we cannot tell what may happen to so many ill accidents. (2.) See what need we have to live in a continual dependence upon God and his providence, for our own hands are not sufficient for us. When we see the full corn in the ear, and think we are sure of it; nay, when we have brought it home, if he blow upon it, nay, if he do not bless it, we are not likely to have any good of it. (3.) The vine of man's works sin makes a wilderness, a fruitful land, the most fruitful land upon earth, into barrenness, for the ingratitude of them that dwelt therein.

2. Let the priests, the Lord's ministers, lament, for they share deeply in the calamity; Gird yourselves with sackcloth; (v. 13.) nay, they do mourn, v. 5. Observe, The priests are called the ministers of the altar, they are to be the ministers of the altar, the altars are to be their work, and the sacrifices of the altar are to be the objects of their ministry. The ministers of the Lord, of my God, says the prophet; for in attending on the altar they served him, did his work, and did him honour. Note, They that are employed in holy things, are therein God's ministers, and on him they attend. The ministers of the altar used to rejoice before the Lord, and to spend their time in much mirth, to make their sacrifices to God; for the meat-offering and drink-offering were cut off from the house of the Lord; (v. 9.) and the same again, (v. 13.) from the house of your God. "He is your God in aticular manner, you are in a nearer relation to him than other Israelites are; and therefore it is expected that you should be more concerned than others for that which is a hinderance to the service of his sanctuary. It is intimated, (1.) That the people, as long as they had the fruits of the earth brought in in their season, presented to the Lord his dues out of them, and brought the offerings to the altar, and thence to them that served at the altar. Note, A people may be filling up the measure of their iniquity, and yet may keep up a course of external performances in religion. (2.) That, when the meat and drink failed, the meat-offering and drink-offering failed of course; and this was the sorest instance of the calamity. Note, As far as any public trouble is an obstruction to the course of religion, it is to be upon that account, more than any other, sadly lamented, especially by the priests, the Lord's ministers. As far as poverty occasions the decay of piety, and the neglect of divine offices, and starves the cause of religion among a people, it is indeed a sore judgment. When the famine prevailed, God could not have his sacrifices, nor could the priests have their maintenance; and therefore let the Lord's ministers mourn.

We have observed abundance of tears shed for the destruction of the fruits of the earth by the locusts; now here we have those tears turned into the right channel, that of repentance and humiliation before God; set aside all worldly business and here they are directed to own the hand of God in it, his mighty hand, and to humble themselves under it. Here is, 1. A proclamation issued out for a general fast. The priests are ordered to appoint one; they must not only mourn themselves, but they must call upon others to mourn too; Sanctify ye a fast; Let before God; set aside all worldly business and here they are directed to own the hand of God in it, his mighty hand, and to humble themselves under it. Note, Under public judgments there ought to be public humiliations; for by them the Lord God calls to weeping and mourning. With all the marks of sorrow and shame, sin must be confessed and bewailed, the righteousness of God must be acknowledged, and his favour implored. Observe what is to be done by a nation at such a time. 1. A day is to be appointed for this purpose, a day of restraint; (so the margin reads it;) a day in which people must be restrained from their other ordinary occasions, (that they may the more closely look toward God's service,) and from all bodily refreshments; for, 2. It must be a fast, a religious abstaining from meat and drink, further than is of absolute necessity. The king of Nineveh appointed a fast, in which they were to taste nothing, Jonah iii. 7. Hereby we own ourselves unworthy of our necessary food, and that we have forfeited it, and deserve to be wholly deprived of it; we punish our-
JOEL, II.

1. They saw themselves already under the tokens of his displeasure; it is time to fast and pray; for their distress was very great, v. 16. (1.) Let them look into their own houses, and there was no plenty there, as used to be. Those who kept a good table, were now obliged to make do with a meagre fare. (2.) Let them call God to witness before we depart, if we have not cut off our sins before our eyes? We see it, wherever we go, Note. Though it is common for the heart not to rue what the eye sees not, yet that heart is hard indeed, which trembles not, and humbles not itself, when God's judgments are before the eyes. If, when God's hand is lifted up, men will not see, how shall we see, if his hand is laid on, they shall see. Is not the meat many a time cut off, when joy and gladness are cut off from God's house, either by the corruption of holy things, or the persecution of holy persons, when serious godliness decays, and love waxes cold, then it is time to cry to the Lord, time to cry, Alas!

The prophet returns to the grievousness of the calamity, in several particulars of it. Corn and cattle are the husbandman's staple commodities, and are cut off, v. 17. The fertilizers which they used to fill with corn, are laid desolate, and the barns broken down, because the corn is withered, and the owners think it not worth while to be at the charge of repairing them when they have nothing to put in them, nor likely to have any; for the seed is rotten under the clouds, either through too much, or too little rain, or (which was the more common case in Canaan) for want of rain, or perhaps some insects underground eat it up. When one crop fails, the husbandman hopes the next may make it up; but here they despair of that, the seedlessness being as bad as the harvest. [2.] The cattle perish but for want of grass; (v. 18.) How do the beasts groan! This the prophet takes notice of, as this is affected, v. 19; and this is meant to suggest the heart judgment. The groans of the cattle should soften their hard and imperious hearts. The herds of cattle, the large cattle, (black cattle we call them,) they are herplexed, any, even the flocks of sheep, who will live upon a common, and take up with very short grass, even they are made desolate. See here the inferior creatures suffering for our transgressions, and groaning under the double burden of being serviceable to the sin of man, and subject to the curse of God for it; Curved in the ground for thy sake.

II. The prophet stirs them up to cry to God, with the consideration of the examples given them for it.

1. His own example; (v. 19.) O Lord, to thee will I cry. He would not put them upon doing that which he would not resolve to do himself; nor, whether they would do it or no, he would. Note, If God's ministers cannot prevail to affect others with the discoveries of divine wrath, yet they ought to be themselves affected with them; if they cannot bring others to cry to God, yet they must themselves be94

2. The examples of the inferior creatures; The beasts of the field do not groan, but they cry unto thee, v. 20. They appeal to thy pity, according to their capacity, and as if, though they are not capable of a rational and revealed religion, yet they had something of dependence upon God by natural instinct. At least, when they groan by reason of their calamity, he is pleased to interpret it as if they cried to him in the same manner, as if the construction upon the groanings of his own children, though sometimes so feeble, that they cannot be uttered, Rom. viii. 26. The beasts are here said to cry unto God, as from him the lions seek their meat, (Ps. civ. 21.) and the young ravens, Job xxxviii. 41. The complaints of the brute creatures here are for want of water. The rivers are dried up, through the excessive heat, and the want of grass; and fire has devoured the pastures of the wilderness. And what better are they than beasts, who never cry to God but for corn and wine, and complain of nothing but the want of the delights of sense? Yet their crying to God in these cases shames the stupidity of those who cry not to God in any case.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter, we have, I. A further description of that terrible desolation which should be made in the land of Judah by the locusts and caterpillars, v. 1-3. II. A serious call to the people, when they are under this sore judgment, to return and repent, to fast and pray, and to seek unto God for mercy, with directions how to do this aright, v. 12-17. III. A promise that, upon their repentance, God would remove the judgment, make the breaches, and restore unto them plenty of all good things, v. 18-20. IV. A prediction of the setting up of the kingdom of the Messiah in the world, by the pouring out of the Spirit in the latter days, v. 28-32. Thus the beginning of this chapter is made terrible with the tokens of God's wrath, but the latter end of it made comfortable with the assurances of repentance, and it is a judgment inflicted, that this blessed change is made; so that, though it is only the last paragraph of the chapter that points directly at gospel-times, yet the whole may be improved as a type and figure representing the curse of the law involving men for their sins, and the comfort of the gospel flowing in to them upon their repentance.

1. Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy moun- tain: let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: for the day of the Lord cometh for it is nigh at hand: 2. A day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains: a great people and a strong there hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years of many generations. 3. A fire devoureth before them; and behind them a flame burneth: the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness; yea, and nothing shall escape them. 4. The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses: and as horsemen, so shall they run. 5. Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap, like the noise of a flame of fire that devourereth the stubble, as a strong people set in battle array. 6. Before their face the people shall be much pained; all faces shall gather blackness. 7. They shall run like mighty men; they shall climb the wall like men of war; and they shall march every one on his ways, and they shall not break their ranks: 8. Neither shall one thrust another, they shall walk every one in his path:
and when they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded. 9. They shall run to and fro in the city; they shall run upon the wall they shall climb up upon the houses; they shall enter in at the windows like a thief. 10. The earth shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble: the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining: 11. And the Lord shall utter his voice before his army; for his camp is very great: for he is strong that executeth his word: for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible; and who can abide it?

Here we have God contending with his own professing people for their sins, and executing upon them the judgment written in the law; (Deut. xxviii.
42.) The fruit of thy land shall the locust consume, which was one of these diseases of Egypt that would bring upon them, v. 60.

1. Here is the war proclaimed; (v. 1.) Blow ye the trumpet in Zion; either to call the invading army together, and then the trumpet sounds a charge, or, rather, to give notice to Judah and Jerusalem of the approach of the judgment, that they might prepare to meet their God in the way of his judgments, and might endeavour by prayers and tears, the church’s best artillery, to put by the stroke. It was the priests’ business to sound the trumpet, (Numb. x. 8.) both as an appeal to God in the day of their distress, and a summons to the people to come together to seek his face. Note, It is the work of ministers to give warning from the word of God of the fatal consequences of sin, and to reveal his wrath from heaven against the ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. And though it is not the privigle of Zion and Jerusalem to be exempted from the judgments of God, if they provoke him, yet it is their privilege to be warned of them, that they may make their peace with him. Even in the holy mountain the alarm must be sounded, and then it sounds most dreadful, Amos iii. 2. Now, shall a trumpet be blown in the city, in the holy city, and the people not be afraid? Surely they will, Amos iii. 6. Let all the inhabitants of the land tremble; they shall be made to tremble by the judgment itself; let them therefore tremble at the alarm of it.

2. Here is a general idea given of the day of battle, which cometh, which is mighty, and there is none able to withstand: (i.) It is the day of the Lord, the day of his judgment, in which he will both manifest and magnify himself. It is a day of darkness and gloominess; (v. 2.) literally so, the swarms of locusts and caterpillars being so large and so thick as to darken the sky; (Exod. x. 15.) or, rather, figu-rationally, it will be a melancholy time, a time of grievous affliction. And it will come as the morning spread upon the mountains; the darkness of this day will come as suddenly as the morning-light, as irresistibly, will spread as far, and grow upon them as the morning-light.

3. Here is the army drawn up in array; (v. 2.)
They are a great people, and a strong. Any one that sees the vast numbers that there shall be of locusts and caterpillars, doth indeed, as the text, will say, (as we are all apt to be most affected with what is present,) “Surely, never was the like before, nor ever will be the like again.” Note, Extraordinary judgments are rare things, and seldom happen, which is an instance of God’s patience; when God had drowned the world once, he promised never to do it again. (a.) The army is here drawn up, v. 3.
Very bold and daring; They are as horses, as swift horses, that rush into the battle, and are not affrighted; (Job xxxix. 22.) and as horsesmen caron with martial fire and fury, so they shall run, v.
4. Some of the ancients have observed that the head of a locust is very like, in shape, to the head of a horse. (2.) Very loud and noisy; like the noise of chariots, of many chariots, when driven furiously over rough ground, on the tops of the mountains, v.
5. Hence is borrowed part of the description of the locusts which St. John saw rise out of the bottomless pit; (Rev. ix. 7, 9.) The shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared to the battle; and the sound of their wings were as the sound of chariots, of many horses running to the battle. Historians tell us that the noise made by the joint of locusts in those countries that are infested with them, has sometimes been heard six miles off. The noise is likewise compared to that of a roaring fire; it is like the noise of a flame that devours the stubble; which noise is the more terrible, because that which it is the indication of, is devouring. Note, When God’s judgments are abroad, they make a great noise; and it is necessary for the awakening of a secure and stupid world. (3.) They are very regular, and keep ranks, in their march; though numerous and greed of spoil, yet they are as a strong people set in battle array; (v. 5.) They shall march every one on his ways, straight forward, as if they had been trained up by the discipline of war to keep their post, and observe their right-hand man; They shall not break their ranks, nor one thrust another, v. 7.
8. Their number and swiftness shall breed no confusion. See how God can make creatures to act by rule that have no reason to act by, when he designs to serve his own purposes by them. And see how necessary it is that those who are employed in any service for God, should observe order, and keep ranks, should observe order, and keep ranks, and not stand in one another’s way. (4.) They are very swift; they run like horses, (v. 4.) run like mighty men, (v. 7.) they run to and fro in the city, and run upon the wall, v. 9. When God sends forth his command on earth, his word runs very swiftly, Ps. cxlvii. 15. Angels have wings, and so have locusts, when God makes use of them.
4. Here is the terrible execution done by this formidable army. (1.) In the country, v. 3. View the army in the front, and you will see a fire de-voiring before them, they consume all as if they breathed fire; view it in the rear, and you will see those that come behind as furious as the foremost, behind them a flame burns. When they are gone, then it will be that destruction which they had made. Look upon the fields that they have not yet invaded, and they are as the garden of Eden, pleasant to the eye, and full of good fruits, they are the pride and glory of the country; but look upon the fields that they have eaten up, and they are as a desolate wilderness. One would not think that these had ever been like the former, and yet so they were perhaps but the day before or that those should ever be made like these, and yet so they shall be perhaps by to-morrow night; yea, and no-	hing shall escape them, that can possibly be made food for them. Let none be proud of the beauty of their grounds any more than of their bodies, for God can soon change the face of both. (2.) In the city, they shall climb the wall, (v. 7.) they shall run upon the battlements; this is the uncertainty and uncer-

Theim; (v. 9.) when Egypt was plagued with locusts, they filled Pharaoh's houses, and the houses of his servants, Exod. x. 5, 6. The locusts out of the bottomless pit, Satan's emissaries, and missionaries of the man of sin, do as these locusts. God's judgments too, when they come with commission, cannot be kept out with bars and bolts; they will find, or can find, the weakness of the bonds.
5. The impressions that should hereby be made upon the people. They shall find it to no purpose to make opposition; these enemies are invulnerable, and therefore irresistible; "when they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded," v. 8. And those that cannot be hurt, cannot be stopped; and therefore before their faces the people shall be much puished, (v. 6.) as the merchants are in pain for their trading ships, when they hear they are just in the month of a squadron of the enemies. One was in pain for his field, another for his vineyard, and all faces gather blackness, which denotes the utmost consternation imaginable. Men in fear look pale, but men in despair look black; the whiteness of a sudden fright, when it is settled, turns into blackness. With "the multitude of our pride and pleasure, God can soon make the matter of our pain. The terror that the country should be in, is described (v. 10.) by figurative expressions; "The earth shall quake, and the heavens tremble; even the hearts that seemed undaunted, so firm that nothing would frighten them, as immovable as heaven or earth, shall be seized with astonishment. Or, when the inhabitants of the land are made to quake, it seems, to them as if all about them trembled too. Through the prevalence of their fear, or for want of the supports of life which they used to have, their eye shall wax dim, and their sight fail them, so that to them the sun and moon shall seem to be dark, and the stars to withdraw their shining. Note, When God pounds upon men, the lights of heaven will be small joy to them. For man, by rebelling against his Creator, has forfeited the benefit of all the creatures.
But though this here is to be understood figuratively, there is a day coming when it will be accomplished in the letter, when the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll, and the earth, and all the works that are therein, shall be burnt up. Particular judgments should awaken us to think of the great judgments that are to come."
6. We are here directed to look up to him who is the Commander in chief of this formidable army, and that is God himself, v. 11. It is his army, it is his camp; he raised it, he gives it commission; he utters his voice before it, as the general gives orders to his army what to do, and makes a speech to animate the soldiers; it is the Lord that gives the word of command to all these animals, which they exdictly observe. Some think that with this cloud of locusts God sent terrible thunder, for that is called,
"The voice of the Lord," and was another of the plagues of Egypt, and this made the heavens and the earth tremble. It is the day of the Lord, as it was called, (v. 1.) for in this war we are sure he car-dies the day; it must needs be his, for his camp is great power, his horses are tens of thousands, and when he employs to execute his word, as the minister of his justice, is sure to be made strong and far negotio—equal to what he undertakes; whom God gives commission to, he girds with strength for the executing of that commission. And this makes the greatness of the Lord very terrible to all those, who in that day are to be made the monuments of his justice; for who can abide it? None can escape the arrests of God's wrath, can make head against the force of it, or bear up under the weight of it, 1
Sam. vi. 20. Ps. lxxvi. 7. 12. Therefore also now, saith the Lord, Turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning;
13. And rend your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God: for he is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil. 14. Who knoweth if he will return and repent, and leave a blessing behind him, even a meat-offering, and a drink-offering, unto the Lord your God? 15. Blow the trumpet in Zion, san-cify a fast, call a solemn assembly; 16. Gather the people, sanctify the congregation, assemble the elders, gather the children, and those, that suck the breasts; let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet: 17. Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thy heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them: wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God?

We have here an earnest exhortation to repentance, inferred from that desolating judgment described and threatened in the foregoing verses; Therefore now turn ye to the Lord. 1. "Thus you must answer the end and intention of the judgment; for it was sent for this end, to convince you of your sins, to humble you for them, to reduce you to your right minds, and to your allegiance." God brings us into straits, that he may bring us to repentance, and so bring us to himself. 2. "Thus you may stay the progress of the judgment. Things are bad with you, but thus you may prevent their growing worse;
May, if you take this course, they will soon grow better."

Here is a gracious invitation, 11. To a personal repentance, exercised in the soul earnestly and aptly after their wives ask, Zeph. xii. 12. When the judgments of God are abroad, each person is concerned to contribute his quota to the common supplications, having contributed to the common guilt. Every one must mend one, and mourn for one, and those we should all be mended, and all found among God's mour-ners.

Observe, 1. What we are here called to; which will teach us what it is to repent; for it is the same that the Lord our God still requires of us, we having all made work for repentance. (1.) We must be truly humbled, for our sins, must be sorry we have by sin offended God, and ashamed we have by sin wronged ourselves, both wronged our judgments, and wronged our interest. There must be outward expressions of sorrow and shame, fasting, fearing, and mourning; tears for the trouble must be turned into tears for the sin that procured it. But what will the outward expressions of sorrow avail, if the inward impressions be not agreeable, and not only accompany them, but be the root and spring of them, and give rise to them? And therefore it follows, Read your heart, and not your garments; not but that, according to the custom of that age, it was proper for them to rend their garments, in token

of great grief for their sins, and a holy indignation against themselves for their folly; but, "Rest not in the doing of that, as if that were sufficient, but be more in care to accommodate your spirits, than to accommodate your dress, to a day of fasting and humiliation; may, rend not your garments at all, unless withal you rend your hearts, for the sign without the thing signified is but a jest and a mockery, and an affront to God." Rendering the heart is that which God looks for and requires, that is the broken and contrite heart which he will not despise, Ps. li. 17. When we are greatly grieved in soul for sin, so that it even cuts us to the heart to think how we have dishonoured God, and disparaged ourselves by it, when we conceive an aversion to it and our soul get clearer of the principles of it, and never to return to the practice of it, then we rend our hearts for it; and then will God rend the heavens, and come down to us with mercy. (2.) We must be thoroughly converted to our God, and come home to him when we fall out with sin. Turn ye even to me, saith the Lord, (v. 12.) and again, (v. 13.) Turn unto the Lord your God. Our fasting and mourning are worth nothing, if we do not with it turn to God as our God. When we are fully convinced that it is our duty and interest to keep in with him, and are heartily sorry we have ever turned the back upon him, and, thereupon, by a firm and fixed resolution make his glory our end, his will our rule, and his favour our felicity, then we return to the Lord, (v. 12.) and the Lord will command and invited to do, and to do it quickly.

2. What arguments are here used to persuade this people thus to turn to the Lord, and to turn to him with all their hearts. When the heart is rent for sin, and rent from it, then it is prepared to turn entirely to God, and to be devotèd entirely to him, and he will have it all or none. Now to bring our souls and wills to God.

(1.) We are sure that he is, in general, a good God, Therefore we must turn to the Lord our God, not only because he has been just and righteous in punishing us for our sins, the fear of which should drive us to him, but because he is gracious and merciful in receiving us upon our repentance, the hope of which is engendered by his love to his church and merciful, delights not in the death of sinners, but desires they may turn and live. He is slow to anger against those that offend him, but of great kindness toward those that desire to please him. These very expressions are used in God's proclamation of his name, when he caused his goodness, and with it all his glory, to pass before the people, Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7. He refers him of the evil, not that he changes his mind, but, when the sinner's mind is changed, God's way toward him is changed; the sentence is reversed, and the curse of the law is taken off. Note, That is genuine, ingenuous, and evangelical repentance, which arises from a firm belief of the mercy of God, which we have sinned against, and yet are not ashamed of it, and for a kind of kindness is at hand. The goodness of God, if it be rightly understood, instead of imposing on us to go on in sin, will be the most powerful inducement to repentance, Ps. cxxx. 4. The act of atonement brings these to God, whom the act of attainer frighteneth from him.

(2.) We have reason to hope that he will, upon our repentance, give us that good grace which by sin we have forfeited, and deprived ourselves of: (v. 14.) that he will return and repent, that he will not proceed against us as he has done, but will act in favour of us. Therefore let us repent of our sins against him, and return to him in a way of duty, because then we may hope that he will repent of his judgments against us, and return to us in a way of mercy. Now observe, [1.] The manner of the expectation is very humble and modest; Who knows if he will? Some think it is expressed thus doubtfully, to check the presumption and security of the people, and to quicken them to a holy carefulness and liveliness in their repentance, as Josh. xxiv. 19. Or, rather, it is expressed doubtfully, because it is the removal of a temporal judgment that they here promise themselves, of which we cannot be so confident as we can that, in general, God is gracious and merciful. There is no question at all to be made, but that if we truly repent of our sins, God will forgive them, and be reconciled to us; but whether he will remove this or the other affliction which we are under, may well be questioned, and yet the probability of his grace is always to be remembered. The raisins of temporal good things are often made with a peradventure; it may be, you shall be hit, Zeph. iii.

2. David's sin is pardoned, and yet the child shall die, and when David prayed for its life, he said, as here, Who can tell whether God will be gracious to me in this matter likewise? 2 Sam. xi. 22. The Nineteen repeated and reformed, upon such a consideration as this, Jonah iii. 9. [3.] The matter of the expectation is very pious; they hope God will return and repent, and leave a blessing behind him, not as if he were about to go from them, and they could be content with any blessing in lieu of his presence, but behind him; that is, 'After he has ceased his controversy with us, he will bestow a blessing upon us and will make meat-offering and a drink-offering to the Lord our God. The fruits of the earth are called a blessing, (Isa. lxv. 8.) because they depend upon God's blessing, and are necessary blessings to us. They had been deprived of these, and that which grieved them most while they were so, was, that God's altar wanted its offerings, and God's priests their maintenance; that is, which is comprehended in the meat-offering and drink-offerings in abundance brought to God's altar, which they more desired than to see the wanted abundance of meat and drink brought to their own tables. Thus when Hezekiah was in hopes that he should recover of his sickness, he asked, What is the sign that I shall go up to the house of the Lord? and to the council-board, or to the house of the Lord? Isa. xxxviii. 22. Note, The plentiful enjoyment of God's ordinances in their power and purity, is the most valuable instance of a nation's prosperity, and the greatest blessing that can be desired. If God give the blessing of the meat-offering and the drink-offering, that will bring along with it other blessings, will sanctify them, sweeten them, and secure them.

II. They are here called to a public, national repentance, to be exercised in the solemn assembly, as a national act, for the glory of God, and the excitement of one another, and that the neighbouring nations might know and observe what it was that glorified the Lord; and to repledge God's gracious returns in mercy to them, which they would be the admiring witnesses of. Let us see here, 1. How the congregation must be called together, v. 15, 16. The trumpet was blown, (v. 1.) to sound an arm of force; but now it must be blown in order to a treaty of peace; God is willing to shew mercy to his people, if he do but find them in a frame fit for it, and therefore, Call them together, sanctify a fast. By the law many annual feasts were appointed, but only one day in the year was to be observed as a fast, the day of atonement; a day to afflict the soul, and if they had kept close to God and their duty, there would have been no occasion to observe any more; but now that they had by sin brought the judgments of God upon them, they are often called to fasting. What was said, ch. 1. 14. is here repeated; "Call a solemn assembly, gather the people, press them to come together upon this errand, sanctify the congregation, appoint a time for solemn preparation beforehand, and put them in mind to prepare themselves; let not the greatest be excused, but assemble all, the judges and magistrates; let not the meanest be passed by, but gather the children, and those that suck the breasts." It is good to bring little children, as soon as they are capable of understanding any thing, to religious assemblies, that they may be trained up betimes in the way wherein they should go; but these were brought even when they were at the breast, and were kept fasting, thus by their cries for the breast the marks of their affection might be moved to repentance, of sin which God might justly visit upon their children, so that the tongue of the sucking child might cleave to the roof of his mouth, (Lam. iv. 4) and that on them God might have compassion, as he had on the infants of Nineveh, Jonah iv. 11. New-married people must not be excused; Let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet; let not them take state upon them, as usual, not put on their ornaments, or indulge themselves in mirth, but apply themselves to the duties of the public fast with as much gravity and sadness as any of their neighbours. Note, Private joys must always give way to public sorrows, both those for affliction, and those for sin.

2. How the whole day must be carried on, v. 7-9. (1.) The priests, the Lord's ministers, must preside in the congregation, and be God's mouth to the people, and theirs to God; who besides should stand in the gap to turn away the wrath of God, whose business it was to make intercession upon ordinary occasions? (2.) They must officiate between the porch and the altar there they used to attend about the sacrifices, and now must see that they have no sacrifices to offer, or next to none, there they must offer up spiritual sacrifices. There the people must see waving and wrestling, like their father Jacob, and be helped into the same devout frame. Ministers must themselves be affected with those things whereunto they desire to affect others. It was between the porch and the altar that Zechariah the son of Stare was a type of Christ, who, having saved his people, and purged their sins, must turn away the judgment threatened for, there they must wave. (3.) They must pray; words are here put into their mouths, which they might in their prayers enlarge upon. Their petition must be, Share thy people, O Lord. God's people, when they are in distress, can expect no relief against God's justice, but what comes from his mercy. They cannot, Lord, right us, but, Lord, share us. We deserve the correction, we need it, but, Lord, mitigate it. The sinner's supplication is, Share us, good Lord. Their plea must be taken from the relation where in they stand to God; "They are thy people, and thine heritage, therefore have compassion them;" but especially from the concern of their glory in their present distress, give not thine heritage to reproach, to the reproach of famine; let not the land of Canaan, that has been so long celebrated for the glory of all lands, now he made the scorn of all lands; let not the heathen rule over them, as they will easily do when thine heritage is thus impoverished, and disabled to subsist. Let not the heathen make them a heathen, and thine heritage a reproach, a byword, and a reproach to Israel. Note, The maintaining of the credit of the nation among its neighbours, is a blessing to be desired and prayed for by all that wish well to it. But that reproach of the church is especially to be dreaded and deprecated, which reflects upon God: "Let them not say among the people, Where is their God? that God who has promised to help them, whom they have boasted so much of, and put such a confidence in." If God's heritage be destroyed, the neighbours will say, "God was either weak, and could not relieve them, or unkind, and would not." God thus triumphs over the pretended deities; (Deut. xxxii. 37.) Where are now their gods in whom they trusted? And Sennacherib thus triumphs over them, Where are now the gods of Hamath and Arpad? But it must by no means be suffered, that any should say of Israel, Where is their God? For we are sure that our God is in the heavens, (Ps. cxv. 2, 3.) is in his temple, Ps. xi. 4.

18. Then will the Lord be jealous for his land, and pity his people. 19. Yea, the Lord will answer, and say unto his people, Behold, I will send you corn, and wine, and oil, and ye shall be satisfied therewith, and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen. 20. But I will remove far off from you the northern army, and will drive him into a land barren and desolate, with his face toward the east sea; and his hinder part toward the utmost sea; and his stink shall come up, and his ill savour shall come up, because he hath done great things. 21. Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will do great things. 22. Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig-tree and the vine do yield their strength. 23. Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month. 24. And the floors shall be full of wheat, and the fats shall overflow with wine and oil. 25. And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the canker-worm, and the caterpillar, and the palmer-worm, my great army, which I sent among you. 26. And ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the name of the Lord your God, that hath dealt wondrously with you: and my people shall never be ashamed. 27. And ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel, and that I am the Lord your God, and none else: and my people shall never be ashamed.

See how ready God is to succour and relieve his people, how he waits to be gracious; as soon as ever they humble themselves under his hand, and pray, and seek his face, he immediately meets them with his favours; they prayed that God would share them, and see here with what good words and comfortable words he answered them; for God's promises are real answers to the prayers of faith, be cause with him saying and doing are not two things. Now observe,

1. Whence this mercy promised shall take rise; (v. 18.) God will be jealous for his land, and pity his people. He will have an eye, 1. To his own honour, and the, reputation of his covenant with Israel, by which he had conveyed to them that good land, and had given in the value of it very high; now he will not suffer it to be despised or disparaged, but will be jealous for them, and punish the inhabitants of it, who had been praised as a happy people, and therefore must not lie open to reproach as a miserable people. 2. To their distress; He will pity his people, and, in pity to them, he will restore them their forfeited comforts. God's compassion is a great encouragement to those that come humbly to him as penitents and as petitioners.

1. The destroying army shall be dispersed and defeated; (v. 26.) 'I will remove far off from you the northern army, that army of locusts and caterpillars, that invaded you from the north; brought in upon the wings of a north wind, an army which you could put no stop to the progress of; but when you have made your peace with God, he will cause you of these soldiers that are quartered upon you, and will drive them into a land barren and desolate, into that vast howling wilderness that Israel wandered in, where, after having surfeited upon the plenty of Canaan, they shall perish for want of sustenance; those that have their face to the east sea, (the Dead sea,) which lay east of Judea, shall perish in that, and the rear of the army shall be lost in the great sea, that receives it, and the sea spreadeth abroad upon the land barren and desolate, and now God will cast them into a land barren and desolate. Thus those whom God employes for the correction of his people, come afterward to be themselves reckoned with; and the rod thrown into the fire. Nothing shall remain of these swarms of insects, but the ill savour of them. When Egypt was ease of the plague of locusts, they were carried away to the Red sea, Exod. x. 19. Note, When an affliction has done its work, it shall be removed in mercy, as the locusts of Canaan were from a pestilent people, not as the locusts of Egypt were removed, in wrath, from an iniminent prince, only to make room for another plague. Many interpreters, by this northern army, understand that of Scamacherib, which was dispersed, when God by it had accomplished his whole work upon mount Zion, and upon Jerusalem, Isa. x. 12. This enemy shall be driven away, because he has done great things, has done a great deal of mischief, and has magnified to do it, has done it in the pride of his heart; therefore it follows, (v. 21.) The Lord will do great things for his people, as the enemy has done great things against them; and not only do good for them, but do good to them. He is a great, and proud, he is, and will be above them; that great things soever they did, they did no more than God commissioned them to do; and as when he said to them, Go, they went, so when he said to them, Come, they came, to show that they were soldiers under him.

2. The destroyed land shall be watered and made fruitful. When the army is scattered, yet what shall we do if the desolation they have made continue? It is therefore promised (v. 22.) that the pastures of the wilderness, the pastures which the locusts had left bare as the wilderness, shall again spring, and the trees shall again bear their fruit, particularly the fig-tree and the vine. But when we consider the violence and multitude of them of which they did so well, Can. i. 35. Can these dry bones live? If the Lord should make windows in heaven, it cannot be; but it shall be, for (v. 23.) The Lord has given; and will give you the former rain and the latter rain, and if he give them in mercy, he will give them moderately, so that the rain shall not turn into a judgment, and he will give them in due season; the latter rain in the first month, when it was wanted and expected. It would make it comfortable to them, to see it coming from the hand of God, and ordered by his wisdom, for then we are sure it is well ordered. He has given you a teacher of righteousness; so the margin reads it, for the same word that signifies the rain, signifies a teacher, and that which God has mercy in store for a people, when he sends them teachers of righteousness, pastors after his own heart.

3. All their losses shall be repaired; (v. 25.) I will restore to you the years that the locust has eaten; you shall be comforted according to the time that you have been afflicted, and shall have years of plenty to balance the years of famine. Thus does it repent the Lord concerning his servants, when they repent, and, to show how perfectly he is reconciled to them, he makes good the damage they have sustained by his judgments, and, like the jaller, vouches their stripes. Though, in justice, he disdained upon them, and did them no wrong, yet, in compassion, he makes restitution as the father of the prodigal, upon his return, gave him his full inheritance. He did lose by his folly, he shall have a double portion of all he lost; his Master took him into his family, as in his former estate. The locusts and caterpillars are here called God's great army which he sent among them, and he will therefore repair what they had devoured, because they were his army.

4. They shall have great abundance of all good things. The earth shall yield her increase, and they shall eat it. Look into the stores where they lay up, and you shall find the floor full of wheat, and the fat overflow with wine and oil; (v. 24.) whereas, in the day of their distress, the wine and oil languished, and the barns were broken down, ch. i. 10, 17. Look upon their tables where they lay out what they have laid up, and you shall find that they eat in plenty, and are satisfied, v. 26. They do not eat to excess, nor are surfeited; we hope the drunkards are cured by the late affliction of their inordinate love of wine and strong drink, for, though they were brought in howling for the scarcity, (ch. i. 5.) they are not brought in again here singing for the plenty of it; but now all shall have enough, and shall know when they have enough, for God will make their food nourishing, and give them grace to eat it.

These are the mercies promised, and in these God doeth great things; (v. 21.) He deals wondrously with his people, v. 26. Herein he glorifies his power, and shows that he can relieve his people, though their distress be ever so great, and glorifies his goodness, that he will do it upon their repentance, though their provocations were ever so great. When God deals in mercy, he deals with the poor sinners that return to him, it must be acknowledged that he deals wondrously, and doeth great things. Some expositors understand these promises figuratively, as pointing at gospel-grace, and having their accomplishment in the abundant comforts that are treasured up for believers in the covenant of grace, and the abounding good things there have been given. When God sends us his promises to be the matter of our comfort, his graces to be the grounds of it, and his Spirit to be the Author of it, we may well own that he has sent us (according to his promise here, v. 19.) corn, and wine, and oil, or that which is unspeakably better, and we have reason to be satisfied therewith.

III. What use shall be made of these returns of God's mercy to them, and the good account they shall turn to.
1. God shall have the glory of it; for they shall rejoice in the Lord their God; (v. 23.) and what is the matter of their rejoicing shall be the matter of their thanksgiving; they shall praise the name of the Lord their God, (v. 26.) and not praise their idols, nor call their corn and wine the rewards that their lovers had given them. Note, Then the plenty of our creature-comforts is a mercy indeed to us, when by them our hearts are enlarged in love and joy, and that the good things which we love best, are thing richly to enjoy, though we serve him but poorly. When God restores to us plenty after we have known scarcity, as it is doubly pleasant to us, so it should make us the more thankful to God. When Israel comes out of a wilderness into a Canaan, and there eateth and is full, surely he will then bless the Lord, with a very stormy pleasure, as his good land which he has given them, Deut. viii. 10.

2. They shall have the credit and comfort, and spiritual benefit of it. When God gives them plenty again, and gives them to be satisfied with it, (1.) Their reputation shall be retrieved; they and their God shall be no more reflected upon as unfaithful to one another, when they are returned to him in a way of duty, and he to them in a way of mercy; (v. 13.) Be glad and rejoice, O land, and all the inhabitants of it. Times of plenty are times of joy; yet the favour of God fits gladness into the heart, more than they have whose corn and wine and oil increase. But especially be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God, v. 23. They mourned in Zion, (v. 15.) and therefore there in a particular manner they shall rejoice; for those that sow in penitential tears, shall certainly reap in thankful joys; the children of Zion, who led the rest in fasting, must lead the rest in rejoicing. For they shall not be ashamed of their God; nor so much in the good things themselves that are given them, as in the good hand that gives them, and in the return of his favour to them, as theirs in covenant, which these good things are the tokens and pledges of; the joy of harvest and the joy of a feast must both terminate in God, whose love we should taste in all the gifts of his bounty, as we do in the word of life. Note, He is our chief Good, and the Fountain of all good to us.

(3.) Their faith in God shall be confirmed and increased. When temporal mercies are made by the grace of God to be of spiritual advantage to us, and plenty for the body is so far from being an enemy, (as with many it proves,) that it becomes a friend, to the prosperity of the soul, then they are mercies indeed, that we may make him our chief Joy, as He shall know that I am in the midst of Israel, the Holy One in the midst of thee, (Hos. xi. 9.) and that I am the Lord your God, and none else. As it proves that the Lord is God, and there is no other, because he wounds, and he heals, he forms light and darkness, he doeth good and evil, (Isa. xiv. 7. Deut. xxxii. 39.) so it proves him to be the God of Israel, and as a Father to them, and a Father to them as a Father that he both corrects them when they offend, and comforts them when they repent. It was the burden of the threatenings in Ezekiel's prophecy. Such and such evils I will bring upon you, and you shall know that I am the Lord; and the same is here made the crown of the promises; You shall eat, and be satisfied, and rejoice, and thus ye shall know that I am the Lord. Note, We should labour to grow in our acquaintance with God by all providences, both merciful and afflictive. When God gives to his people plenty, and peace, and joy, upon their return to him, he thereby puts them in a situation wherein they may be pleased with their repentance, that he has pardoned their sins, and that he is theirs as much as ever; that they are taken into the same covenant with him, for he is the Lord their God, and into the same communion, for he is in the midst of them, nigh unto them in all that they call upon him for, and as the sun in the midst of the worlds, so in the midst of them, as to diffuse his benign influences to all the parts of his land.

3. Even the inferior creatures shall share in it, and be made easy by it; Fear not, O land, v. 21. Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field, v. 22. They had suffered for the sin of man, and for God's quarrel with him; and now they shall fare the better for man's repentance, and God's reconciliation to him. Nay, the beasts were made to eat grass when God; (Gen. 30.) and now that cry is answered, and they are bid not to be afraid, for they shall have plenty of all that which their nature craves. God, in sparing Nineveh, had an eye to the cattle, (Deut. iv. 11.) for the cattle had fasted, ch. iii. 8. This may lead us to think of the restitution of all things, when the creature that is now made subject to vanity and groans under it, shall be brought, though not into the glorious joy, yet into the glorious liberty, of the children of God, Rom. viii. 21.

28. And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions: 29. And also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit. 30. And I will show wonders in the earth, and blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke. 31. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come. 32. And it shall come to pass, that whatever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered; for in mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call.

The promises of corn and wine and oil, in the foregoing verses, would be very acceptable to a wasted country; but here we are taught that we must not rest in those things. God has reserved some better things for us, and these verses have reference to those better things; both the kingdom of grace, and the kingdom of glory, and the happiness of true believers in both. We are here told,

I. How the kingdom of grace shall be introduced by a plentiful effusion of the Spirit, v. 28, 29.

We are not at a loss for the meaning of this promise, nor in doubt what it refers to, and wherein it had its accomplishment, for the apostle Peter has given us an infallible explication and application of it, teaching us that when the Spirit was poured out upon the apostles, on the day of Pentecost, (Acts ii. 1, &c.) that was the very thing which was spoken of here. by the prophet Joel, v. 16, 17. That was the gift of the Spirit, which, according to this prediction, was to follow and consecrate every age. It could not any more than for another accomplishment of the promise of the Messiah. Now, 1. The blessing itself here promised, is, the pouring out of the Spirit of God, his gifts, graces, and comforts, which the blessed Spirit is the Author of. We often read in the Old Testament of the Spirit of the Lord coming like drops, as it were, upon the judges and prophets who spake in the name of the Lord, but now the Spirit shall be poured out plentifully in a full stream; as was promised with an eye to gospel-times; (Isa. xlv. 3.) I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed. 2. The time fixed for this is after-wardward; after the fulfilling of the foregoing promises, this shall be fulfilled. St. Peter expounds this of the last days, the days of the Messiah, by whom the world was to have its last revelation of the divine will and grace in the last days of the Jewish church, a little before its dissolution. 3. The extent of this blessing, in respect of the persons on whom it shall be bestowed; the Spirit shall be poured out upon all flesh, not as hitherto upon Jews only, but upon Gentiles also; for in Christ there is no distinction between Jew and Greek, Rom. x. 11, 12. Neither is this a new gift to Abraham, none but those of the land of Israel had the Spirit of prophecy; but, in the last days, all flesh shall see the glory of God, (Isa. xl. 5.) and shall come to worship before him, Isa. lxvi. 23. The Jews understand it of all flesh in the land of Israel, and Peter himself did not fully understand it as speaking of the Gentiles, till he saw it accomplished in the descent of the Holy Ghost upon Cornelius and his friends, who were Gentiles, (Acts x. 44, 45.) which was but a continuation of the same gift which was bestowed on the day of Pentecost. The Spirit shall be poured out upon all flesh, upon all those whose hearts are made hearts of flesh, soft and tender, and so prepared to receive the impressions and influences of the Holy Ghost; upon all flesh, upon some of all sorts of men; the gifts of the Spirit shall not be so sparing, or so much confined, as they have been, but shall be more general and diffusive of themselves. (1.) The Spirit shall be poured out upon some of each sex; not your sons only, but your daughters, shall prophesy; we read of four sisters in one family, that were prophetesses, Acts xii. 11. The Spirit shall be filled with the Spirit; which intimates the continuance of this gift for some ages successively in the church. (2.) Upon some of each age; Your old men, who are past their vigour, and whose spirits begin to decay, your young men, who have yet but little acquaintance with, and experience of, divine things, yet they shall dream dreams, and see visions; God will reveal himself by dreams and visions both to young and old. (3.) Upon those of the meanest rank and condition; even upon the servants and the handmaids; the Jewish doctors say, Prophecy doth not reside on any, but such as are wise, valiant, and rich, not upon the soul of a poor man, or a man in sorrow; but in Christ Jesus there is neither bond nor free, Gal. iii. 28. There were many that were capable of being so raised up, but there was no obstruction to their receiving the Holy Ghost. (4.) The effect of this blessing; They shall prophesy; they shall receive new discoveries of divine things, and that not for their own use only, but for the benefit of the church. They shall interpret scripture, and speak of things secret, distant, and future, which, by the utmost sagacities of reason, they could not have had any insight into, or foresight of. By these extraordinary gifts the Christian church was first founded and set up, and the scriptures written, and ministry settled by which, with the ordinary operations and influences of the Spirit, it was to be afterward maintained and increased. II. How the kingdom of glory shall be introduced by the universal change of nature, v. 30, 31. The pouring out of the Spirit will be very comfortable to the righteous; but let the unrighteous hear this and tremble. There is a great and terrible day of the Lord coming, which shall be ushered in with wonders in heaven and earth, blood, and fire, and destruction of nations, the turning of the sun into darkness, and the moon into blood. This is to have its full accomplishment (as the learned Dr. Pocock thinks) in the day of judgment; at the end of time, before which these signs will be performed in the letter of them, yet so that it was accomplished in part, in the death of Christ, which is called the judgment of the world, when that cloud passed, and the sun was darkened, and a great and terrible day it was; and more fully in the destruction of Jerusalem, which was a type and figure of the general judgment, and before which there were many amazing prodigies, besides the convulsions of states and kingdoms prophesied of under the figurative expressions of turning the sun into darkness, and the moon into blood, and the destruction and devastation of nations, which our Saviour spoke of as the beginning of these sorrows, Matth. xxiv. 6, 7. But before the last judgment there will be wonders indeed in heaven and earth, the dissolution of both without a metaphor. The judgments of God upon a sinful world, and the frequent destruction of wicked kingdoms by fire and sword, are prefaces to, and presages of, the judgment of the world in the last day. Those on whom the Spirit is poured out shall foresee and foretell that great and terrible day of the Lord, and expand the wonders in heaven and earth, that go before it; for as to his first coming, so to his second, did, and do, all the prophets bear witness, Rev. x. 7. III. The safety and happiness of all true believers both in the first and second coming of Jesus Christ, v. 32. This speaks of particular persons, for to them the New Testament has more respect, and less to kingdoms and nations than the Old. Now observe here, 1. That there is a salvation wrought out; though the day of the Lord will be great and terrible, yet in mount Zion and in Jerusalem there shall be deliverance for his people, (Isa. lxvi. 1.) and in the day of the Lord, the day of his judgment, who knows how to separate between the precious and the vile. In the everlasting gospel, which went from Zion, in the church of the first-born typified by mount Zion, and which is the Jerusalem that is from above, there is deliverance; a way of escaping the wrath to come, is found out, and laid open. Christ is himself not only the Saviour, but the Salvation; he is so to the ends of the earth. This deliverance, laid up for us in the covenant of grace, is in performance of the promises made to the fathers; There shall be deliverance, as the Lord has said. See Luke i. 72. Note, This is ground of comfort and hope to sinners, that whatever danger there is in their case, there is also deliverance, deliverance for them, if it be not their own fault, (but it is not the case of those to whom this deliverance, we must apply ourselves to the gospel-Zion, to God's Jerusalem. 2. That there is a remnant interested in this salvation, and for whom the deliverance is wrought. It is in that remnant, that is, among them, that the deliverance is; or in them, in their souls and spirits, there are the earnest and evidences of it; Christ in them is the Holy Ghost, and His name is in them; they could not otherwise have the knowledge of the salvation, because they are but a few in comparison with the multitudes that are left to perish; a little remnant, but a chosen one, a remnant according to the election of grace. And here we are told who they are, that shall be delivered in the great day. (1.) Those that sincerely call upon God; Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord, whether Jew or Gentile, (for the apostle expounds it so, Rom. x. 13, where he lays this down as the great rule of the gospel, by which we must all be judged,) shall be delivered. This calling on the name of God requires the knowledge of it, faith in him, desire toward him, dependence on him, and as an evidence of the sincerity of all this, a conscientious obedience to him; for without that, crying Lord, Lord, will not stand us in any stead. Note, It is the praying remnant that shall be the saved remnant. And it will aggravate the ruin of those who perish, that they might have been saved on solemn terms of their case; where this remnant is called the remnant; The deliverance is sure to the remnant whom the Lord shall call; not only with the common call of the gospel, with which many are called, that are not chosen; but with a special call into the fellowship of Jesus Christ, whom the Lord predestinates, or prepares, so the Chaldee. St. Peter borrows this phrase, Acts ii. 39. Note, Those only shall be delivered in the great day, that are now effectually called from sin to God, from self to Christ, from things below to things above.

CHAP. III.

In the close of the foregoing chapter, we had a gracious promise of deliverance in mount Zion and Jerusalem; now this whole chapter is a comment upon that promise, showing from what they shall be delivered, by what way they shall be delivered, and how it shall be perfected in the everlasting rest and joy of the church. This was in part accomplished, in the deliverance of Jerusalem from the attempt that Sennacherib made upon it in Hezekiah's time, and afterward in the return of the Jews out of their captivity in Babylon, and other deliverances wrought for the Jewish church betwixt that and Christ's coming. But it has a further reference to the great redemption wrought out for us by Jesus Christ, and the destruction of our spiritual enemies, and all their agents, and will have its full accomplishment in the judgment of the great day. Here is a prediction, I. Of God's reckoning with the enemies of his people for all the injuries and indignities that they had done them, and returning them upon their own head, v. 1... 11. Of God's judging all nations, when the day of the Lord cometh, and the great day of his wrath, heathen, to the everlasting confusion of all imperfect sinners, and the everlasting comfort of all his faithful servants, v. 9... 17. III. Of the provision God has made for the refreshment of his people, for their safety and purity, when their enemies shall be made desolate, v. 18... 21. These promises were not of private interpretation only, but were written for our learning, that we, through patience and comfort of this scripture, might have hope.

1. FOR, behold, in those days, and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, 2. I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people, and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land. 3. And they have cast lots for my people: and have given a boy for a harlot, and sold a girl for wine, that they might drink. 4. Yea, and what have ye to do with me, O Tyre, and Zidon, and all the coasts of Palestine? will ye render me a recompense? and if ye recompense me, swiftly and speedily will I return your recompense upon your own head: 5. Because ye have taken my silver and my gold, and have carried into your temples my goodly pleasant things. 6. The children also of Judah, and the children of Jerusalem, have ye sold unto the Grecians, that ye might remove them far from their border. 7. Behold, I will raise them out of the place whither ye have sold them, and will return your recompense upon your own head: 8. And I will sell your sons and your daughters into the hand of the children of Judah, and they shall sell them to the Sabeans, to a people far off: for the Lord hath spoken it.

We have often heard of the year of the redeemed, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion; now here we have a description of the transactions of that year, and a prophecy of what shall be done when it comes, in those particulars, for it comes often, and at the end of time it will come once for all.

I. It shall be the year of the redeemed, for God will bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, v. 1. Though the bondage of God's people may be grievous, and very long, yet it shall not be everlasting. That in Egypt ended at length in their delivery into the glorious liberty of the children of God. Let no man think, that he may serve me, that in Babylon shall likewise end well. And the Lord Jesus will provide for the effectual redemption of poor captivated souls from under the dominion of sin and Satan, and will proclaim that acceptable year, the year of jubilee, the release of debts and servants, and the opening of the prison to them that were bound. There is a day, there is a time, fixed for the bringing again of the captivity of God's children, for the redeeming of them from the power of the grave; and it shall be the last day, and the period of all time.

II. It shall be the year of recompenses of the controversy of Zion. Though God may suffer the enemies of his people to prevail against them very far, and for a long time, yet he will call them to an account for all, and will lead them captive, (Ps. lviii. 18.) will lead those captive, that lead his people captive, Rev. xiii. 10. Observe,

1. Who they are that shall be reckoned with; all nations, v. 2. This intimates, (1.) That all the nations had made themselves liable to the judgment of God for wrong done to his people. Persecution is the reigning, crying sin of the world, that brings in wickedness itself is set against godliness. The enmity that is in the old serpent, the god of this world, against the seed of the woman, appears more or less in the children of this world; marvellous not if the world hate you. (2.) That whatsoever nation injured God's nation, they should not go unpunished; for he that touches the Israel of God, shall be made to know that he touches the apple of his eye. Jeremiah with the stone cut ou all people, Zech. xii. 3. But the neighbouring nations shall be particularly reckoned with; Tyre and Sidon, and all the coasts of Palestine or the Philistines, who had been troublesome neighbours to the Israel of God; (v. 4.) when the more remote and potent nations that laid Israel waste, are reckoned with, the impotent malice of these that lie near them, and head forward the affliction, (Zech. i. 13.) and made a hand of it, (Ezek. xxvi. 2,) shall not be passed by. Note, Little persecutors shall be called to an account as well as great ones; and though they could not do much mischief, shall be reckoned with according to the wickedness of their endeavours, and the mischief they would have done.

2. The sitting of this court for judgment. They shall be together cast into a stockade, (2.) as they have combined together against God's people, with one consent, (Ps. lxxxiii. 5.) may together receive their doom. They shall be brought down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, which lay near Jerusalem, and there God will plead with them. (1.) Because it is fit that criminals should be tried in the same country where they did the fact. (2.) For their greater confusion they shall be scattered and dispersed, and they have so long endeavoured and hoped for the ruin of, in spite of all their rage, made a prayer in the earth. (3.) For the greater comfort and honour of God's Jerusalem, which shall see God pleading their cause. (4.) Then shall be re-acted what God did for Jehoshaphat, when he gave him victory over those that invaded him, and furnished him and his people with matter of joy and praise, in the valley of Berachah. See 2 Chron. xx. 26. (5.) It was in this valley of Jehoshaphat, (as Dr. Lightfoot suggests,) that Sennacherib's army, or part of it, lay, when it was destroyed by an angel. They came together to ruin Jerusalem, but God brought them together for their own ruin, as sheaves in the floor, Matt. x. 15.

3. The plaintiff called, on whose behalf this prosecution is set on foot; it is for my people, and for my heritage Israel. It is their cause that God will now plead with jealousy. Note, God's people are his heritage, his peculiar, his portion, his treasure, above all people, Exod. xix. 5. Deut. xxxii. 9. They are his demesne, and therefore he has a good account to give of them, and to answer to their enemies for the trespasses committed by them.

4. The charge exhibited against them, which is very particular. Many affronts they had put upon God by their idolatries; but that for which God has a quarrel with them is, the affront they have put upon his people and upon the vessels of his sanctuary.

1. They had been very abusive to the people of Israel, had scattered them among the nations, and forced them to seek for shelter where they could find a place, or carried them captive into their respective countries, and there industriously dispersed them, for fear of their incorporating for their common safety. They parted their land, and took every one his share of it as their own; nay, they have cast lots for my people, and sold them. When they cast lots for them, (1.) [in every case] they made just of them, made a scorn of them as of no value, whom they would not release, and yet thought them not worth the keeping; they made nothing of playing them away at dice; or they made a dividend of the prisoners by lot, as the soldiers did of Christ's garments. [2.] They made a gain of them; when they had them, they sold them, yet with so much contempt of the price, as if they were not valued at their price, but sold them for their pleasure rather than their profit; they gave a boy taken in war for the hire of a harlot, and a girl for so many bottles of wine as would serve them for one sitting; a goodly price at which they valued them, and goodly fervent for a son and daughter of Israel, to be a slave and a drudge in a tavern or a brothel. Observe, these enemies of God's people did neither of these things, nor any thing of them, which was commonly spent upon another. The spoil which these enemies of the Jews gathered by injustice and violence, they scattered and threw away in drinking and whores: such is frequently the character, and such the conversation, of the enemies and persecutors of the people of God. The Tyrians and Philistines, when they seized any of the children of Judah and Jerusalem, either took them prisoners in war, or kidnapped them; they sold them to the Grecians, (with whom the men of Tyre traded in the persons of men, Ezek. xxvii. 13.) that they might remove them far from their own border, v. 6. It was a great reproach to Israel, God's first-born, the free-born, to be thus bought and sold among the heathen.

5. The sentence passed upon them. In general, (v. 4.) If you recompense me, if you pretend a quarrel with me, if you provoke me thus to jealousy, if you touch the apple of mine eye, I will swiftly and specially return your recompense upon your own head. Those that contend with God, will find themselves unable to make their part good with him. He will recompense them suddenly, when they little think of it, and have not time to prevent it; if he take them to task, he will soon effect their ruin. Particularly, it is threatened, (1.) That they shall not gain their end in the mischief they designed against God's people. They thought that he had moved them so far from their border, that they should never return to it again, v. 6. But (says God) "I will raise them out of the place whither you have sold them, and they shall not, as you intended, be buried alive there." Men's selling the people of God will not deprive him of his property in them. (2.) That they shall be paid in their own money, as his money. They shall have so much of their money restored to them, (v. 8.) They shall sell your sons and your daughters into the hand of the children of Judah, you shall lie as much at their mercy, as they have been at yours. Isa. lx. 14. Thus the Jews had rule over them that hated them, Esther i. 1. And then they shall justly be sold to the Saboeans, to a people far off. This (some think,) had its accomplishment in the victories obtained by the Macedonians over the enemies of the Jews; but others think it looks as far forward as the last day, when the upright shall have dominion, (Ps. xlix. 14.) and the saints shall judge the world.

6. It is certain that none ever hardened his heart against God, or his church, and prospered long; no, not Pharaoh himself, for the Lord has spoken it, for the comfort of all his suffering servants, that vengeance is his, and he will repay.

9. Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles.
Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near, let them come out: 10. Beat your plough-shares into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong. 11. Assemble yourselves, and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves together round about: that which ye mighty ones to come down, O Lord. 12. Let the heathen be wakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about. 13. Put ye in the sickle; for the harvest is ripe: come, get you down; for the press is full, the fats overflow; for the wickedness is great. 14. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision. 15. The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. 16. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem: and the heavens and the earth shall shake: but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. 17. So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more.

What the psalmist had long before ordered to be said among the heathen, (Ps. xcvii. 10.) the prophet will have it in like manner to be published to all nations, That the Lord reigns, and that he comes, he comes to judge the earth, as he had long been judging in the earth. The notice here given of God's judging the nations may have reference to the destruction of Sennacherib, Nebuchadnezzar, Antiochus, and the antichrist especially, and all the proud enemies of the Christian church; but some of the best interpreters, ancient and modern, (particularly the learned Dr. Pocock,) think the scope of the verses is to set forth the day of the last judgment under the similitude of God's making war upon the enemies of his kingdom, and his gathering up all the harvest of the earth, both which similitudes we find used in the revelation, ch. xix. 11. —xiv. 18.

Here we have,

I. A challenge given to all the enemies of God's kingdom, to do their worst; to signify to them that God is preparing war against them, they are called upon to prepare war against him, v. 9.—11. When the hour of God's judgment draweth nigh, he effectually delivers his people, he gathereth all nations to the battle of that great day of God Almighty, Rev. xvii. 14.—xx. 8. It seems to be here spoken ironically; "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles," let all the forces of the nations be summoned to join in confederacy against God and his people. It is like that, Isa. viii. 9. "Associate yourselves, O ye people, and gird yourselves, but ye shall not gird up all your strength, wake up the mighty men, call them into your service, excite them to vigilance and resolution; let all the men of war draw near, let them come and enter the lists with Omnipotence if they dare; let them not complain for want of weapons, but let them beat their plough-shares into swords, and their pruning-hooks into spears. Let them resolve, if they will, never to return to their husbandry again, but either to conquer or die; let none plead unfitness to bear arms, but let the weak say, I am strong, and will be there in the midst of the host of the kingdom of the north of might, under the power of the Holy Ghost, and under the government of the God of hosts, to do battle against the impious and the ungodly. The Lord, in a word, taketh counsel together, against the Lord and his Christ; let them assemble and come, and gather themselves together; but he that sitteth in heaven shall laugh at them, and, while he thus calleth them, he has them in derision, Ps. ii. 1, 4. The heathen that are wakened, he shall be wakened, and the dead, that they may come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat, to receive their doom, (v. 12.) may come up out of their graves, come up into the air, to meet the Lord there. Jehoshaphat signifies, the judgment of the Lord. Let them come to the place of God's judgment, which perhaps is the chief reason for the using of this name here, but it is put together a new place for the war which then is to be fought. There no judgment in the law, but in the Lord, for there is no escaping of the judgments of God. II. A charge given to the ministers of God's justice, to appear and act against these daring enemies of his kingdom among men. And therefore cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord; (v. 11.) when they bring their forces into the field, let God bring his, let the archangel's trumpet sound a charge, to call together his mighty ones, his angels. Perhaps it is with reference to this that Christ's coming from heaven at the last day is said to be with his mighty angels, 2 Thess. i. 7. These are the hosts of the Lord, that shall fight his battles when he shall put down all opposing rule, principality, and power, when he shall judge among the heathen, Ps. cxv. 6. Some think these words, (v. 9, 10.) Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, are not a challenge to the enemies' hosts, but a charge to God's hosts; let them draw near, and come up. When God's cause is to be pleaded, either by the law, or by the sword, he has those ready, that shall plead it effectually; witnesses ready to appear for him in the court of judgment, soldiers ready to appear for him in the field of battle. They shall beat plough-shares into swords, if need be. However, it is plain that to them all the enemies of God and his kingdom are called "the daughters of the morning," and "the daughters of the sun," and "swords, for the harvest is ripe; that is, their wickedness is great, the measure of it is full, and they are ripe for ruin. Our Saviour has expounded this, Matt. xiii. 39. The harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels. And they are commanded to thrust in their sickle, their sharp sickle, and gather in both the harvest and the vintage, Rev. xxi. 44. Notice, also, that the Lord's judgment makes them ripe for God's judgment. III. The vast appearance that shall be in that great and solemn day; (v. 14.) Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision, the same which before was called the valley of Jehoshaphat, or of the judgment of the Lord, for the day of the Lord is near in that valley. Note, 1. The judgment-day, that is, the day of God's judgment, shall be great, being in effect as a second creation and spoken of, as nigh at hand. Enoch said, Behold, the Lord comes, as if the Judge were then standing before the door; because it is certain that that day will come, and will come according to the appointment, and a thousand years with God are but as one day; things are ripening space for it; we ought always to be ready for it, because our judgment is at hand. 2. The day of judgment will be the day of decision, when every soul's eternal state will be determined, and the controversy that has been long depending between the kingdom of Christ and that of Satan, shall be finally decided, and an end put to the struggle. The valley of the distribution of judgment, (so the Chrestian,) when every man shall be judged according to the things in the body. The valley of threshing; so the margin, carrying on the metaphor of the harvest, ver. 13. The proud enemies of God's people will then be crushed and broken to pieces, and made as the dust of the summer threshing-floors. 3. Innumerable multitudes will be gathered together, to receive their fill of destruction. As in the destruction of Gog we read of the valley of Hamon-Gog, and the city of Hamonah, (Ezek. xxxix. 15, 16,) both signify the multitude of the vanquished enemies; it is the word here used, Hamonim, Hamonim, expressed by way of admiration. O what vast multitudes of sinners will divine justice be glorified in the ruin of that day! A multitude of living, (says one of the rabbins,) and a multitude of dead, for Christ shall come to judge both the quick and the dead.

IV. The amazing change that shall then be made in the kingdom of nature; (V. 15.) The sun and moon shall be darkened; as before, ch. ii. 31. Their glory and lustre shall be eclipsed by the far greater brightness of that glory in which the Judge shall then appear. Nay, they shall themselves be set aside in the dissolution of all things; for damned sinners in hell shall not be allowed their light, being cast into the darkness; and glorified saints in heaven shall not need their light, for God himself will be their everlasting Light, Isa. lx. 19. Those that fall under the wrath of God in that day of wrath, shall be cut off from all comfort and joy, signified by the darkening not only of sun and moon, but of the stars also.

The different impressions which that day will make upon the children of this world, and the children of God, according as it will be to them.

1. To the wicked it will be a terrible day. The Lord shall then speak from Zion and Jerusalem, from the throne of his glory, from heaven, where he manifests himself in a peculiar manner, as sometimes he had done in the glorious high throne of his sanctuary, which yet was but a faint resemblance of the glory of that day. He shall speak from heaven, as from his sanctuary, or angels, (as some understand it,) the holy society of which may be called Zion and Jerusalem, for when we come to the heavenly Jerusalem, we come to the innumerable company of angels; see Heb. xii. 22, 25. Now his speaking in that day will be to the wicked as roaring, terrible as the roaring of a lion, for so the word signifies; he long kept silence, but now our God shall come, and shall not keep silence, Ps. l. 3, 21.

Note. The judgment of the great day will make the ears of those to tingle, that continue the implacable enemies of God's kingdom. God's voice shall then shake terribly both heaven and earth, (Isa. ii. 21,) yet once more, Hagg. ii. 6. Heb. xii. 26. This denotes that the voice of God will in the great day of judgment, when he will deliver his people, put even heaven and earth into a constellation. When God comes to pull down and destroy his enemies, and make them all his footstool, though heaven and earth should stand up in defence of them, and undertake their protection, it shall be all in vain; even they shall shake before him, and be an insufficient shelter to those whom he comes forth to contend with. Note. As blessings out of Zion are the sweetest blessings, and enough to make heaven and earth sing, so terrors out of Zion are the sorest terrors, and enough to make heaven and earth shake.

2. To the righteous it will be a joyful day. When heaven and earth shall tremble, and be dissolved and burnt up, then will the Lord be the hope of his people, and the Strength of the children of Israel; (v. 16,) and then shall Jerusalem be holy, v. 17.

The saints are the Israel of God, they are his people, the church is his Jerusalem, they are in covenant and communion with him; now in the great day of the Lord shall they rejoice, (1.) Their longings shall be satisfied; The Lord will be the Hope of his people. As he always was the Founder and Foundation of their hopes, so he then will be the Crown of their hopes. He will be the Harbour of his people, (so the word is,) their Refugement, Refuge, and Home. The saints in the great day shall arrive at the desired haven, shall put to shore after a stormy voyage; they shall then stand to be for ever at home with God, and to their Father's house, the house not made with hands.

(2.) Their happiness shall be confirmed; God will be in that day the Strength of the children of Israel, enabling them to bid that day welcome, and to bear up under the weight of its glories and joy. In this world, when the judgments of God are abroad, and sinners are falling under them, God is, and will be, the Hope and Strength of his people; the Strength of their heart and their Portion, when other men's hearts fail them for fear. (3.) Their holiness shall be completed; (v. 17.) Then shall Jerusalem be holy, the holy city indeed; such shall the heavenly Jerusalem be, such the glorious church, without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. Jerusalem shall be holiness; (so the word is,) it shall be perfectly holy; she shall be a society, a city, a church, a temple; and the church is a temple, the temple is a church, and the church is a society. The gospel-church is a holy society, even in its militant state, but will never be holiness itself, till it comes to be triumphant. Then, no stranger shall pass through her any more; there shall not enter into the new Jerusalem any thing that defiles, or works iniquity; none shall be there but those who have a right to be there, none but its own citizens; for it shall be a holy city, the city of the living God; every one that is written in the book of life shall be there.

The church is the holy city, the city of the living God. The city of God's sanctuary; and the city of God's Name, will be known in his holiness and glory, as the God that dwells in his holy mountain, and makes it holy by dwelling in it; and they that are sanctified and glorified, are so through the knowledge of him that is holy, as they are through the knowledge of God. Those that have known God is, [1.] An appropriating knowledge; they know that he is the Lord their God, yet not theirs only, but theirs in common with the whole church, that he is their God, but dwelling in Zion his holy mountain; for though faith appropriates, it does not engross or monopolize, the privileges of the covenant. [2.] It is an experimental knowledge. They shall find him their Hope and Strength in the worst of times, and so they shall know that he is the Lord their God. Those know best the goodness of God, who have tasted and seen it, and have found him good to them.

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the mountains shall drop down new wine, and the hills shall flow with milk, and all the rivers of Judah shall flow with waters, and a fountain shall come forth of the house of the Lord, and shall water the valley of Shittim. 19. Egypt shall be a desolation, and Edom shall be a desolate wilderness, for the violence against the children of Judah, because they have shed innocent blood in their land. 20. But Judah shall dwell for ever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation. 21. For I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed: for the Lord dwelleth in Zion.
These promises with which this prophecy concludes, have their accomplishment in part, in the kingdom of grace, and the comforts and graces of all the faithful subjects of that kingdom; but will have their full accomplishment in the kingdom of glory; for as to the Jewish church, we know not of any event concerning that, which answers to the extent of these promises; and what instances of peace and prosperity they were blessed with, which these may be supposed to be a hyperbolical description of, were they but figures of better things reserved for us, that they, in their best estate, with no strength or wealth of any nation is to be compared with. But what is the case with the Christian church, and the state of the Church of God in these latter days? God has kept these promises for himself; and in the Church of Christ they are fulfilled in an extent and manner exceeding all expectations. And if we are God's people, then, like all other promises, we may expect them. These are plain and clear promises of our Saviour Jesus Christ. Remember, two, when you came, and two shall you depart; the mountains shall flow with milk, and the hills shall flow with wine; and milk and wine shall be the drink of you; and you shall be as kings and priests to the Lord your God. The promises were made to the children of Israel, but the passage is opened so as to make them applicable to the Church of Christ, and to every particular member in it. The Church is the children of Israel, and the Jews are the members of her.

I. It is promised that the enemies of the Church shall be vanquished and brought down, v. 19. Egypt, that old enemy of Israel, and Edom, which had an inveterate enmity to Israel, derived from Esau, these shall be a desolation, a desolate wilderness, no more to be inhabited, they are become the people of God's curse; so the Idumeans were, Isa. xxxiv. 5. No strength or wealth of a nation is to be compared with. But what is the case with the Church of Christ, and the state of the Church of God in these latter days? God has kept these promises for himself; and in the Church of Christ they are fulfilled in an extent and manner exceeding all expectations. And if we are God's people, then, like all other promises, we may expect them. These are plain and clear promises of our Saviour Jesus Christ. Remember, two, when you came, and two shall you depart; the mountains shall flow with milk, and the hills shall flow with wine; and milk and wine shall be the drink of you; and you shall be as kings and priests to the Lord your God. The promises were made to the children of Israel, but the passage is opened so as to make them applicable to the Church of Christ, and to every particular member in it. The Church is the children of Israel, and the Jews are the members of her.

II. It is promised that the church shall be very happy; and truly happy it is in spiritual privileges, even during its militant state, but much more when it comes to be triumphant. Three things are here promised it.

1. Purity. That is put last here as a reason for the rest, v. 21. But we may consider it at first as the ground and foundation of the rest. I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed, their bloody, heinous sins, especially shedding innocent blood; that filth and guilt they had contracted by sin, which rendered them unfit for communion with God, and made them odious to his holiness, and obnoxious to his justice; this they shall be washed from in the fountain opened, Zech. xiii. 1. That shall be cleansed by the blood of Christ, which could not be cleansed by the sacrifices and purifications of the ceremonial law. Or if we apply it to the happiness of the future state, it speaks the cleansing of the saints from all these corruptions from which they were not cleansed either by ordinances or providence. But here it is spoken of as a washing away of the remains of sin in them there. Here, though they are washing daily there, is still something that is not cleansed; but in heaven even that also shall be done away. And the reason is, because the Lord dwells in Zion, dwells with his church, and much more gloriously with that in heaven, and holiness becomes his house for ever, for which reason, where he abides, there shall be the glory and presence of holiness. Note, Though the refining and reforming of the church is work that goes on slowly, and still there is something we complain of, that is not cleansed, yet there is a time coming, when every thing that is amiss shall be amended, and the church shall be all fair, and no spot, no stain, in her; and we must wait for that day.

2. Plenty v. 18. That is put first, because it speaks the reverse of the judgment threatened in the foregoing chapters. (1.) The streams of this plenty overflow the land, and enrich it; The mountains shall flow with milk, and the hills shall flow with wine; such great abundance shall there be of suitable provision, both for babes and strong men. It speaks the abundance of vineyards, and all fruitful; and the abundance of cattle in the pastures that fill them with milk. And to make the corn-land fruitful, the rivers of Judah shall flow with water, so that the country shall be like the garden of Eden, and watered everywhere, and greatly enriched, Ps. lxxv. 7. but this seeing shall spring up by the graces and comforts of the new covenant are compared to wine and milk; (Isa. lv. 1.) and the Spirit to rivers of living water, John vii. 38. And these gifts abound much more under the New Testament than they did under the Old; when believers receive grace for grace from Christ's fulness, when they are enriched with everlasting consolations, and filled with joy and peace in believing, then the mountains drip new wine, and the hills flow with milk. Drink ye, drink abundantly, O beloved. When there is a plentiful effusion of the Spirit of grace, then the rivers of Judah flow with water, and make glad, not only the city of our God, (Ps. xlv. 4.) but the whole land. (2.) The fountain of this plenty is in the house of God, whence the streams run down into all the rivers of Egypt. The stream of the word of God, a living spring, springing up from a fountain of eternal life, which shall flow into the streams of all the earth, Ezek. xlvii. 1. from under the threshold of the house, and the river of life out of the throne of God and the Lamb, Rev. xxii. 1. The psalmist, speaking of Zion, says, All my springs are in thee, Ps. lxxvii. 7. Those that take temporal blessings to be meant in the former part of the verse, yet by this fountain out of the house of God, which runs out of the ark, and the springings of the fountain of the waters, which runs to the sea, the river, Ezek. xlvii. 1. from under the threshold of the house, and the river of life out of the throne of God and the Lamb, Rev. xxii. 1. Therefore, The fountain of this shall be the river of waters, which run down from the mountain of holiness, the holy mountain, that is in the house of the Lord, and bring life to the nations. And this is to be the fountain of living waters, the spring of which is Christ, and flowing from Christ, shall reach far even to the Gentile world, to the most remote regions of it, and shall make them to abound in the fruits of righteousness, which had long lain as the barren wilderness. This grace is a fountain overflowing, everflowing, from which we may be continually drawing, and yet need not fear its being drawn dry. This fountain comes out of the house of the Lord; for those that would partake of the promised graces and comforts, must diligently and constantly attend upon instituted ordinances, and from the house of the Lord above, from his temple in heaven, flows all that good which here we are daily tasting the streams of, but hope to be shortly, hope to be eternally, drinking at the fountain-head of. (3.) Perpetuity. This crowns all the rest; (v. 20.) Judah shall dwell for ever, (when Egypt and Edom are made a desolation,) and Jerusalem shall continue from generation to generation. This is a promise, and a precious promise it is. (1.) That the church of Christ shall continue in the world to the end of time. As one generation of professing Christians passes away, another shall come, in whom the promise is fulfilled; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. (2.) That all the living members of that church (Judah and Jerusalem are put for the inhabitants of that city and country, Matth. iii. 5.) shall be established in their happiness to the utmost ages of eternity. This new Jerusalem shall be from generation to generation, for it is a city that has foundations, not made with hands, but eternal in the heavens.
AN

WITH

OF THE PROPHECY OF

AMOS.

Though this prophet appeared a little before Isaiah, yet he was not, as some have mistaken, that Amos, who was the father of Isaiah (Isa. i. 1.) for in the Hebrew their names are very different; their families too were of a different character; for Isaiah was a courtier, Amos a country farmer. Amos signifies, a burden, whence the Jews have a tradition, that he was of a slow tongue, and spake with stammering lips; we may rather, in allusion to his name, say, that his speech was weighty, and his word the burden of the Lord. He was (as most think) of Judah, yet prophesied chiefly against Israel, and at Bethel, ch. vii. 13. Some think his style savours of his extraction, and is more plain and rustic than that of some of the other prophets; I do not see it so, but it is plain that his matter agreed with that of his contemporary, Hosea, that out of the mouth of these two witnesses the word might be established. It appears by his contest with Amaziah the priest of Bethel, that he met with opposition in his work; but was a man of undaunted resolution in it, faithful and bold in reproving sin, and denouncing the judgments of God for it, and pressing in his exhortations to repentance and reformation. He begins with threatenings against the neighbouring nations that were enemies to Israel, ch. i. and ii. He then calls Israel to account; and judges them for their idolatry, their unworthy walking under the favours God had bestowed upon them, and their incorrigibleness under his judgments, ch. iii. and iv. He calls them to repentance, (ch. v.) rejecting their hypocritical sacrifices, unless they did repent. He foretells the desolations that were coming upon them, notwithstanding their security, (ch. vii.) some particular judgments, (ch. vii.) particularly on Amaziah; and after other reproofs and threatenings, (ch. viii. and ix.) concludes with a promise of the setting up of the Messiah’s kingdom, and the happiness of God’s spiritual Israel therein; just as the prophecy of Joel concluded. These prophets, having opened the wound in their reproofs and threatenings, which show all wrong, in the promises of gospel-grace open the remedy, which alone will set all to rights.

AMOS, I

In this chapter, we have, 1. The general title of this prophecy, v. 1. with the general scope of it, v. 3. II. God’s particular controversy with Syria, (v. 3—5.) with Palestine, (v. 6—8.) with Tyre, (v. 9, 10.) with Edom, (v. 11, 12.) and with Ammon, (v. 13—15.) for their cruelty to his people, and the many injuries they had done them. This explains God’s pleading with the nations, Joel iii. 2.

1. THE words of Amos, who was among the herdmen of Tekoa, which he saw concerning Israel in the days of Uziah king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash king of Israel, two years before the earthquake. 2. And he said, The Lord will roar from Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the habitations of the shepherds shall mourn, and the top of Carmel shall wither.

Here is,

1. The general character of this prophecy. It is, the words which the prophet said. Are words to be seen? Yes, God’s words are; the apostles speak of the word of life, which they had not only heard, but which they had seen with their eyes, which they had looked upon, and which their hands had handled; (1 John i. 1.) such a real, substantial thing is the word of God. The prophet saw these words, (1.) They were revealed to him in a vision, as John is said to see the voice that spoke to him; Rev. i. 12. (2.) That which was foretold by them, was to him as certain as if he had seen it with his bodily eyes.
It in imitates how strong he was in that faith which is the evidence of things not seen.

2. The person by whom this prophecy was sent; Amos, who was among the herdmen of Tekoa, and was one of them. Some think he was a rich deacon in cattle; the word is used concerning the king of Moab; (2 Kings iii. 4.) He was a sheep-keeper; it is probable that he got money by that business, and yet he must quit it, to follow God as a prophet. Others think he was a poor keeper of cattle, for we find, (ch. viii. 14, 15.) that he was with a gatherer of wild figs, a poor employment, by which we may suppose he lived and supported himself while he was a prophet.

God took him, as he did David, from following the flock, and Elisha from following the plough. Many were trained up for great employments, in the quiet, innocent contemplative business of shepherds. When God would send a prophet to reprove and warn his people, he employed a shepherd, a herdsman, to do it, for they had made themselves as the horse and mule that have no understanding; nay, worse than the ox that knows his owner. God sometimes chooses the foolish things of the world, to confound the wise, 1 Cor. i. 27. Note, Those whom God has endued with abilities for his service, ought not to be despised or laid aside for the meanest either of their original, or of their beginnings. Though Amos himself is not ashamed to own this, he was a herdsman, yet others ought not to be upbraided with it, or think the worse of him for it.

3. The persons concerned in the prophecy of this book; it is concerning Israel, the ten tribes, who were now ripest in sin, and ripest space for ruin. God had raised them up prophets among themselves, (ch. ii. 11.) but they regarded them not; therefore God sends them one from Tekoa, in the land of Judah, that, coming from another country, might have the more weight, and perhaps the more facility to carry sent out of his own country, because there he was despised for his having been a herdsman. See Matt. xviii. 35, 37.

4. The time when these prophecies were delivered. (1.) The book is dated, as laws used to be, by the reigns of the kings under whom the prophet prophesied. It was in the days of Uzziah king of Judah, when the people of that kingdom went very well, and of Jeroboam the second king of Israel, when the affairs of that kingdom went pretty well; yet then they must both be told both of the sins they were guilty of, and of the judgments that were coming upon them for these sins, that they might not with the present gleam of prosperity flatter themselves into an opinion of their innocence, or a confidence of their perpetual security. 2. It is dated by a particular event to which his prophecy had reference; it was two years before the earthquake, that earthquake which is mentioned to have been in the days of Uzziah, (Zech. xiv. 5.) which put the nation into a dreadful fright, for it is there said, They fled before it. But how could they flee from it? Some conjecture that this earthquake was at the time of Isaiah's vision, when the four living creatures were moved. But the tradition of the Jews is, that it happened just at the time when Uzziah presumptuously invaded the priest's office, and went in to burn incense, 2 Chron. xxvi. 16. Josephus mentions this earthquake, Antiq. IX. 11, and says, "By it half of a mountain was removed and carried to a plain four furlongs off; and it spoiled the king's gardens." God by this prophet gave warning of it two years before, to act by God, that it would shake down their houses, ch. iii. 15.

5. The introduction to these prophecies, containing the general scope of them; (v. 2.) The Lord will roar from Zion. His threatenings by his prophets, and the executions of his providences, will be as terrible as the roaring of a lion is to the shepherds and their flocks. Amos here speaks the same language with his contemporaries, Hosea (ch. xi. 10.) and Joel, ch. iii. 16. The lion roars before he tears; God gives warning before he strikes. Observe, (1.) When this warning comes; from Zion and Jerusalem, from the oracles of God there delivered; for by them is thy servant warned, Ps. xix. 11. Our God, whose special residence is there, will issue out warrants, Given at that court, as it were, for the executing of judgments on the land. See Jer. xxxv. 50. In Zion was the mercy-seat, thence the Lord roars; intimating, as his divine voice is to be heard for judgments, it is allied and mitigated by mercy, may, as they are warnings, they are really acts of mercy. We are chastened, that we may not be condemned. (2.) What effect the warning has; The habitations of the shepherds mourn, either because they fear the roaring lion, or, because they feel what is signified by that comparison, the consequence of a great drought, (ch. iv. 7.) which made the tops of Carmel, of the most fruitful fields, wither, and become as a desert, Joel i. 12, 17.

3. Thus saith the Lord, For three transgressions of Damascus, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they have threshed Gilead with threshing-instruments of iron; 4. But I will send a fire into the house of Hazaél, which shall devour the palaces of Ben-hadad. 5. I will break also the bar of Damascus, and cut off the inhabitant from the plain of Aven, and him that holdeth the sceptre from the house of Eden: and the people of Syr[a] shall go into captivity unto Kir, saith the Lord. 6. Thus saith the Lord, For three transgressions of Gaza, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they carried away captive the whole captivity, to deliver them up to Edom: 7. But I will send a fire on the wall of Gaza, which shall devour the palaces thereof: 8. And I will cut off the inhabitant from Ashdod, and him that holdeth the sceptre from Ashkelon; and I will turn my hand against Ekron; and the remnant of the Philistines shall perish, saith the Lord God. 9. Thus saith the Lord, For three transgressions of Tyrus, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they delivered up the whole captivity to Edom, and remembered not the brotherly covenant: 10. But I will send a fire on the wall of Tyrus, which shall devour the palaces thereof. 11. Thus saith the Lord, For three transgressions of Edom, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they did pursue his brother with the sword, and did cast off all pity, and his anger did tear perpetually, and kept his wrath for ever: 12. But I will send a fire upon Teman, which shall devour the palaces of Bozrah. 13. Thus saith the Lord, For three transgressions of the children of Ammon, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they have ripped up the women with child of Gilead, that they might enlarge their border: 14. But I will kindle a fire in the wall of Rabbah, and it shall devour the palaces thereof, with shouting in the day of battle, with a tempest in the day of the whirlwind: 15. And their king shall go into captivity, he and his princes together, saith the Lord.

What the Lord says here, may be explained by what he says, Jer. xii. 14. Thus saith the Lord, against all my evil neighbours that touch Zion; and do not labour for the house of the Lord, and for the name of the Lord God of Israel: Behold, I will pluck them out. Damascus was a near neighbour to Israel on the north, Tyre and Gaza on the west, Edom on the south, Ammon (and in the next chapter) Moab on the east; and all of them had been, one time, one way, or other, prickings briers and grieving thorns to Israel, evil neighbours to them; and because God espouses his people's cause, he there calls them his evil neighbours, and here comes forth to reckoning with them. The method taken in dealing with each of them is, in part, the same, and therefore we put them together, and yet in each there is something peculiar.

1. Let us see what is repeated, both by way of charge, and by way of sentence, concerning them all. The controversy God has with each of them, is the same with that with all the rest, namely, the judgments of God of Israel. Though those nations will not worship him as their God, yet they shall be made to know that they are accountable to him as their Judge. The God of Israel is the God of the whole earth, and has something to say to them, that shall make them tremble. Against them the Lord roars out of Zion. And before God, by the prophet, thereasons Israel and Judah, he declares, I the judgments against these nations whom he made use of as scourges to them for their being so; which might serve for a check to their pride and insolence, and a relief to his people under their dejections; for hereby they might see that God had not quitted his interest in them, and therefore might hope they had not lost their interest in him. Nor were they all there arraigned.

1. The indictment drawn up against them all is thus far the same, (1.) That they are charged in general with three transgressions, and with four, that is, with many transgressions; as by one or two, we mean a few, so by three or four we mean many, as in Latin, a man that is very happy, is said to be terque quaterque beatum—three and four times happy; or with three and four, that is, with seven transgressions, a number of perfection; intimating that they have filled up the measure of their iniquities, and are ripe for ruin. Or, with three, that is, a variety of sins, and with a fourth especially, which is specified concerning each of them, though the other three are not. As Prov. xxx. 13, 18, 21, 29, where we read of three things, see, four, generally one seems to be more especially. (2.) That the particular sin, which is fastened upon as the fourth, and which alone is specified, is, the sin of persecution; it is some mischief or other done to the people of God, that is particularly charged upon every one of them; for persecution is the measure-filling sin of any people; and it is this sin that will be particularly reckoned for; I was hungry, and you gave me no meat; much more if it may be said, I was hungry, and you took my meat from me.

2. The judgment given against them all, is thus far the same. (1.) That, their sin being come to such a height, God will not turn away the punishment thereof. Though he is granted them a long reprieve, and has often turned away the punishment yet, now he will turn it away no longer, but justice shall take its course, "I will not revoke it (so some read it); I will not recall the voice which is gone, forth from Zion and Jerusalem, (v. 2.) speaking death and terror to the sinful nations." It is an irrevocable sentence; God has spoken it, and he will not take it back. Though long, he will not bear always, with those that provoke him, and when the decree brings forth, it will bring up. (2.) That God will kindle a fire among them; this is said concerning all these evil neighbours, v. 4, 7, 10, 12, 14. God will send a fire into their cities. When fires are kindled, that lay cities, towns, and nations in ashes, whether designedly or casually, God must be acknowledged in it; they are of his sending; sin stirs up the fire of his jealousy, and that kindles other fires.

1. Let us see what is mentioned both by way of charge, and by way of sentence, that is peculiar to each of them; that every one may take his portion.

1. Concerning Damascus, the head city of Syria, a kingdom that was often vexations to Israel. (1.) The heathen fire and ruin of Damascus was, using the Gileadites barbarously; They threshed Gilead with threshing-instruments of iron, (v. 3.) which may be understood either literally, of putting the inhabitants of Gilead to the torture, or to cruel deaths, whom they got into their hands; as David put the Ammonites under saws and hammers, 2 Sam. xii. 31. We read with what inhumanity Hazael king of Damascus put to the women of Damascus, 2 Kings xx. 32. He dashed their children, and rifled up their women with child; and saw what desolations he made in their land, 2 Kings x. 32, 33. Or, it may be taken figuratively, for his laying the country waste, and this very similitude is used in the history of it; (2 Kings xiii. 7.) He destroyed them, and made them like the dust by threshing. Note, Men often do that unjustly and wickedly, and (3 Kings viii. 12.) he dashed their children, and rifled up their women with child; and saw what desolations he made in their land, 2 Kings x. 32, 33. Or, it may be taken figuratively, for his laying the country waste, and this very similitude is used in the history of it; (2 Kings xiii. 7.) He destroyed them, and made them like the dust by threshing. Note, Men often do that unjustly and wickedly, and... of Assyria went up against Damascus, and took it, and carried the people of it captive to Kir, and slew Rezin, at the instigation of Ahaz king of Judah.

2. Concerning Gaza, a city of the Philistines, and the inhabitants thereof, their sin was, that they carried away the whole captivity, either of Israel or Judah, which, some think, refers to that inroad made upon Jehoram, when they took away all the king's sons, and all his substance; (2 Chron. xxi. 17.) or, perhaps it refers to their seizing of those that fled to them for shelter, when Semachthah invaded Judah; the sea coast of that country. (1 Chron. ii. 4.) Or, (as here) to the Edomites, who were always sworn enemies to the people of God. They spared none, but carried off all they could lay their hands on, designing, if possible, to cut off the name of Israel, Ps. lxxxiv. 4, 7. (2.) The peculiar sin of the Philistines is, that the fire which God will send, shall devour the palaces of Gaza, and that the inhabitants of the other cities of the Philistines, Ashdod, (or Azotus,) Ashkelon, and Ekron, should all be cut off, and God would make as thorough work with them in their ruin as they have made with God's people when they carried away the whole captivity; for even the remnant of them shall perish. v. 3. Note, God will make a full end of those that think to make a fire to devour, and shall destroy all that think to be able to withstand God's anger.

5. Concerning Tyre, that famous city of wealth and strength, that was itself a kingdom, v. 9. (1.) The peculiar sin of Tyre is, delivering up the whole captivity to Edom, selling to the Edomites those of Israel that fled to them for shelter, or any way fell into their hands; not caring what hardships they put upon them, so they could but make gain of them to themselves. Herein they forgot the brotherly covenant, the league made with them by Solomon, king of Tyrus, (1 Kings v.) which was so intimate, that Hiram called Solomon his brother, 1 Kings xi. 3. Note, It is a great aggravation of enmity and malice, when it is the violation of friendship and of a brotherly covenant. (2.) Here is nothing peculiar in the punishment of Tyrus, but that the palaces thereof shall be devoured; which was done; Nebuchadnezzar took it after thirteen years' siege. Their merchants were all princes, and their private houses were as palaces; but the fire shall make no more of them than cottages.

4. Concerning Edom, the posterity of Esau. (1.) Their peculiar sin was, an unmerciful, unwearied pursuit of the people of God, and their taking all advantages against them to do them a mischief, v. 11. He did pursue his brother with the sword, not only of old, when the king of Edom took up arms to oppose the children of Israel's passage through his border, (Numb. xx. 1.) but ever since upon all occasions; they had not strength and courage enough to face them in the field of battle, but, whenever any other enemy had put Judah or Israel to flight, then the Edomites set in with the pursuers, fell upon the rout, and added to the spoil already, and (as is usual with cowards when they have an enemy at an advantage) they did cast off all pity. Those that are least courageous, are commonly most cruel; Edom was so; his malice destroyed his compassion; (so the word is;) he stripped himself of the tenderness of a man, and put on the fierceness of a beast of prey; and, as such a one, he did tear, his anger did devour him, and, as his terror did make his face like a flame, and he never knew when he had sucked enough of the blood of Israel, but, like the horse-leech, still cried, Give, give. Nay, he kept his wrath for ever; when he wanted objects of his wrath, and opportunity to show it, yet he kept it in reserve, (it rested in his bosom,) rolled it under his tongue as a sweet morsel, and had it ready to spit in the face of Israel upon the next occasion. Cursed be such cruel wrath and anger so fierce, so outrageous, which makes men like the devil, who continually seeks to devour, and unlike to God, who keeps not his anger for ever.

9. But Esau's sin was, that his posterity was unnatural, forgetful he pursued his brother, whom he ought to have protected; it was hereditary, as if it had been entailed upon the family ever since Esau hated Jacob, and time itself could not wear it out, no, nor the brotherly conduct of Israel toward them, (Deut. ii. 4.) and the express law given to Israel, (Deut. xxiii. 7.) Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite, for he is thy brother. (2.) Here is nothing peculiar in the punishment of Edom, except that a fire shall be sent to devour their palaces. Note, The fire of our anger against our brethren kindles the fire of God's anger against us.

5. Concerning the Ammonites, v. 13.—15. (1.) See how violently the fire of their anger turned against the people of God; they not only triumphed in their calamities, (as we find, Ezek. xxv. 2, 6.) but they did themselves use them barbarously, they ripped up the women with child of Gilead, a piece of cruelty, the very mention whereof strikes a horror upon one's mind; one would think it not possible that any of the human race should be so inhuman. Hazael was guilty of it, 2 Kings viii. 12. It was done not only in a brutish rage, which falls without consideration upon all that comes before it, but with a devilish design to extirpate the race of Israel by killing not only all that were born, but all that were to be born, worse than Egyptian cruelty. It was that they might enlarge their border, that they might make the land of Gilead their own, and there might be none to lay claim to it, or give them any disturbance in the possession of it. We find, (Jer. xlix. 1.) that the Ammonites inherited God, that is, Gilead, a demerit design to extend the race of Israel by killing not only all that were born, but all that were done to his own people? Shall not his soul be avenged on such a nation as this? No doubt it shall. The fire shall be kindled with shouting in the day of battle, shall kindle the fire, it shall be a fire accompanied with the sword, or a roaring fire, which shall make a noise like that of soldiers ready to engage. And it shall be as a tempest in the day of the whirlwind, which comes swiftly, furiously, and bears down all before it. Or, This tempest and whirlwind shall be as bellows to the fire, to make it burn the stronger, and spread the further. It is particularly threatened that their king and his princes shall go together into captivity, carried away by the King of Babylon, not long after Judah was. See what changes God's providence often makes with merciful or his own summary, who become captives, and princes prisoners. Milcom shall go into captivity; some understand it of the god of the Ammonites, whom they called Moloch—a king; he, and his princes, and his priests that attended him, shall go into captivity; their idol shall be so far from protecting them, that it shall itself go into captivity with them. Note, Those who by violence and cruelty put mankind under their feet, will justly be expelled and excluded their own border; nor is it strange if those who make no conscience of invading the rights of others, be able to make no resistance against those who invade theirs.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter, I. God, by the prophet, proceeds in a like controversy with Moab as before with other nations, v.
1. Thus saith the Lord, for three transgressions of Moab, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof: because he burnt the bones of the king of Edom into lime; 2. But I will send a fire upon Moab, and it shall devour the palaces of Kirioth; and Moab shall die with tumult, with shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet: 3. And I will cut off the judge from the midst thereof, and will slay all the princes thereof with him, saith the Lord. 4. Thus saith the Lord, For three transgressions of Judah, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof: because they have despised the law of the Lord, and have not kept his commandments, and their lies caused them to err, after which their fathers have walked; 5. But I will send a fire upon Judah, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem. 6. Thus saith the Lord, For three transgressions of Israel, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof: because they sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes; 7. That pant after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor, and turn aside the way of the meek; and a man and his father will go in unto the same naid, to profane my holy name: 8. And they lay themselves down upon clothes laid to pledge by every altar, and they drink the wine of the condemned in the house of their god.

Here is, 1. The judgment of Moab, another of the nations that bordered upon Israel. They are reckoned with, and shall be punished for three transgressions and for four, as those before. Now, 1. Moab’s fourth transgression, as theirs who were before set to the bar, was, cruelty; the instance given refers not to the people of God, but to a heathen like themself; the kings of Moab burnt the bones of the king of Edom into lime. We find there was war between the Edomites and the Moabites, in which the king of Moab, in distress, and rage, offered his own son for a burnt-offering, to appease his deity, 2 Kings iii. 26, 27. And it should seem that afterward he, or some of his successors, in revenge upon the Edomites for bringing him to that extremity, having and advancing the Edomites, seized him alive, and burnt him to ashes, or slew him, and burnt his body, or dug up the bones of their dead king, of that particularly who had so straitened him, and, in token of his rage and fury, burnt them to lime, and perhaps made use of the powder of his bones for the white-washing of the walls and ceiling of his palace, that he might please himself with the sight of that monument of his revenge. Est vindicta bonum vitâ judæorùm ipsh—Revenge is sweeter than life itself. It is barbarous to abuse human bodies, for we ourselves also are in the body; it is senseless to abuse dead bodies, nay, it is impious, for we believe and look for their resurrection. And to abuse the dead body of kings, (whose persons and names ought to be in a particular manner respected and had in veneration,) is an affront to majesty; it is an argument of a base spirit for those to tramplë upon a dead lion, who, were he alive, would tremble before him. 2. Moab’s doom for this transgression is, (1.) A judgment of death. Those that deal cruelly shall be cruelly dealt with; (2.) Moab’s doom is, They shall be burnt to lime; I will cut him off, says God; (v. 3.) he shall know there is Judge that is higher than he. The king, the chief judge, and all the inferior judges and princes, shall be cut off together. If the people sometimes suffer for the sin of their princes, yet the princes themselves shall not escape. Jer. xxvi. 47. Thus far is the judgment of Moab.

II. Judah also is a near neighbour to Israel, and therefore now that justice is riding the circuit, that shall not be passed by; that nation had made itself like the heathen, and mingled itself with them, and therefore the indictment here runs against them in the same form in which it had run against all the rest; For three transgressions of Judah, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; their sins are as many as the sins of other nations. We find and we find them huddled up with them in the same character, Jer. ix. 26. Egypt, and Judah, and Edom, jumble them together, they are all alike; the sentence here also is the same; (v. 5.) I will send a fire upon Judah, though it is the land where God is known, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, though it is the holy city, and God has been known in its palaces for a refuge, Ps. xlviii. 3. But the sin here charged upon Judah, is different from all the rest. The other nations were reckoned with for injuries done to men, but Judah is reckoned with for indignities done to God, v. 4. 1. They put contempt upon his statutes; and persisted in disobedience to them; They have despised the law of the Lord, as if it were not worth their while to have had any thing in it valuable; and herein they despised the wisdom, justice, and goodness, as well as the authority and sovereignty, of the Law-Maker; this they did, in effect, when they kept not his commandments, made no conscience of them, took no care about them. 2. They put honour upon his rivals, their idols, here called their lies, which they supposed them to be; the Lord cut them off. Hab. ii. 18. And they that are led away into the error of idolatry, are by that led into a multitude of other errors. Uno discutio absurdo et mille sequentur.—One absurdity draws after it a thousand. God is an infinite, eternal Spirit; but when that truth of God is by idolatry changed into a lie, all his other truths are in danger of being so changed likewise; thus the destroyers of their own city have given the people of Jerusalem to understand that they have been led away into the idolatry of the Canaanites, and that they have led others up to strong delusions; nor was it any excuse for their sin, that they were the lies after which their fathers walked, for they should rather have taken warning, than taken pattern, by those that perished with these lies in their right hand.

III. We now at length come to the words which Amos saw concerning Israel; the reproofs and threatenings having walked the round, here they centre, here they settle. He begins with them as with the rest, For three transgressions of Israel, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; if all these nations must be punished for their impunities, shall Israel go unpunished? Observe here, what their sins were, for which God would reckon with them.

1. Perverting justice. This was the sin of those who were intrusted with the administration of justice, the judges and magistrates, and all parties concerned; they made nothing of selling a righteous man for twenty pieces of silver, and of adding one to the number of the guilty, before them; for a piece of silver sentence was passed, not according to the merits of the cause, but the bribe always turned the scale, and judgment was set to sale by auction to the highest bidder.
They would sell the life and livelihood of a poor man for a pair of shoes, for the least advantage to themselves that could be proposed to them; give but a pair of shoes, and the cause of a poor man, who could not stand as that, should be betrayed, and left at the mercy of those that will have no mercy; they will rather play at small game than sit out; for a piece of bread such a man will transgress. Note, Those who will wrong their consciences for any thing, will come at length to do it for next to nothing, those who begin to sell justice for silver, will, in time, be so Corinth to sell their own conscience, and be lured thereby.

2. Offending the poor, and seeking to benefit themselves by doing them a mischief; They pant after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor; they swallow up the poor with the utmost greediess, and make a prey of them that are in sorrow, with dust on their heads; poor orphans that are in mourning for their parents, they catch at them to get their estates into their hands; they never rest till they have got the heads of the poor in the dust, to be trodden on. Or, They pant after the dust of the earth, silver and gold, white and yellow dust; they covet it earnestly, and levy it upon the head of the poor, by their unjust exactions. Note, Men's senching to enrich themselves by the impoverishing of others, is a transgression which God will not long turn away the punishment of. This is turning aside the way of the meek, contriving to do injury to those who, they know, are mild and patient, and will bear injury. They invade their rights, break their measures, and obstruct the course of justice in favour of them, not suffering them to go on with their rightgious cause; this is turning aside their way. Note,

The more patiently men bear the injuries that are done them, the greater is the sin of those that injure the; and the more occasion they have to expect that God will right them, and take vengeance for them. I, as a deaf man, heard not, and then thou with hear.

3. Abominable uncleanness, even incest itself, such as is not named among the Gentiles, that a man should have his father's wife, (1 Cor. v. 1) his father's concubine; A man and his father will go in to the same women, and his father and his son will commit incest with any other of an unbecoming, promiscuous lust; and yet where the former iniquities of oppression and extortion are, this also is found; for laws of modesty seldom hold those that have broken the bands of justice, and cast away its cords from them. This wickedness is such a scandal to religion, and the professor of it, that they who are guilty of it, are looked upon as engines of the most degrading kind, as the shameless, and whose name shall be holy name, and to render it odious among the heathen, as if he countenanced the villanies which those who pretend relation to him allow themselves in,
and were altogether such a one as they.

4. Regaling themselves, and yet pretending to honour their God with that which they had got by offence and extortion, v. 8. They add idolatry to their injustice, and then think as much for their injustice with their idolatry. (1.) They make merry with that which they have unjustly squeezed from the poor. They lay themselves down at ease, and in state, and stretch themselves upon clothes laid
before them, here put for all the devoted nations. Observe the magnificence of the enemies that stood in their way, which, is a notice of, that God would give them to all the means. 9. The reference is to the place where they were of great stature, his height was like the height of the cedars, and the people of Israel were as shrubs to them; and of great strength, not only tall, but well set, he was strong as the oaks; their kingdom was eminent among the nations, and overtopped all its neighbours; the support and defences of which, it was by God raising up men among them, have therein such an advantage, both by their direction and encouragement, to be religious, as they will be called to an account for another day, if they do not improve. Israel is here reckoned with, not only for the prophets, but for the Nazarites, raised up among them. Concerning the truth of this, he appeals to themselves. "Is it not even thus, O ye children of Israel? Can it be that when yourselves have been sensible of the advantage you had by the prophets and Nazarites raised up among you?" Note, Sinners' own consciences will be witnesses for God, that he has not been wanting to them in the means of grace, so that if they perish, it is because they have been wanting to themselves in not improving these means. The men of Judah shall themselves judge between God and his vineyard, whether he could have done more for it, Isa. v. 3, 4.

3. He charges them with the abuse of the means of grace they enjoyed, and the opposition they gave to God's designs in affording them those means, v. 12. They were so far from walking in the light of day, that they walked against it, and did what they could to extinguish it, that it might no way come to their faces to their conviction. (1.) They did what they could to debauch good people; to draw them off from their seriousness in devotion, and their strictness in conversation; Ye gave the Nazarites wine to drink, contrary to their vow, that, having broken it in that instance, they might not pretend to keep it in any other. Some they surprised, or allured into it, and with their much fair speech caused them to yield; others they forced and frightened into it, reproached and threatened them, if they were more precise than their neighbours; and by drawing them in to drink wine they spoiled them for Nazarites. Note, Satan and his agents are very busy to corrupt the minds of young people that look heavenly; and many that we thought would have been Nazarites, they have overcome by giving them wine to drink; by drawing them into the love of mirth and pleasure, and drinking company; multitudes of young men that bid fair for eminent professors of religion, have erred through wine, and been undone for ever. And how do the factors for hell triumph in the debauching of a Nazarite! (2.) They did not keep their purity from them, nor allow them to keep theirs, with whom they might suspect to be prejudged against them and their land, but those who knew wished well to them. Note, Faithful ministers are great blessings to any people, and it is God that raises them up to be so, and they may justly be reckoned an honour to the families they are of. They had Nazarites that were bright examples of piety and piety, to set before them, for that they owned and used the blessings of God that was raised up by the power of his grace, to be monuments of his grace, to his glory, and to be his witnesses against the impieties of that degenerate age. Note, It is as great a blessing to any place to have eminent good Christians in it as to have eminent good ministers in it; for so they have examples to their rules. We must acknowledge that it bodes well to any people, when God raises up among them a body of hopeful young people among them, when he makes their young men Nazarites, devout and conscientious, and mortified to the pleasures of sense; those that are such Nazarites, are purer than snow, whiter than milk, they are indeed the polite young men, for their polishing is of sapphire, Lam. iv. 7. They that have such men among them, have therein such an advantage, both by their direction and encouragement, to be religious, as they will be called to an account for another day, if they do not improve. Israel is here reckoned with, not only for the prophets, but for the Nazarites, raised up among them. Concerning the truth of this, he appeals to themselves. "Is it not even thus, O ye children of Israel? Can it be that when yourselves have been sensible of the advantage you had by the prophets and Nazarites raised up among you?" Note, Sinners' own consciences will be witnesses for God, that he has not been wanting to them in the means of grace, so that if they perish, it is because they have been wanting to themselves in not improving these means. The men of Judah shall themselves judge between God and his vineyard, whether he could have done more for it, Isa. v. 3, 4.

4. He complains of the wrong they did him by their sins; (v. 13.) "I am pressed under you, I am straitened by you, and know not what to do, Hos. xi. 8, 9. I am loaded and burthened by you, and can no longer bear it, and therefore I will cease of my adversaries, Isa. i. 24. I am pressed under you, and the load of your sins, as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves, is loaded with corn, in the midst of the joy of harvest, as long as you will lie on." Note, The great God complains of sin, especially the sins of his professing people, as a further to him. He is grieved with this remembrance (Ps. xcv. 10) is broken with their whorish heart, Ezek. vi. 9. A consideration which if it make not the sinners repentance very deep, it will make his... ruin very great. The great God that upholds the world, and never complains that he is pressed under the weight of it, he fainteth not, neither is he weary, even in the days of his adversaries, ye, and of their hypocritical services too, that he is weary of bearing them, Isa. i. 14. No wonder the creature groans being burdened, (Rom. viii. 22.) when the Creator says, I am pressed under them.

5. He threatens them with unavoidable ruin. And so some read, v. 13. Behold, I will press or straiten your place, as a cart full of sheaves presses; they shall be driven forth of the way of the land, of the earth, and shall make a noise, as a cart overloaded does. They that will not submit to the convictions of the word, that will neither be won by that, nor by the conversation of those about them, shall be made to sink under the weight of God's judgments. If God load us daily with his benefits, and we, notwithstanding that, load him with our sins, how can we expect any other than that he should load us with his judgments? And it is here threatened in the three last verses, that when God comes forth to contend with this provoking people, they shall not be able to stand before him, to flee from him, or to make their part good with him; for when God judges, he will overcome. Though his patience be tired out, his power is not, and so the sinner shall find, to his cost. When the Assyrian army comes to lay the country waste by sword and captivity, none shall escape, but every one shall have his share in the common desolation. (1.) It will be in vain to think of fleeing from the enemy that comes armed with a commission to make all desolate. The flight shall perish from the swift; the art of those that have been famed for happy escapes and happy retreats, shall now fail them; they shall find that the hand of the Lord is to take; or they shall have no strength or spirit to attempt it. They shall be at their vote end, and then they are soon at their flight's end. Are they, as Ashesh, as swift of foot as a wild roe? (2 Sam. ii. 13.) Yet, like him, they shall run the faster upon their own destruction; He that is swift of foot, shall not deliver himself, v. 15. Or, do they say, (as those, Isa. xxx. 15.) How can we flee upon horses, and we will ride upon the swift? Yet they shall be forsaken; Neither shall he that rides the horse, deliver himself from the pursuers. A horse is a vain thing for safety. (2.) It will be in vain to think of fighting it out. God is at war with them; and are they stronger than he? Is there any military force that can pretend to be a match for Omnipotence? No, the strong shall not strengthen his force. He that has a habit of strength, shall not be able to exert it when he has occasion for it. And the mighty, who should protect and deliver others, shall not be able to deliver himself, to deliver his soul, (the word is,) shall not save his life. Let not the strong man then glory in his strength, nor trust in it, but strengthen himself in the Lord his God, for in him is his salvation, and his arm. And as the bodily strength shall fail, so shall the voice of mourning as well as the arm shall become insufficient; Neither shall he stand that handles the bow, though he stand at a distance, but shall betake himself to flight, and not trust to his own bow to save him; though the arm were ever so strong, and the armour ever so well fixed, neither will avail when the speaker shall say to his armour, Be thou courageous among the mighty, that used to look danger in the face, and not be dismayed at it, he shall flee away naked in that day; not only disarmed, having thrown away his weapons both offensive and defensive, but plundered of his treasure, which he thought to have carried away with him, and he shall think it as much as baggage, that he has his life for a prey. Thus when God pleases, he takes away the heart of the chief of the people of the earth, and causes them who used to boast of their courage, and their daring enterprises in the field, to wander and sneak in a wilderness where there is no way, Job xii. 24.

CHAP. III.

A stupid, senseless, heedless people, are, in this chapter, called upon to take notice, 1. Of the judgments of God denounced against them, and, in that, I hope, they give them of those judgments; and that hereby awakened out of their security, v. 1. 8. 11. Of the sins that were found among them, by which God was provoked thus to threaten, thus to punish; that they might truly God in his controversy with them, and, unless they repented and reformed, might expect no other than that God should proceed in his controversy, v. 9. 15.

1. HEAR this word that the Lord hath spoken against you, O children of Israel, against the whole family which I brought up from the land of Egypt, saying, 2. You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities. 3. Can two walk together except they be agreed? 4. Will a lion roar in the forest when he hath no prey? will a young lion cry out of his den if he have taken nothing? 5. Can a bird fall in a snare upon the earth where no gin is for him? shall one take up a snare from the earth, and have taken nothing at all? 6. Shall a trumpet be blown in the city, and the people not be afraid? shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it? 7. Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets. 8. The lion hath roared, who will not fear? the Lord God hath spoken, who can but prophesy? The scope of these verses is, to convince the people of Israel that God had a controversy with them; that which the prophet has to say to them, is, to let them know that the Lord has something to say against them, v. 1. They were his peculiar people above other, knew his name, and were called by it; nevertheless he had something against them, and they were called to hear what it was, that they might consider what answer they should make; as the prisoner at the bar is bid to hearken to his indictment. The children of Israel would not regard the words of counsel and comfort that God had many a time spoken to them, and now they shall be made to hear the word of reproof and threatening that the Lord has spoken against them; for He will act as He has spoken.

1. Let them know that the gracious cognizance God had taken of them, and the favours he had bestowed upon them, should not exempt them from the punishment due to them for their sins. It is a family that God brought out of the land of Egypt, (v. 1.) and it was no more than a family, when it went down thither; thence God delivered it, thence he fetched it to be a family to himself. It is not only the ten tribes, the kingdom of Israel that must take notice of this, but that of Judah also, for it is spoken against the whole family that God brought out of Egypt. It is a family that God has bestowed distinguishing favours upon, has owned in a peculiar manner; You only have I known of all the families of the earth. Note, God's church in the world is a family dignified above all the families of the earth. Those that know God, are known of him; in Judah is God known, and therefore Judah is more than any people known of God. God has known them; he has chosen them, covenanted with them, and conversed with them as his acquaintance.

Now, one would think, it should follow, “Therefore I will spare you, will concur at your faults, and excuse you.” No, “There will I punish you for your iniquities. Note. The distinguishing favours of God to us, if they do not serve to restrain us from sin, shall not serve to exempt us from punishment: nay, the nearer any are to God in profession, and the kinder notice he has taken of them, the more surely, the more quickly, and the more severely, will he reckon with them, if they by a course of wilful sin profane their character, disgrace their relation to him, violate their engagements, and put a slight upon the favours and honours with which they have been distinguished. Therefore they shall be punished, because their sins dishonour him, affront him, and grieve him, more than the sins of others; and because it is necessary that God should vindicate his own honour by making it appear that he hates sin, and hates it more in them, who are nearer to him, as bad as others, they shall be punished worse than others, because it is justly expected that they should be so much better than others. Judgment begins at the house of God, begins at the sanctuary; for God will be sanctified either by or upon those that come nigh unto him, Lev. x. 5.

2. Let them know that they could not expect any comfort through communion with God, unless they first made their peace with him; (v. 3.) Can two walk together except they be agreed? No, how should they? Where there is no friendship, there can be no fellowship; if two persons be at variance, they must first accommodate the matters in difference between them, before there can be any interchanging of good offices. Israel had affronted God, had broken their covenant with him, and ill requited his favours to them; and yet they expected that he should continue to walk with them, should take their part, act for them, and give them assurances of his presence with them, though they took no care by repentance and reformation to agree with their Adversary, and to turn away his wrath. “But how can that be?” (says God,) “while you continue to walk contrary to God, you can look for no other than that he should walk contrary to you.” Lev. xxvi. 23, 24. Note, We cannot expect that God should be present with us, or act for us, unless we be reconciled to him. God and man cannot walk together, except they be agreed; unless we agree with God in our end, which is his glory, we cannot walk in his way.

3. Let them know that the warnings God gave them of judgments approaching, were not causeless and groundless, merely to amuse them, but certain declarations of the wrath of God against them, which (if they did not speedily repent) they would infallibly feel the effects of; (v. 4.) “Will a lion roar in the forest, when he has no prey in view? No, he roar in the very forest, or will a young lion cry out of his den, if the old lion have taken nothing to bring home to him; nor would God thus give you warning both by the threatenings of his word, and by lesser judgments, if you had not by your sins made yourselves a prey to his wrath, nor if he were not really about to fall upon you with desolating, destroying judgments.” Note. The threatenings of the word and providence of God are not bugbears, to frighten children and fools, but are certain inferences from the sin of man, and certain presages of the judgments of God.

4. Let them know that as their own wickedness was the procuring cause of these judgments, so they shall not be removed till they have done their work, v. 5. When God is come forth to contend with a sinful people, it is necessary that they should understand, (1.) That it is their own sin that has entangled them; for, can a bird fall in a snare upon the earth, where no gin is for him? No, nature does not lay snares for the creatures, but the art of many a bird has taken him in by chance, as with the fowler’s design; so the providence of God prepares trouble for sinners, and it is in the work of their own hands that they are snared; affliction does not spring out of the dust, but it is God’s justice, and our own wickedness, that corrects us. (2.) It is nothing but their own repentance that can disentangle them; for shall one take up a snare from the earth, which he laid with design, except he have taken something as he designed? So neither will God remove the affliction he has sent, till it have done its work, and accomplished that for which he sent it. If our hearts be duly humbled, and we are brought by our afflictions to confess and forsake our sins, then the snare has taken something, then the point is gained, the end is answered, and then, and not till then, the God has brought this evil, and it is in the earth, we are delivered in love and mercy.

5. Let them know that all their troubles came from the hand of God’s providence, and from the counsel of his will; (v. 6.) Shall there be evil in a city, in a family, in a nation, and the Lord has not done it, appointed it, and performed what he appointed. The evil of sin is from ourselves, it is our own doing; the evil of law, the evil of God, is from God, and is his doing; whoever are the instruments, God is the principal Agent. Out of his mouth both evil and good proceed.

This consideration, That, whatever evil is in the city, the Lord has done it, should engage us patiently to bear our share in public calamities, and to study to answer God’s intention in them.

Let them know that their prophets, if they give them warning of judgments approaching, deliver nothing to them but what they have received from the Lord, to be delivered to his people. (1.) God makes it known beforehand to the prophets; (v. 7.) Surely the Lord Jehovah will do nothing, none of that evil in the city spoken of, (v. 6.) but he reveals it to his servants the prophets, though to others it is groundless, a tissue of fancies, as of what they do, who make light of the warnings which the prophets give them, in God’s name. Observe, God’s prophets are his servants, whom he employs to go on his errands to the children of men. The secret of God is with them; it is in some sense with all the righteous, (Prov. iii. 32.) with all that fear God, (Ps. xxv. 14.) but in a peculiar manner with the prophets, to whom the Spirit of prophecy is a Spirit of revelation.

It had put honour enough upon prophets, if it had been only said, that sometimes God is pleased to reveal to his prophets what he designs to do; but it speaks something very great, to say that he doeth nothing, but what he reveals it to them, as they were the men of his counsel. Shall I hide from Abraham, who is a prophet, the thing which I do? Gen. xviii. 17. God will therefore be sure to reckon with those who put contempt on the prophets whom he puts this honour upon. (2.) The prophets cannot but make that known to the people, which God has made known to them; (v. 8.) The Lord God has spoken; who can but prophesy? His prophets, who have spoken in secret by dreams and visions, cannot but speak in public to the people what they have heard from God. They are so full of those things themselves, so well assured concerning them, and so much affected with them, that they cannot but speak of them; for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth will speak. I believed, therefore have I spoken, Acts iv. 20. Nay, and beside the prophetic impulse which went along with the inspiration, and made the word like a fire in their bones, (Jer. xx. 9.) they received a command from God to deliver what they had been charged with; and they had been false to their trust, if they had not done it. Necessity was laid upon them, as upon the preachers of the gospel, 1 Cor. ix. 16.

7. Let them know that they ought to tremble before God, upon the fair warning he had given them; as they would, (1.) Upon the sounding of a trumpet, to give notice of the approach of the enemy, that all may stand upon their guard, and stand to their arms; Shall a trumpet be blown in the city, and the people not be afraid, or run together? So some read it, v. 6. Will they not immediately come together in a fright, to consider what is best to be done for the common safety? Yet when God by his prophets gives them notice of their danger, and summons them to come, and enlist themselves under his banner, it makes no impression; they will sooner give credit to a watchman on their walls, than to a prophet sent of God; will sooner obey the summons of the siren, than that given them by the Governor of the world. God says, Hearken to the voice of the trumpet, but they will not hearken, nay, and they tell him plainly that they will not, Jer. vi. 17. (2.) Upon the roaring of a lion. God is sometimes as a lion, and a young lion, to the house of Judah, Hos. v. 14. The lion roars before he tears; thus God warns before he punishes; if there be any fear among a poor traveller, (as he did against Samson, Judg. xiv. 5.) he cannot but be put in great consternation; yet the Lord roars out of Zion, (ch. i. 2.) and none are afraid, but they go on securely as if they were in no danger. Note, The fair warning given to a careless world, if it be not taken, will aggravate its condensation another day. The lion roared, and they were not moved with fear to prepare an ark. O the amazing stupidity of an unbelieving world, that will not be wrought upon, no, not by the terror of the Lord.

9. Publish in the palaces at Ashdod, and in the palaces in the land of Egypt, and say, Assemble yourselves upon the mountains of Samaria, and behold the great tumults in the midst thereof, and the oppressed in the midst thereof. 10. For they know not to do right, saith the Lord, who store up violence and robbery in their palaces. 11. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, An adversary there shall be even round about the land; and he shall bring down thy strength from thee, and thy palaces shall be spoiled. 12. Thus saith the Lord, As the shepherd taketh out of the mouth of the lion two legs, or a piece of an ear; so shall the children of Israel be taken out that dwell in Samaria in the corner of a bed, and in Damascus in a couch. 13. Hear ye, and testify in the house of Jacob, saith the Lord God, the God of hosts. 14. That in the day that I shall visit the transgressions of Israel upon him, I will also visit the altars of Beth-el; and the horns of the altar shall be cut off, and fall to the ground. 15. And the houses of ivory shall perish, and the great houses shall have an end, saith the Lord. The Israelites are here again convicted and condemned, and particular notice given of the crimes they are convicted of, and the punishment they are condemned to. I. Notice is given of it to their neighbours. The prophet is ordered to publish it in the palaces of Ashdod, one of the chief cities of the Philistines; nay, the summons must go further, even to the palaces in the land of Egypt; the great men of both those nations that dwell in the palaces, that are inquisitive concerning the affairs of the neighbouring nations, and are conversant with the public business, let them assemble themselves upon the mountains of Samaria, v. 9. There, upon a throne high and lifted up, the judgment is set; Samaria is the criminal that is to be tried, let them be present at the trial, for it shall be (as other trials are) public, in the face of the country; let them make an appointment to meet there from all parts, to judge between God and his tyrant. God appeals to all impartial righteous men, Ezek. xxiii. 45. They will all subscribe to the equity of his proceedings, when they see how the case stands. Note, God's controversies with sinners do not fear a scrutiny; even Philistines and Egyptians will be made to see, and say, that the ways of the Lord are equal, but our ways are inequal. They are likewise summoned to attend, not only those that are in witness against them, and be witnesses for him that deals fairly, but that they may themselves take warning; for if judgment begin at the house of God, as they see it does, what shall be the end of those that are strangers to him? 1 Pet. iv. 17. If this be done in a green tree, what shall be done in a dry? Or, this intimates that the sin of Israel had been so notorious, that the neighbouring nations could only come in witnesses against them, and therefore it was fit that their punishment should be so. If it could have been concealed, we would have said, Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Ashkelon; but why should their friends consult their reputation, when they themselves do not consult it? If they are grown impudent in sin, let them bear the shame; publish it in Ashdod, in Eccl. iv.

1. Let them see how black the charge is, and how well proved; let them observe the behaviour of the inhabitants of Samaria, let them look off from the adjacent hills, and they may see how rude and boisterous they are, and hear how loud the cry of their sin is, as was that of Sodom. (1.) Look into their streets, and you will see nothing but rict and disorder, great tumults in the midst thereof; reason and justice are upon all occasions run down by the noise and fury of an outrageous mob; the dominion of which is the sin and shame of any people, and is likely to be their ruin. (2.) Look into their prisons, and you see them filled with injured innocents; the oppressed are in the midst thereof; thrown down and crushed by their oppressors, overpowered in the midst thereof; reason and justice are upon all occasions run down by the noise and fury of an outrageous mob; the dominion of which is the sin and shame of any people, and is likely to be their ruin. (3.) Look into their courts of justice, and they who preside in those courts, know not to do right, because they have always been accustomed to do wrong; they act as if they had no notion at all of the thing called justice, are in no care to do justice themselves, or to see that others do justice. (4.) Look into their treasures and stores, and you see them replenished with violence and robbery, with that which was unjustly got, and is still unjustly kept; thus they have heaped treasure together for the last days, but it will prove a treasure of wrath against the day of wrath. It may well be said, Those know not to do right, who think to enrich themselves by doing wrong.

2. Let them see how heavy the doom is, and how well executed, v. 11, 12. (1.) Their country shall be invaded and ruined; and observe how the punishment answers to the sin. (2.) Great tumults are in the midst of the land, and therefore an adversary shall be even round about the land; the Assyrian forces shall surround it, and break in upon it on every side. Note, When sin is harboured and indulged in the midst of a people, they can expect no other than that adversaries should be round about them, so that, go which way they will, they go into the mouth of danger, Luke xix. 43. (2.) They strengthened themselves in their wickedness, but their strength shall be broken; they shall, like the Assyrians, be dashed to pieces, even away from them, that strength which they abused in oppressng the poor, and doing violence to all about them. Note, That power which is made an instrument of unrighteousness, will justly be brought down and broken. (3.) They stored up robbery in their palaces, and therefore their palaces shall be spoiled; for what is got and kept wrongfully, will not be kept long, it shall be no protection to fraud and oppression; but the greatest of men, if they have spoiled others, shall themselves be spoiled, for the Lord is the Avenger of all such. (2.) Their countrymen shall not escape, v. 12. They shall be in the hands of the enemy, as a lamb in the mouth of a lion, all devoured and eaten up, and they shall be the spoil of the enemy, who shall make no more of them than if they had done no more than to escape, so as neither to fall by the sword nor go into captivity, yet they shall be very few, and those of the meanest and least considerable, like two legs, or shanks, of a lamb, or, it may be, a piece of an ear, which the lion drops, or the shepherd takes from him, when he has eaten the whole body; so, perhaps, here and there one may escape from them. 4. If, indeed, the great king of Assyria shall fall upon them both, but none to make any account of: and those that do escape, it shall be with the utmost difficulty and hazard, by hiding themselves in the corner of a bed or under the bed’s feet; which intimates that their spirits shall be quite cowed and broken, and they shall sneeze shamefully in the time of danger; they shall not hide under the bed, or in the corner of a bed, or the piece of a bed, such as poor people must be content with. They shall very narrowly escape; as it is foretold concerning the last destruction of Jerusalem, that there shall be two in a bed together, one taken, and the other left. Note, When God’s judgments come forth against a people with commission, it will be in vain to think of escaping them. Some make their dwelling in the corner of a bed, and in a couch, to speak their present security and sensuality; they are as at ease, as in a bed or on a couch, but when God comes to contend with them, he shall make them uneasy, shall take them away out of the bed of their sloth and slumber; those that stretch themselves lazily upon their couches when God’s judgments are abroad, shall go captive with the first that go captive.

II. Notice is given of it to themselves, v. 13. Let this be testified, and heard, in the house of Jacob, among all the seed of Israel, for it is spoken by the Lord God, the God of hosts, who has authority to pass this sentence, and ability to execute it; let them know from him, that the day is at hand, when God will visit the transgressions of Israel upon him: when he will inquire into them, and reckon for them: there will come a day of visitation, a day of punishment, and in that day, all those things they are proud of, and put confidence in, shall fail them, and so they shall smart for the sins they have been guilty of about them.

1. Wo to their altars, for God will visit them. He will inquire into the sins they have been guilty of at their altars, and bring into the account all their superstition and idolatry, all their expenses on their false gods, and all their expectations from them; and he will lay the altars themselves under the marks of his displeasure; for the horns of the altar shall be cut off, and fall to the ground, and with them the altar itself demolished, and broken to pieces. We find the altar at Bethel prophesied against, (1 Kings xiii. 2.) and immediately rent; (v. 3.) and that prophecy fulfilled when Josiah burnt men’s bones upon it, 2 Kings xxiii. 15, 16. This here seconds that prophecy, and seems to point at the same event. Note, If men will not destroy idolatrous altars, God will, and with those with that had them in veneration. Some make the horns of the altar to signify all those things which they flee to for refuge, and trust in, and which they make their sanctuary: they shall all be cut off, so that they shall have nothing to take hold of.

2. Wo to their houses, for God will visit them too. He will inquire into the sins they have been guilty of in their houses, the robbery they have stored up in their houses, the luxury in which they lived; and (v. 15.) I will smite the winter-house with the summer-house. Their nobility, and gentry, and rich merchants, had their winter-houses in the city, and their summer-houses in the country; so nice were they in guarding against the inconveniences of the winter, when the country was thought too cold, and of the summer, when it was thought too hot; though the climate of that good land was so temperate, like that of ours, that neither the cold nor heat was ever in extremity. They indulged a foolish affectation of change and variety; but God will, either by war, or by the earthquake, smite both the winter-house and the summer-house; neither shall serve to shelter them from his judgments; 11 houses of ivory, so called because either the cells, or wainscot, or some of the ornaments of them, were edged or inlaid with ivory;) those shall perish, shall be burnt or pulled down, and the great houses shall have an end, the most splendid and spacious houses, the houses of their great men, they shall no longer be, or, at least, no longer theirs. Note, The pomp and pleasantness of man’s house will be so far from amusing when God’s judgments begin, that it will make them the more grievous and vexatious; as their extravagance about them will be put to the score of their sins and follies.

CHAP. IV.

In this chapter, 1. The oppressors in Israel are threatened for their oppression of the poor, v. 1-5. II. The idolaters in Israel, being judged to Idols, are given up to their own heart’s lusts, v. 4, 5, 11. III. All the sins of Israel are aggrivated from their incorrigibleness in them, and their refusal to return and reform, notwithstanding the various rebukes of Providence, and the warnings of God’s prophets, v. 6, 9, 11. IV. They are invited yet at length to humble themselves before God, since it is impossible for them to make their part good against him, v. 12, 13.

1. HEAR this word, ye kine of Bashan, that are in the mountain of Samatransgress; at Gilgal multiply transgression; and bring your sacrifices every morning, and your tithes after three years. 5. And offer a sacrifice of thanksgiving with leaven, and proclaim and publish the free-offerings; for this liketh you, O ye children of Israel, saith the Lord God.

It is here foretold, in the name of God, that oppressors shall be humbled, and idolaters shall be hardened.

1. That proud oppressors shall be humbled for their oppressions; for he that does wrong, shall receive according to the wrong that he has done. Now observe,

How their sin is described, v. 1. They are compared to the kine of Bashan, which were a breed of cattle very large and strong, especially if, though bred there, they were fed upon the mountain of Samaria, where the pastures were extraordinarily fat. Amos had been a herdsman, and he speaks in the dialect of his calling, comparing the rich and great men, that lived in luxury and wantonness, to the kine of Bashan, which were wanton and unruly, would not only feed within the bounds of their own pasture, but broke through the hedges, broke down all the fences, and trespassed upon the neighbouring grounds; and not only so, but pushed and gored the lesser cattle that were not a match for him.

They that had their summer-houses upon the mountains of Samaria, when they went thither for fresh air, were as mischievous as the kine upon the mountains of Bashan, and as injurious to those about them. (1.) They oppress the poor and needy themselves; they crush them, to squeeze something to themselves out of them. They take advantage of their poverty, and necessity, and inability to help themselves, to make them poorer, and more necessitous than they are. They make use of their power as judges and magistrates for the invading of men's rights and properties, the poor excepted; for they made no conscience of robbing even the hospital. (2.) They are in conference with them that do so. They say to their masters, to the masters of the poor, that abuse them, and violently take from them what they have, when they ought to have relieved them, they say to them, "Bring, and let us drink; let us feast with you upon the gains of your oppression, and then we will protect you, and stand by you in it, and regard it as an affair of the poor against you." Note, What is got by extortion is commonly made use of as provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof; and therefore men are tyrants to the poor, because they are slaves to their appetites; Bring, and let us drink; is the language of those that crush the needy, as if the tears of the oppressed, mingled with their wine, made it drink the better. And by their associations for drinking, and reveling, and an excess of riot, they strengthen their combinations for persecution and oppression, and harden the hearts of one another in it.

2. How their punishment is described; (v. 2, 3.) God will take them away with hooks, and their posterity with fish-hooks: he will send the Assyrian army upon them that shall make a prey of them, shall glut their drinking and reveling, and an excess of riot, but shall angle for particular persons, and take them prisoners and captives as with hooks and fish-hooks, shall draw them out of their own land as fish are drawn out of the water, which is their element, them and their children with them; or, They in their day shall be drawn out by one victorious enemy, and their posterity in their day by another; so that by a succession of destroying judgments they shall at length be wholly extirpated. These kine of Bashan thought they could no more be drawn out with a hook and a cord than the Leviathan can, Job xxxi. 1, 2. But God will make them know that he has a hook for their nose, and a bridle for their jaws, Isa. xxxvii. 29. The enemy shall take them away as easily as the fisherman takes away the little fish, and shall make it their sport and recreation. When the enemy has made himself master of Samaria, then, (1.) Some shall attempt to escape by goy out; Ye shall go out at the breaches made in the wall of the city, every one to his corner, and for her, to shift for her own safety, and make the best of their way; and now the unruly kine of Bashan are tame, and are themselves crushed, as they crushed the poor and needy. Note, Those to whom God has given a good pasture, if they are wanton in it, will justly be turned out of it; and those who will not be kept within the hedges of God's precept, forfeit it the benefit of the hedge of God's protection, and will be forced in vain to fly through the breaches they have themselves fearfully made in that hedge. (2.) Others shall think to shelter themselves, or, at least, their best effects, in the palace, because it is a castle well fortified and a garrison well manned; Ye shall throw yourselves, (so some read it,) or throw them, your posterity, your children, or whatever else it is dear to you, into the palace, and you may find it ready to be seized. Note, What is got by oppression cannot long be enjoyed with satisfaction.

3. How their sentence to this punishment is ratified; The Lord God has sworn it by his holiness; he had often said it, and they regarded it not, they thought God and his prophets did but jest with them; therefore he swears it in his wrath, and what he has sworn he will not revoke. He swears by his holiness, that attribute of his which is so much his glory, and which is so much glorified in the punishment of wicked people; for as sure as God is a holy God, they that plough iniquity, and sow wickedness, shall reap the same.

11. That obstinate idolaters shall be hardened in their idolatries; (v. 4, 5.) Come to Bethel, and transgress. It is spoken ironically; "Do so, take your course, multiply your transgressions by multiplying your sacrifices, for this liketh you; but what will ye do in the end hereof?" Here we see, 1. How intent they were upon the service of their idols, and how willing they were to be at cost upon them; they brought their sacrifices, and their tithes, and their free-offerings, hoping that therein they should be accepted of God, but it was all an abomination to him. The profuseness of idolaters in the service of their false gods may shame our strait-handedness in the service of the true and living God. 2. How they mimicked God's institutions. They had their daily sacrifice at the altar of Bethel, as God had at his altar; they had their thank-offerings as God had; therefore he swears it in his wrath, and what he has sworn he will not revoke. He swears by his holiness, that attribute of his which is so much his glory, and which is so much glorified in the punishment of wicked people; for as sure as God is a holy God, they that plough iniquity, and sow wickedness, shall reap the same.

3. How well pleased they were with these services themselves; This liketh you, ye children of Israel. So ye love. What was their own invention, their own contrivance, and thought, must therefore be pleasing to God, because it was agreeable to their own fancy. 4. How they were appeased with it; "Come to Bethel, to Gilgal, bring the sacrifices and tithes yourselves, proclaim and publish to the nation the free-offerings, pressing them to bring in abundance of such, go on in this way," that is, (1.) "It is plain that you are not afraid to go on it, you do it in your own science say to the contrary." (2.) "Your prophets shall let you alone in it, and not admonish you as they have done, for it is to no purpose; Letis man
6. And I also have given you cleanness of teeth in all your cities, and want of bread in all your places; yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the Lord. 7. And also I have withheld the rain from you, when there were yet three months to the harvest: and I caused it to rain upon one city, and caused it not to rain upon another city: one piece was rained upon, and the piece whereupon it rained not withered. 8. So two or three cities wandered unto one city, to drink water; but they were not satisfied: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the Lord. 9. I have smitten you with blasting and mildew: when your gardens, and your vineyards, and your olive-trees increased, the palmer-worm devoured them: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the Lord. 10. I have sent among you the pestilence, after the manner of Egypt: your young men have I slain with the sword, and have taken away your horses; and I have made the sink of your camps to come up unto your nostrils: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the Lord. 11. I have overthrown some of you, as God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and ye were as a firebrand plucked out of the burning: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the Lord. 12. Therefore thus will I do unto thee, O Israel: and because I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel. 13. For, lo, he that formed the mountains, and createth the wind, and declareth unto man what is his thought, that maketh the morning darkness, and spreadeth upon the high places of the earth, The Lord, the God of hosts, is his name.

Here,

I. God complains of his people's ingratitude under the judgments which he had brought upon them, in order to their humiliation and reformation. He had by several tokens intimated to them his displeasure, with this design, that they might by repentance make their peace with him; but it had not that effect. It is five times repeated in these verses, as the burthen of the charge, "Yet have you not returned unto me, saith the Lord; you have been several times corrected, but in vain; you are not exonerated, there is no sign of amendment. You have been sent for by one messenger after another, but you have not come back; you have not come home."

1. This intimates that that which God designed in all his providential rebukes, was, to reduce them to their allegiance, to influence them to return to him. 2. That, if they had returned to their God, they should have been accepted, he would have bid them welcome, and the troubles they were in should have been removed. It was no reason why God sent further troubles, was, because former troubles had not done the work, otherwise it is no pleasure to the Almighty that he should afflict. 2. That God was grieved at their obstinacy, and took it unkindly that they should force him to do that which he did so unwillingly; "You have not returned to me from whom you were ejected, as a token that you are in covenant, to me who stand ready to receive you, to me who have so often called you."

Now, to aggravate their incorrigibility, and to justify himself in inflicting greater judgments, he recounts the lesser judgments with which he had tried to bring them to repentance.

(1.) There had sometimes been a severity of punishments, though not of such a visible or manifest kind as was the case of Egypt. 6. "I have given you cleanness of teeth in all your cities, for you had no meat to chew, whereby your teeth might be fouled;" especially no flesh, which dirties the teeth; or emptiness of teeth, nothing to fill your mouths with. "Bread, the staff of life, has been wanting, for you have sown much and brought in little;" as Hdg. i. 9. Some think this refers to the seven years' famine that was in Elshah's time, which we read of, 2 Kings vii. 1. Now when God thus took away their corn in the season thereof, because they had prepared it for Baal, they should have said, We will go and return to our first band, having field dear for leaving him; but it had not that effect; they have not returned to me, saith the Lord.

(2.) Sometimes they had wanted rain, and then of course they wanted the fruits of the earth. This evil was of the Lord; I have withholden the rain from you. God has the key of the clouds, and if he shut up, who can open? v. 7. The rain was withheld when there were yet three months to the harvest, at the time when they used to have it; and therefore the withholding of it was an extraordinary thing, and to the curse of nature, which they had by their sins, they must therein own the hand of the God of nature; and it was at a time when they most needed it, and therefore the want of it was a very sore judgment, and blasted their expectations of a crop at harvest.

And one circumstance which made this very remarkable, was, that when there were some places that wanted rain, and withered for want of it, there were other places near adjoining that had it in abundance. God caused it to rain upon one city, and not upon another, in the same country; nay, he caused it to rain upon one field, one piece of a field, and it was thereby made fruitful and flourishing, but on the next field, on the other side of the hedge, nay, on another part of the same field, it rained not at all, and it was so long without rain, that all the produce of places perished.

No doubt this was literally true, and there were many instances of it, which were generally taken notice of. Now, [1.] By this it appeared that the withholding of the rain was not casual, but by a divine direction and disposal; that the cloud which waters the earth is turned round about by the counsel of God, to do whatsoever he coasts for it, whether for correction, or for his land, or for mercy, Job xxxvii. 12, 18. Rain does not go by planets, (as common people speak,) but as God sends it by his winds. [2.] We have reason to think that those cities on which it rained not, were the most infamous for wickedness, such as Bethel and Gilgal,
(v. 4.) and that those on which it rained, were such as retained something of religion and virtue among them. And so in the town-fields it rained, or rained not, upon the piece, according as the owner was; for we are sure the curse of the Lord is in the house, and upon the ground, of the wicked, but he blesses the habitation of the just, and his field is a field that the Lord has blessed. [3.] It would be the greater grief and vexation to those whose fields withered for want of rain, than to have them watered and flourishing. My servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry, Isa. lxv. 13. The wicked shall see it, and be grieved. Probably, those that were oppressed, were rained upon, and so they recovered their losses, while the oppressors withered, and so lost their gains. [4.] Yet as to the nation in general, it was a mixture of mercy with the judgment, and there were many among them that were sorry for their miseries, and encouraged them to hope for all mercy, in their returns to God, since there was so much mercy even in God’s rebukes of them. But because they did not make a good use of this gracious alay to the extremity of the judgment, they had not the benefit of it, which otherwise they might have had, for (v. 8.) Two or three cities would have been at uncertainty, as beggars, unto one city, to drink water, and went to their own city home with them, but they were not satisfied; it was but here and there one city that had water, while many wanted, and then it was not, as usual, Usus communis aquarum— Water is free to all; they that had it, had occasion for it, or knew not how soon they might, and therefore could afford but little to them that wanted, saying, Least there be not enough for you and us. They that came drank water, but they were not satisfied, because they drank it by measure, and with astonishment; and they that drink of this water, shall thirst again, John iv. 18. They were not satisfied, because their desires were greedy, and what they had God did not bless to them, Hag. i. 6.

And now, one would think, when they met with all this disappointment, they should have considered their ways, and repented; but it had not that effect; “Yet have ye not returned to me, no, not so much as to pray in a right manner for the former and latter rain,” Zech. x. 1. See the folly of carnal hearts; they will wander from city to city, from one creature to another, in pursuit of satisfaction, and still they miss of it; they labour for that which satisfies not, (Isa. xlix. 6.) for their souls hunger after knowledge of God, will not incline their ear to him in whom they might have satisfaction. The preaching of the gospel is as rain; God sometimes blesses one place with it more than another; some countries, some cities are, like Gideon’s fleece, wet with this dew, while the ground about is dry; all waters where this rain is wanting; but it were well if people were but as wise for their souls as they are for their bodies; and perhaps have not this rain near them, they would go and seek it where it is to be had; if they seek aright, they shall not seek in vain.

(5.) In these and other judgments some were remarkably cut off, and made monuments of justice, others were remarkably spared, and made monuments of mercy, the setting of which the one over against the other, one would have thought likely to work upon them, but it had not its effect, v. 11. [1.] Some were quite ruined, their families destroyed, and themselves in them; I have overthrown some of you, as God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, perhaps consumed them with lightning, as Sodom was, or the houses were, some other way, burnt to the ground, and the inhabitants in them. Sodom and Gomorrah, are said to be condemned with an overthrow, and so made an example, 2 Pet. ii. 6. God had threatened to destroy the whole land with such an overthrow as that of Sodom, Deut. xxix. 23. But he began with some particular persons. It takes first the flocks, then the sheep then some particular persons, whose sins went before-hand to judgment. [2.] Others very narrowly escaped; Ye were many of you as a firebrand flicked out of the burning, like Lot out of Sodom, when the fire had already kindled upon you; and yet you hate sin never the more for the danger it has brought you to, nor love God ever the more for the deliverance he wrought for you; you that have been so signally delivered, and in such a distinguishing way, have not returned unto me. II. God, in the close, calls upon his people, now at length, in this their day, to understand the things that belong to their peace, before they were hid from their eyes, v. 12, 13. Observe here,

1. How God threatens them with sorer judgments than many of them are under; yet he left them; for seeing you have been brought upon by correction hitherto, thus will I do unto thee, O Israel. He does not say how he will do, but it shall be something worse than had come yet. John v. 14. Or, “Thus I will go on to do unto thee, following one judgment with another, like the plagues of Egypt, till I have made a full end.” Nothing else but reformation will prevent the ruin of a sinful people; if they turn not to him, his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still. I will punish you yet seven times more, if you will not be reformed; so it was written in the law, Lev. xxvi. 23, 24.

2. How he awakens them therefore to think of making their peace with God: "Seeing I will do this unto thee, and there is no remedy, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel;" that is, (1.) Consider how unsafe thou art to meet him as a combatant. Some make it to be spoken by way of irony or challenge; (2.) Prepare to meet God, who is coming forth to contend with thee; what armour of proof canst thou put on? What courage canst thou steel thyself with? Ahas, it is but pitting briars and thorns before a consuming Fire, Isa. xxvii. 4, 5. Art thou able with less than 10,000, to meet him that comes forth against thee more than 20,000? Lake xiv. 31. (2.) "Resolve therefore to meet him as a penitent, as a humble supplicant; to meet him as thy God, in covenant with thee, to submit, and stand it out no longer." We must prepare to meet God in the way of his judgments, Isa. xxvi. 8., to take hold on his strength, that we may make peace. Note, Since we cannot flee from God, we are concerned to prepare to meet him; and therefore he gives us warning, that we may prepare. When we are to meet him in his ordinances, we must prepare to meet him, prepare to seek him.

3. How he sets forth the greatness and power of God as a reason why we should prepare to meet him, v. 13. If he be such a God as he is here described to be, it is folly to contend with him, and our duty and interest to make our peace with him; it is good having him our Friend, and bad having him our Enemy. (1.) He formed the mountains, made the earth, the strongest, statelyest parts of it, and by the word of his power still upholdeth it and them. Whatever are the products of the everlasting mountains, he formed them; whatever salvation is hoped for the winds and the seas obey him. (2.) He declares unto man what is his thoughts; he makes known his counsel by his servants the prophets to the children of men, the thought of his justice against impenitent sinners, and the thought of good he thinks toward those that repent. He can also make known, for he perfectly knows, the thought that is in man's heart; he understands it afar off, and in the day of confession will set the evil thoughts among the other sins of sinners in order before them. (4.) He often makes the morning darkness, by thick clouds overspreading the sky immediately after the sun rose bright and glorious; so when we look for prosperity and joy, he can dash our expectations with some unlooked-for calamity. (5.) He treads upon the high places of the earth; is not only higher than the highest, but he does tread upon all these, and upon the idols that were worshipped in the highest places. (6.) Jehovah, the God of hosts is his name, for he has his being of himself, and is the Fountain of all being, and all the hosts of heaven and earth are at his command. Let us humble ourselves before this God, prepare to meet him, and give all devotedness to make him our God, for happy the people whose God he is, who have all this power engaged for them.

CHAP. V.

The scope of this chapter is to prosecute the exhortation given to Israel in the close of the foregoing chapter, to prepare to meet his God; he here tells them, 1. What preparation they must make; they must seek good, and love it, v. 14, 15. 2. Why they must make this preparation to meet their God. 1. Because of the present deplorable condition they were in, v. 1, 2. 2. Because they had sinned so much as to bring such a condition, v. 7, 10., 12. 3. Because it would be their happiness to seek God, and he was ready to be found of them, v. 8, 9, 14. 4. Because he would proceed, in his wrath, to their utter ruin, if they did not seek him, v. 5, 6, 15, 16, 17. 5. Because all their confidences would fail them, if they did not seek unto God, and make him their Friend. (1.) Their profane contempt of God's judgments. (2.) Their neglect and contempt of church-privileges, and in a course of holy duties, would not be their protection, while all along they had kept up their idolatrous customs, v. 23, 27. They have therefore no way left them to save themselves, but by repentance and reformation.

1. HEAR ye this word which I take up against you, even a lamentation, O house of Israel. 2. The virgin of Israel is fallen; she shall no more rise: she is forsaken upon her land; there is none to raise her up. 3. For thus saith the Lord God, The city that went out by a thousand shall leave a hundred, and that which went forth by a hundred shall leave ten, to the house of Israel.

This chapter begins, as these two next foregoing began, with, Hear this word. Where God has a mouth to speak, we must have an ear to hear; it is our duty, it is our interest; yet so stupid are most men, that they need to be again and again called upon to hear the word of the Lord; to give audience, to receive attendance, and to make good hearing. This awakening word must be heard and heeded, as well as words of comfort and peace; the word that is taken up against us, as well as that which makes for us; for, whether we hear or forbear, the word of God shall take effect, and not a title of it shall fall to the ground. It is the word which I take up—not the prophet only, but the God that sent him. It is the word that the Lord has spoken, ch. xiii. 1.

The word to be heard is a lamentation, a lamentable account of the present calamitous state of the kingdom of Israel, and a lamentable prediction of its utter destruction. Their condition is sad; The virgin of Israel is fallen, (v. 2.) is come down from what she was; that state, though not pure and chaste as a virgin, yet was beautiful and gay, and had its charms; she looked high upon herself, and was courted by many as a virgin; but she is fallen into contempt and poverty, and is universally slighted; nay, and their condition is helpless; She shall no more rise, shall never recover her former dignity again. God had lately begun to cut Israel short, (2 Kings x. 32.) and because they repeated not, it was not long before he cut Israel short, thus tranquillizing them.

1. Their princes, that should have helped them up, were disabled; She is forsaken upon her land. Not only those she was in alliance with abroad failed her, but her friends at home deserted her; she had not been carried captive into a strange land, if she had not first been forsaken upon her own bed, and thrust to ground there, and all her true interests abandoned by those that should have had them at heart. There is none to raise her up, none that can do it, none that cares to lend her a hand.

2. Their people, that should have helped them up, were diminished, v. 3. The city that had a militia a thousand strong, and in the beginning of the war, had furnished out a thousand effective men, able-bodied and well armed, when they come to review their troops after the battle, shall find but a hundred left; and, in proportion, the city that sent out a hundred, shall have but ten come back; so great a slaughter shall be made, and so few left to the house of Israel for the public service and safety.

Safely one in ten shall escape of the hands that should relieve this abject, this destitute nation. Note, The lessening of the numbers of God's spiritual nation by death or desertion, is just mercy for lamentation; for by whom shall Jacob arise, by whom shall the decays of pietie be repaired, when he is thus made small.

4. For thus saith the Lord unto the house of Israel, Seek ye me, and ye shall live. 5. But seek not Beth-el, nor enter into Gilgal, and pass not to Beer-sheba: for Gilgal shall surely go into captivity, and Beth-el shall come to nought. 6. Seek the Lord, and ye shall live; lest he break out like fire in the house of Joseph, and devour it, and there be none to quench it in Beth-el. 7. Ye who turn judgment to wormwood, and leave off righteousness in the earth, Seek him that maketh the seven stars and Orion, and turneth the shadow of death into the morning, and maketh the day dark with night: that calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth: The Lord is his name: 8. That strengtheneth the spoiled against the strong, so that the spoiled shall come against the fortress. 10. They hate him that rebuketh in the gate, and abhor him that speaketh uprightly. 11. Forasmuch, therefore, as your treading is upon the poor, and ye take from him burdens of wheat; ye have built houses of hewn stone, but ye shall not dwell in them; ye have planted pleasant vineyards, but ye shall not drink wine of them. 12. For I know your manifold transgressions and your mighty sins: they afflict the just, they take a bribe, and they turn aside the poor in the gate from their right. 13. Therefore the prudent shall keep silence in that time; for it is an evil time. 14. Seek good, and not evil, that ye may live; and so the Lord, the God of hosts, shall be with you, as ye have spoken. 15. Hate the evil, and love the good, and establish judgment in the gate: it may be that the Lord God of hosts will be gracious unto the remnant of Joseph.

This is a message from God to the house of Israel in which,

1. They are told of their faults, that they might see what occasion there was for them to repent and reform, and that, when they were called to return, they might not need to ask, Wherein shall we return? God tells them in general, (v. 12.) "I know your manifold transgressions, and your mighty sins; and you shall be made to know them too."

In our penitent reflections upon our sins, we must consider, as God does in his judicial remarks upon them, and will do in the great day, 1. That they are very numerous; they are our manifold transgressions, sins of various kinds, and often repeated. 0 what a multitude of vain and vile thoughts lodge within us! What a multitude of idle, foolish, wicked words have been spoken by us! In what a multitude of instances have we gratified and indulged our corrupt appetites and passions! And how many are our omissions of duty, and in duty! Who can be accountable, but he who transgresses, and is conscious of the transgressions? 2. That some of them are very heinous; they are our mighty sins; sins that are more exceeding sinful in their own nature, and by being committed presumptuously, and with a high hand; sins against the light of nature, flagrant crimes, that are mighty to overpower your convictions, and to pull down judgments upon you.

We speak of some of these mighty sins. 1. They corrupted the worship of God, and turned to idols, that is implied, v. 5. They had sought to Bethel, where one of the golden calves was; they had frequented Gilgal, a place which they chose to set up idols in, because it had been made famous in the days of Joshua by God's wonderful appearances to, and for, his people. Beer-sheba likewise, a place that had been famous in the days of the patriarchs, was now another rendezvous of idols; as we find also, ch. viii. 14. And thither they passed, though it lay at a distance, in the land of Judah. Now, having thus shamefully gone a whoring from God, no doubt they should have felt sentiments concerned to return to him. (2.) They reverted justice among themselves; (v. 7.) "Ye turn judgment to wormwood; ye make your administrations of justice bitter and nauseous, and highly displeasing both to God and man." That fruit is become a weed, a weed in the garden; as nothing is more venerable, nothing more valuable, than justice duly administered, so nothing is more hurtful, nothing more abominable, than designedly doing wrong, under colour and pretence of doing right. Corruptio optimi est pessimum. The best enemies of our nature, because the worst, Ye love righteousness in the earth; as if those that do wrong were accountable to the God of heaven only, and not to the princes and judges of the earth; thus it was as before the flood, when the earth was filled with violence. (3.) They were very oppressive to the poor, and made them poorer; they tread upon the poor, (v. 11.) trampled upon them, hectored over them, profest them their footstool, the most imperious and barbarous to those that were most obsequious and submissive; they cared not what shame and slavery they put them to who were poor, and such as they could get nothing by. That was it that the judges aimed at, nothing but to enrich themselves; and therefore they took from the poor burdens of wheat, took it by extortion, over them, which they their feetstool, the only way no other way to save themselves from being trodden upon, and trodden to dirt, by them, than by presenting to them horse-loads of that corn which they and their families should have had to subsist upon; and they forced them to do it. They took from the poor debts of wheat; so some read it. It was legally due either for rent or for corn lent, but they exacted it with rigour from those who were disabled by the providence of God to pay it, as Neh. v. 2, 5. In demanding and recovering even a just debt, we must take heed lest we act either unjustly or uncharitably. This sin of oppression they are again charged with, (v. 5.) for they speak freely to the end of the law and of the word of justice against those that are the innocent and quiet in the land; they therefore hated men, because they were more righteous than themselves, and he that departed from evil, thereby made himself a prey to them. They take a bribe from the rich to patronize and protect them in oppressing the poor; so that he went away naked, having his right hand then to judge and judgment on his side, be his cause ever so bad. Thus they turn aside the poor in the gate, in the courts of justice, from their right. If the poor sue for their right, who cannot bribe them, or are so honest, that they will not, though they have it ever so clear in view, and ever so near, yet they are turned away from it by their unrighteous sentence, and cannot come at it. And therefore the prudent will keep silence, v. 13. Men will reckon it their prudence, when they are wronged and injured, to be silent, and make no complaints to the magistrates, for it will be to no purpose, they shall not have justice done them. (4.) They were malicious persecutors of God's faithful ministers and people, v. 10. Their hearts were so fully set in to do evil, that the first place they took was to envenom them. By the ministry of the word; by the reading and expounding of the law, and the messages which the prophets delivered to them, in the name of the Lord. They hate him that rebukes in the gate, in the gate of the Lord's house, or in their courts of justice, or in the places of concourse, where wisdom is lifting up her voice, Prov. i. 21. Reprovers in the gate are reprovers by office; these they hated, counting them their enemies because they told them the truth, as Ahab hated Micaiah. They not only despised them, but had an enmity to them, and sought to do them mischief. Those that hate reproof, love ruin. (2.) By the conversation of their honest neighbours. Though things were generally very bad, yet there were some among them that spake uprightly, that made conscience of what they said, and as it was their praise, so it was the shame of those that spake deceitfully, and condemned them, as Noah's faith condemned the unbelief of the old world, and for that reason they abhorred them; they were such inveterate enemies to the thing called honesty, that they could not endure the sight of an honest man. (5.) The sense of the common interest of mankind, will love and value such as speak uprightly, for veracity is the bond of human society; to what a pitch of folly and madness then were they arrived, who, having banished all notions of justice out of their own hearts, would have them banished out of the world too, and so put mankind into a state of war for v. 11. First, him that think it dangerous to complain, and therefore shall keep silence; this was one way in which they afflicted the just, that by false suggestions and strained innuendoes they made men offenders for a word; (Isa. xix. 21.) and therefore the prudent, who were wise as serpents, because they knew not how what they said might be misunderstood and misrepresented, were so cautious as to say nothing, lest they should run themselves into a tempest, because it was an evil time. Note, Through the iniquity of the times, as good men are hid, so good men are silent, and it is their wisdom to be so; little said soon amended. But it is their comfort that they may show the meek, when they are persecuted, they can speak freely. Secondly, They shall think it fruitless to reproove. They see what wickedness is committed, and their spirits are stirred up, as Paul's at Athens; but they shall think it prudent not to bear an open testimony against it, because it is to no purpose. They are joined to their idols, let them alone. Let no man strive or rebuke another; for it is not of God, but casting the reprover into contempt. No men will say to a bold reprover, as Eranmus to Luther, Abi in cellam, et die, Missere mei, Domine—Away to thy cell, and cry, Have mercy on me, O Lord. Let grave lessons and counsels be kept for better men, and better times. And there is a time to keep silence as well as to speak, Excl. iii. 7. Evil times will not bear plain dealing; that is, evil men will not. And the men the prophet here speaks of, had reason to think themselves evil men indeed, when wise and good men thought it in vain to speak to them, and were afraid of having anything to do with them.

II. They are told of their danger, and what judgments they lay exposed to for their sins. 1. The places of their idolatry are in danger of being ruined out of the first place, v. 6. The position of their idolatry, shall go into captivity; not only its inhabitants, but its images, and Bethel with its golden calf, shall come to naught. The victorious enemy shall make nothing of it, so easily shall it be spoiled; and shall bring it to nothing, so effectually shall it be spoiled. Idols were always vanity, and things of naught, and so they shall prove when God appears to abolish them. 2. The body of the kingdom is in danger of being ruined with them, v. 6. There is danger, lest, if you seek him not in time, he break out like a fire in the house of Joseph, and devour it; for our God is a righteous Judge, is a consuming fire, and the men of Israel, as criminals, are stubble before him; wo to those that make themselves fuel to the fire of God's wrath! It follows, And there shall be none to quench it in Bethel; there their idols were, and their idolatrous priests, thither they brought their sacrifices, and there they offered up their prayers; but God tells them that when the fire of his judgments kindles upon them, all the gods they served at Bethel should not be able to quench it, should not turn away the judgment, or be any relief to them under it. Thus they shall make an object of the world's judgment, be insufficient to protect them, when God comes to reckon with them for their spiritual idolatry. 3. What they have got by oppression and extortion shall be taken from them; (v. 11.) "You have built houses of hemin stone, which you thought would be lasting; but you shall not dwell in them, for your enemies shall burn them down, or possess them for themselves, or take them for spoil." But pleasant vineyards, have contrived how to make them every way agreeable, and have promised yourselves many a pleasant walk in them; but you shall be forced to walk off, and shall never drink wine of them. The law had tenderly provided that if a man had built a house, or planted a vineyard, he should be at liberty to take it with him, Deut. xxiii. 5, 6. But now the necessity would be so urgent, that it would not be allowed, all must go to the battle, and many of those who had lately been building and planting, should fall in battle, and never enjoy what they had been labouring for. What is not honesty got is not likely to be long enjoyed.

III. They ought to be warned and have great encouragement to set about it in good earnest, and good reason. The duties here prescribed to them are, godliness and honesty, seriousness in their applica-

But seek the Lord; (v. 6, 8.) inquire after him, inquire of him; seek to know his mind as your rule, to secure his favour as your felicity." To press this exhortation, we are bid to consider, (1.) What we shall get by seeking God; it will be our life, we shall find him, and shall be happy in him. So he tells them himself; (v. 4.) Seek ye me, and ye shall live. So the prophet tells them, and seek the Lord, and ye shall live. They that seek perishing gods, shall perish with them, (v. 5.) but they that seek the living God, shall live with him: "You shall be delivered from the killing judgments which you are threatened with; your nation shall live, shall recover from its present languishings; your souls shall live, you shall be sanctified and comforted, and made for ever blessed; Ye shall live." (2.) What a God he is, whom we are to seek, v. 8, 9.

1. He is a God of almighty power himself. The idols were impotent things, could do neither good nor evil, and therefore it was folly either to fear or trust them; but the God of Israel does everything, and can do any thing, and therefore we ought to seek to him; he challenges our homage, who has all power in his hand, and it is our interest to have him on our side. Divers proofs and instances are here given of God's power, as Creator, in the kingdom of nature, as both founding and governing that kingdom. Compare ch. iv. 13. First, The stars are the work of his hands; those stars which the heathens worshipped, (v. 26.) the stars of your God, those stars are God's creatures for your service. He made the seven stars and Orion, two very remarkable constellations, which Amos, a herdsman, while he kept his cattle by night, had particularly observed the motions of. He made them at the first, he still makes them to be what they are to this earth; and either binds or looses the sweet influences of Pleiades and Orion, the two constellations here mentioned, (Job xxxviii. 31.—39.) to which passages Amos seems to refer. Secondly, The constant succession of day and night is under his direction, and is kept up by his power and providence. It is he that turns the night (which is dark as the shadow of death,) into the morning by the rising of the sun, and by the setting of the sun makes the day dark, and the darkness of night; he makes the same, as are virtues, easily turn affliction and sorrow into prosperity and joy, but can as easily turn the prosperity of presumptuous sinners into darkness, into utter darkness. Thirdly, The rain rises and falls as he appoints. He calls for the waters of the sea; out of them vapours are drawn up by the heat of the sun, which gather into clouds, and are poured out upon the face of the earth, to water it, and make it fruitful. This was the mercy that had been withheld from them of late; (ch. iv. 7.) and therefore to whom should they apply themselves but to him who had power to give it? For all the vanities of the heathen could not give rain, nor could the heavens of themselves give showers, Jer. xiv. 22. It is God that has made these things; Jehovah is his name; the name by which the God of nature, the God of the whole earth, has made himself known to his people Israel, and covenanted with them.

2. He is a God of almighty power himself, so he gives strength and power unto his people that seek him, and renew strength to those that had lost it, if they wait upon him for it; for (v. 9.) he strengthens the spoiled against the strong, to such a degree, that the spoiled come against the fortress, and make bold and brave attacks upon those that had spoiled them. So the Lord, that if they do so, they shall find him able to retrieve their affairs, when they are brought to the lowest ebb; though they are the spoiled, and their enemies are the strong, if they can but engage God for them, they shall soon recruit so as the next time to be not only the aggressors, but the conquerors; they come against the fortress, make reprisals, and become the destroyed. They are here exhorted to be honest and just in their dealings with men, (v. 14, 15.) where observe,

(1.) The duty required; Seek good, and not evil. Hate the evil, and love the good, and establish judgment in the gate; re-establish it there, whence it has been banished, v. 7. Note, Things are not so bad but that they may be amended, if the right course be taken; we must not despise but that grievances may be redressed, and abuses rectified; justice may yet triumph there where injustice tyrannizes. In order to this, good must be loved and sought, evil must be hated, and no longer sought. We must love good principles, and adhere to them, love to do good, and abound in it; love good people, and good conversation, and good duties; and, whatever good we do, we must do it from a principle of love; do it of choice and with delight. They who thus love good, will seek it, will contrive to do all the good they can, inquire for opportunities to do it, and endeavour it to the utmost of their power. They will also hate evil, will abhor the thought of doing an unjust thing, and abstain from all appearance of it.

In vain do we pretend to seek God in our devotions, if we do not seek good in our whole conversations. (2.) The reasons annexed. [1.] This is the sure way to be happy ourselves, and to have the continual presence of God with us. "Seek good and not evil, that you may live, may escape the punishment of the evil you have sought and loved; (righteousness delivereth from trouble, v. 10.)" he who is in the favour of God, which is your life, which is better than life itself; that you may have comfort in yourselves, and may live to some good purpose. You shall live, for so the Lord God of hosts shall be with you, and be your Life." Note, Those that keep in the way of duty, have the presence of God with them, as the God of hosts, a God of almighty power, and may have it, and may have it as you have gloried; you shall have that really, which, while you went on in unrighteous ways, you only seemed to have, and boasted of as if you had. They that truly repent and re-form, enter into the enjoyment of that comfort which before they had only flattered themselves with the imagination of. Or, "As you have prayed, when you sought the Lord. Live up to your prayers, and you shall have what you pray for." [2.] This is the likeliest way to make the nation happy: "If you seek and love that which is good, you may contribute to the saving of the land from ruin." It may be, the Lord God of hosts will be gracious to the remnant of Joseph; though there is but a remnant left, if God be gracious to that remnant, it will rise to a great nation again; and if some among them turn from sin, especially if judgment be established in the gate, through we cannot be certain, but there is a great probability, that public affairs will take a new and happy turn, and every thing will mend if men mend their lives. Temporal promises are made with an It may be; and our prayers must be made accordingly.

16. Therefore the Lord, the God of hosts, the Lord, saith thus. Wailing shall be in all streets; and they shall say in all the highways, Alas! alas! And they shall call the husbandman to mourning, and such as are skilful of lamentation to wailing. 17. And in all vineyards shall be wailing: for I will pass through thee, saith the Lord. 18. Wo unto you that desire the day of the Lord! to what end is it for you? the day of the Lord is darkness, and not light. 19. As if a man did fleed from a lion, and a bear met him; or went into the house, and leaned his hand on the wall, and a serpent bit him. 20. Shall not the day of the Lord be darkness, and not light? even very dark, and no brightness in it?

I. A very terrible threatened destruction approaching, v. 16, 17. Because they would not take the right course to obtain the favour of God, God would take an effectual course to make them feel the weight of his displeasure. The threatening is introduced with more than ordinary solemnity, to strike an awe upon them; it is not the word of the prophet only, (if so, it might be lighted of,) but it is the Lord Jehovah, who has an infinite, eternal being, it is the God of hosts, who has a boundless, irresistible power, and it is Adonai—the Lord, who has an absolute, incontestable sovereignty, and an universal dominion, is he who says it, who can and will make his words good, and he has said, I. That the land of Israel shall be put in mourning, true mourning; that all places shall be filled with lamentation for the calamities coming upon them. Look into the cities, and wailing shall be in all streets, in the great streets, in the by-streets. Look into the country, and they shall say in all the highways, Alas! alas! we are all undone! The lamentation shall be so great, as not to be confined within doors, nor kept within the bounds of decency, but it shall be proclaimed in the streets and highways, and shall run wild. The husbandman shall be called from the plough by the calamities of his country to the natural expressions of mourning; and because they were without the sight of the merits of the cause, such as are skilful of lamentation shall be called to artificial mourning, to put accents upon the lamentations of the real mourners with their Ahaone, ahone. Even in all the vineyards, where there used to be nothing but mirth and pleasure, there shall be general wailing, when a foreign force invades the country, lays all waste, and there is no making any head against it, no weapon left but prayers and tears. 2. That the land of Israel shall be brought to ruin, and the advances of that ruin are the occasion of all this wailing; I will pass through thee, as the destroying angel passed through the land of Egypt to destroy the first-born, but then passed over the houses of the Israelites. God's judgments had often passed by them, but now they shall pass through them, shall run them through.

II. A just and severe reproof to those who made light of these threatened, and impudently bid defiance to the justice of God and his judgments, v. 18. Wo unto you that desire the day of the Lord, that really wish for times of war and contention, as some do who have restless spirits, and long for changes, or who choose to fish in troubled waters, hoping to raise their families, as some had done, upon the ruins of their country; but the prophet tells them that this should be so great a desolation, that nobody could get by it. Or, it is spoken to those who, in their wailings and lamentations for the calamities they were in, wished they might be cut off, and be rid out of their misery; as Job did, with passion. The prophet shows them the folly of this. Do they know what death is to those who are unprepared for it, and how much more terrible it will be than any thing that can befall them in this life? Or, rather, it is spoken to those who speak jestingly of the day of the Lord, as if it were a thing to be seriously of; they desired it, they challenged it; they said, Let him do his worst, let him make speed, and hasten his work, Is. v. 19. Where is the promise of his coming? 2 Pet. iii. 4. It intimates, 1. That they do not believe it. They say that they wish it would come, because they do not believe it will ever come; nor will they believe it unless they see it. 2. That they do not fear it; though they may have some belief of it, yet they have too little consideration of it, and their mind is so intent upon other things, that they are under no apprehension at all of their peril from it; instead of having the conscience to dread it, they have the curiosity to desire it. In answer to this,

(1.) He shows the folly of those who impatiently wished for any of God's judgments, as if it were a jest of any of the terrors of the Lord; "To what end is it for you that the day of the Lord should come? You will find it both certain and sad; not a thing to be bantered, for it is neither a thing to be questioned whether it will come or no, nor a thing to be turned off with a slight when it does come. The day of the Lord is darkness, and not light, v. 18. Shall it not be so? Do not your own case sciences tell you that it will be so? Is it not to be very dark, and no brightness in it?" 2. Note, The day of the Lord will be a dark, dismal, gloomy day to all impenitent sinners; the day of judgment will be so; and sometimes the day of their present trouble. And when God makes a day dark, all the world cannot make it light.

(2.) He shows the folly of those who impatiently wished for a change of God's judgments, in hopes that the next will be better and more tolerable. They desire the day of the Lord, in hopes to mend themselves, (though their hearts and lives be not amended,) or, however, to know the worst. But the prophet tells them that they know not what they ask, v. 19. It is as if a man did fret from a hill, and a beast from the desert, as if a man, a beast of prey more cruel and ravenous than a lion. Or as if a man, to escape all dangers abroad, went into the house for security, and leaned his hand on the wall to rest himself, and there a serpent bit him. Note, Those who are not reformed by the judgments of God, will be pursued by them; and if they escape one, another stands ready to seize them; fear, and the pit, and a snare shall not depart from them. You shall be pursued, Isa. xxxiv. 17, 18. It is madness therefore to defy the day of the Lord.

21. I hate, I despise your feast-days, and I will not smell in your solemn assemblies,
22. Though ye offer me burnt-offerings, and your meat-offerings, I will not accept them: neither will I regard the peace-offerings of your fat beasts. 23. Take thou away from me the noise of thy songs; for I will not hear the melody of thy viols. 24. But let judgment run downward as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream. 25. Have ye offered unto me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel? 26. But ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chium your images, the star of your god, which ye made to yourselves. 27. Therefore will I cause you to go into captivity beyond Damascus, saith the Lord, whose name is The God of hosts.

The scope of these verses is to show how little God valued their shows of devotion, may, how much he detested them, while they went on in their sins. Observe,

1. How unpleasing, may, how displeasing, their hypocritical services were to God. They had their feast-days at Bethel, in imitation of those at Jerusalem, in which they pretended to rejoice before God; they had their solemn assemblies for religious worship, in which they put on the gravity of those who come before God, as his people come, and sit before him as his people sit; they offered to God burnt-offerings, to the honour of God, together with the meat-offerings which by the law were to be offered with them; they offered the peace-offerings, to improve the favour of God, and they offered them of the fat beasts that they had, v. 21, 22. In imitation likewise of the temple-music, they had the noise of their songs, and the melody of their viols, (v. 23.) vocal and instrumental music, with which they praised God; with these services they hoped to make God amends for the sins they had committed, and to obtain leave to go on in sin; but therefore they were thundering acceptable to God, that they were abominable. He hated, he despised, their feast-days, not only despised them as no valuable services done to him, but hated them as an affront and provocation to him, as we hate to see men assemble with us, pretend a respect for us, when really they have none.

Nothing more hateful, more despicable, than hypocrisy; he that blesseth with his friend with a loud voice, it shall be counted a curse, when it appears that his heart is not with him. God will not smell in their solemn assemblies, for there is nothing in them that is grateful to him, but a great deal that is offensive. Their sacrifices are not to him of a sweet-smelling savour, as Noah’s was, Gen. viii. 21. He will not accept them, he will not regard them, will not take any notice of them, so he will not hear the melody of their viols; for when sin is a jar in the hammer, it grates in his ears; “Take it away,” says God, “I cannot bear it.” Now this speaks, (1.) That sacrifice itself is of small account with God, in comparison with moral duties; to love God and our neighbour is better than all burnt-offering and sacrifice. (2.) That the sacrifice of the wicked is really an abomination to him, Prov. xvi. 18. Dissembled piety is double iniquity, and so it will be found, when, if any place in hell be hotter than other, that will be the hypocrite’s portion.

2. What it was that he required in order to the acceptableness of their sacrifices, and without which no sacrifice would be acceptable; (v. 24.) Let judgment run down as waters among you, and righteousness as a mighty stream. (1.) “Let there be a general reformation of manners among you; let religion, God’s judgment and righteousness, have undue influence upon you; let all be affected with it, and let it bear down all the opposition of vice and profaneness; let it run wide as overflowing waters, and yet run strong as a mighty stream.” (2.) “In particular, let justice be duly administered by magistrates and rulers; let not the current of it be stopped by partiality and bribery, but let it come freely as waters do, in the natural course, let it be more as waters not muddied with corruption, or whatever may pervert justice; let it run like a mighty stream, and not suffer itself to be obstructed, or its course retarded by the fear of man; let all have free access to it as a common stream, and have benefit by it, as trees planted by the rivers of waters.” The great thing laid to Israel’s charge was, turning judgement into wormwood; (v. 7.) in that manner therefore they must reform, Zech. vii. 9. “This was it that God desired more than sacrifices, Hos. vi. 6. 1 Sam. xvii. 22.

3. What little stress God had laid upon the law of sacrifices, though it was his own law, in comparison with the moral precepts; (v. 25.) Did ye offer unto me sacrifices in the wilderness forty years? No, you did not; for the greatest part of that time sacrifice was very much neglected, because of the ritual sacrifices; the same thing is true of the passover. Though the passover was not kept till they were come into Canaan, and other institutions were in like manner intermitted; and yet, because God will have mercy and not sacrifice, he never imputed the omission to them as their fault, but continued his care of them, and kindness to them; it was not that, but their murmuring and unbelief, for which God was displeased with them. He that so owned his mercy, though they did not sacrifice, when in other things they kept close to him, will certainly disapprove them, though they do sacrifice, if in other things they depart from him. But though ritual sacrifices may thus be dispensed with, spiritual sacrifices will not; even justice and honesty will not excuse for the want of prayer and praise, a broken heart, and the love of God. Stephen quotes this passage, (Acts vii. 42.) to show the Jewish nation were guilty of the they think it strange that the ceremonial law was repealed, when from the beginning it was comparatively made light of. Compare Jer. vii. 22, 23.

4. What little reason they had to expect that their sacrifices should be acceptable to God, when they and their fathers had been all along addicted to the worship of other Gods. So some take v. 25. Did you offer to me sacrifices, to ME only? No, and therefore not at all to ME acceptably; for the law of worshipping the Lord our God, is, Him only we must serve. “But you have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch, (v. 26.) little shrines that you made to carry about with you, pocket-idols for your private superstition, when you durst not be seen to do it publicly. You have had the images of your Moloch, or blood-god, or Chintor, or Chemosh, (the sun, that sits king among the heavenly bodies,) and Chitun, or Remphan;” as Stephen calls it, Acts vii. 43. after the LXX., which it is supposed, represented Saturn, the highest of the seven planets. The worship of the sun, moon, and stars, was the most ancient, most general, and most plausible idolatry; they made to themselves the star of their god, some partaking of the name, and others took to be their god, or the name of which they gave to their god. This idolatry Israel was from the beginning prone to; (Deut. iv. 19.) and those that retain any affection for false gods, cannot expect the favour of the true God.

5. What punishment God would inflict upon them for their persisting in idolatry; (v. 27.) I will cause you to go into captivity beyond Damascus. They were led captive by Satan into idolatry, and therefore God caused them to go into captivity among idolaters, and hurried them into a strange land, who were so fond of strange gods. They were carried beyond Damascus; their captivity by the Assyrians was far beyond that by the Syrians; for if lesser judgments do not work that for which they were sent, God will send greater. Or, the captivity of Israel under Shalmaneser was far beyond that of Damascus under Tiglath-pileser, and much more grievous and destructive, which was foretold, ch. i. 5. For, as the sins of God's professing people are greater than the sins of others, so it may be expected that their punishments will be proportionable. We find the spoil of Damascus, and that of Samaria, carried off together by Shalmaneser, v. 7. 4. 5.

Stephen says it, I will carry you away beyond Babylon, (Acts vii. 43.) further than Judah shall be carried, so far further, as not to return. And, to make this sentence appear both the more certain, and the more dreadful, he that passes it, calls himself the Lord, whose name is, The God of hosts, and who is therefore able to execute the sentence, having hosts at command.

CHAP. VI.

In this chapter we have, 1. A sinful people studying to put a slight upon God’s ways, and to make them appear trivial; confining in their privileges and pre-eminences above other nations, (v. 2, 3.) and their power, (v. 13.) and wholly addicted to their pleasures, v. 4. 6. 11. 2. God causing them to pass beyond the limits of God’s threatenings, and to make them appear terrible, by setting forth the severity of those judgments that were coming upon those sensualists; (v. 7.) God’s abhorring them, and abandoning them and theirs to death, (v. 8...11.) and bringing utter desolation upon them, since they would not be wrought upon by the methods he had taken for their conviction, v. 12...14.

1. WO to them that are at ease in Zion, and trust in the mountain of Samaria, which are named chief of the nations, to whom the house of Israel came! 2. Pass ye unto Calneh, and see; and from thence go ye to Hamath the great: then go down to the Philistines: be they better than these kingdoms? or their border greater than your border? 3. Ye that put far away the evil day, and cause the seat of violence to come near; 4. That lie upon beds of ivory, and stretch themselves upon their couches, and eat the lamb out of the flock, and the calves out of the midst of the stall; 5. That chunt to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of music, like David; 6. That drink wine in bowls, and anoint themselves with the chief ointments; but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph. 7. Therefore now shall they go captive with the first that go captive, and the banquet of them that stretched themselves shall be removed.

The first words of the chapter are the contents of these verses; but they sound very strange, and contrary to the natural state of a people so weak and helpless, as to do them that are at ease! We are ready to say, Happy they that are at ease, that neither feel any trouble, nor fear any, that lie soft and warm, and lay nothing to heart; and wise we think are they that do so, that bathe themselves in the delights of sense, and care not how the world goes. They are looked upon as doing well for themselves, that do well for their bodies, and make much of them; but against them this wo is denounced, and we are here told what their ease is, and what the wo is.

1. Here is a description of their pride, security, and sensuality, for which God would reckon with them. 1. They were vainly conceited of their own dignities, and thought they would vainly secure them from the judgments threatened, and be their defence against the wrath both of God and man. (1.) Those that dwell in Zion, thought that was honour and protection enough for them, and they might there be quiet from all fear of evil, because it was a strong city, well fortified both by nature and art, (we read of Zion’s strongholds, and her chains were iron, Jer, x. 19.), and not only fortified, but those were set the thrones of the house of David; it was the head-city of Judah, and therefore truly great; and especially because it was the holy city where the temple was, and the testimony of Israel; they that dwelt there doubted not but that God’s sanctuary would be a sanctuary to them, and would shelter them from his judgments. The temple of the Lord are these, Jer. vii. 4. They are bought because of the holy mountain, Zeph. iii. 11. Note, Many are puffed up with pride, and recked asleep in carnal security, by their church-privileges, and the place they have in Zion. (2.) Those that dwelt in the mountain of Samaria, though it was not a holy hill, like that of Zion, yet they trusted in it, because it was the metropolis of a potent kingdom, and, perhaps, the most illustrious city in their nation, and the head-quarters of its religion; and by tract of time the hill of Shemer became with them in as good repute as the hill of Zion ever was. They hoped for salvation from these hills and mountains. (3.) Both these two kingdoms valued themselves upon their relation to Israel, that prince with God, which they looked upon as making them the chief of the nations, more ancient and honoured than was the first-fruit of the nations, (so the word is,) dedicated to God, and sanctifying the whole harvest. The house of Israel came to them, was divided into those kingdoms, Zion and Samaria were the mother-cities of them. Those that were at ease, were the princes and rulers, the great men, that were chief of the nations, chief of those two kingdoms, and to whom going their cities, and being in those cities, was the whole house of Israel applied themselves for judgment. Note, It is hard to be great, and not to be proud. Great nations and great men are apt to overvalue themselves, and to overlook their neighbours, because they think they a little overtop them. But, for a check to their pride and security, the prophet bids them take notice of these cities that were within the compass of their knowledge, that had been as illustrious in their time as ever Zion or Samaria was, and yet were destroyed, v. 2. Go to Calneh, (which was an ancient city built by Nimrod, Gen. x. 10.) and see what is become of that, it is now in ruins; so is Hamath the great, one of the chief cities of Syria; Sennacherib boasts of destroying the gods of Hamath, Gen. vii. 17. was likewise made desolate by Hazael, and not long ago, 2 Kings xi. 17. Now were they better than these kingdoms of Judah and Israel? Yes, they were, and their border greater than your border, so that they had more reason than you to be confident of their own safety: yet you see what is become of them, and dare you be secure? Art thou better than they that were? (4.) So, the examples of others’ ruin forbids us to be secure.

2. They persisted in their wicked courses, upon a presumption that they should never be called to an account for them; (v. 3.) ‘You put far away the evil day, the day of reckoning, as a thing that shall never come; or, you look upon it as at such a distance, that it makes no impression at all upon you; you put it far away, and think you can still put it yet further, and adjourn it de die in diem—from day to day, and therefore you join the chase of violence to violence, and venture upon all acts of injustice and oppression, and have fellowship with the throne of iniquity, which frames mischief by a law, Ps. xcvii. 20. "You cause that to come near, as if that would be your protection from these judgments, which really ripens you for them." Note, Therefore men take sin to be near them, because they judge the judgment to be far off from them; but they deceive themselves in this mock God.

3. They indulged themselves in all manner of sensual pleasures and delights, v. 4, 6. These Israelites were perfect epicures and slaves to their appetites. Their dignities, (in consideration of which they ought to have been examples of self-denial and mortification,) they thought, would justify them in their sensuality; the gains of their oppression and violence, they thought, would bear the charge of it; and they put the evil day at a distance, that that might give them no disturbance in it. That which they are here charged with, is not in itself sinful, (these things might be soberly and moderately used,) but they placed their happiness in the gratification of their carnal appetites; and though they were men in office, that had business to mind, they gave them up as it were to play the spendthrifts, and spent their time in them, and threw away their thoughts, and cares, and estates, upon them; they were in these enjoyments as in their element; their hearts were upon them, they exceeded all bounds in them, and this at a time when God in his providence was calling them to weeping and mourning; (Isa. xxxii. 12, 13,) when they were under guilt and wrath, and the judgments of God were ready to break upon them. They drank the wine and strong drink, presuming that to-morrow shall be as this day and much more abundant, (Isa. li. 12,) thus walking contrary to God, and setting his justice at defiance. (1.) They were extravagant in their furniture; nothing would serve them but beds of ivory, to sleep upon, or to sit on at their meat, when sackcloth and ashes had better become them. (2.) They were prodigal of their money; they kept no money of their own; they did not only lie down, but stretched themselves upon their couches, when they should have stirred up themselves to their business; they were willingly slothful, and took a pride in doing nothing; they abounded in superfluities, (so the margin reads it,) when many of their poor brethren wanted necessaries. (3.) They were nice and curious in their diet, must have every thing of the best, and abundance of it; they eat the lambs out of the flock, (lambs by wholesale,) and the calves out of the midst of the stall, the fattest they could lay their hand on; and these perhaps not out of their own flock and their own stall, but taken by oppression from the poor. (4.) They were merry and jovial, and diverted themselves at their feasts with music and singing; they chose the harp, the viol, the psaltery, the lute in concert, and they invent new-fashioned instruments of music, striving herein, more than in any thing else, to excel their ancestors; they set their wits on work to contrive how to please their fancy. Some men never show their ingenuity but in their luxury; on that they bestow all their faculty of invention and contrivance. They invent instruments of music, like David; endow them with seats, and make them to be heard as entertainment of kings only. Or, it intimates their profaneness in their mirth; they mimicked the temple-music, and made a jest of that, because it may be, it was old-fashioned, and they took a pride in bantering it, as the Babylonians did when they urged the captives to sing them the songs of Zion; such was Belshazzar's profaneness, when he drank wine in temple-bowls, and such theirs that sing vain and loose songs in psalm tunes, on purpose to ridicule a divine institution. (5.) They drink to excess, and never think they can abuse their drink, if they drink wine in bowls, not in glasses or cups; (as Jer. xxxv. 5.) they hate to be stinted, and must have large draughts, and therefore make use of vessels, that they can steal a draught out of. (6.) They affect the strongest perfumes; they anoint themselves with the chief ointments, to please the smell, and to make them more in love with their own bodies, and to guard against the stink of the vapors; which they carry about with them while they live. No ordinary ointments would serve their turn; they must have the chief, such as were far-fetched and dear-bought, when cheaper would have served as well.

4. They had no concern at all for the interests of the church of God, and of the nation, that were sinking, and going to decay; They are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph; the church of God, including both the kingdoms of Judah and Israel, (which are called Joseph, Ps. xxxv. 1.) was in distress, invaded, insulted, and broken in upon; their own kingdom which they were intrusted with the government of, the affairs of which they were the directors of, the peace of which they were the conservators, the prosperity of which they were in charge of, was threatened with decay; God poured out his judgments upon its peace and welfare; and they were so besotted, that they were not aware of them, so indulgent of their pleasures, that they never laid them to heart, and had such an aversion to the thing called business, that they were in no care or concern to get them repaired. It is all one to them whether the nation sink or swim, so that they can but lie at ease. They live in luxuriant, particular pensions that belonged to Joseph, were in affliction, and they took no cognizance of their case, of the wrongs and hardships they sustained, and the troubles they were in, nor took any care to relieve them and right them; contrary to the temper of holy Job, who, when he was in prosperity, wept with him that was in misery, and his soul was grieved for the poor, Job xxx. 25. Some think that in calling the afflicted church and people Joseph, they denoted the case of Joseph, though they did not call them Joseph himself, but the nation, and the Lord's people, his brother, who, when he was preferred to give the cup again into his master's hand, remembered not Joseph, but forgot him, Gen. xl. 21, 23. Thus these drank wine in bowls, but were not grieved for the affliction of Joseph. Note, Those are commonly careless of the troubles of others, who are set upon their own pleasures; and it is a great offence to God when his church is in affliction, and we are not grieved for it, nor lay it to heart.

II. Here is the doom passed upon them; (v. 7.) Therefore now shall they go captive with the first that go captive, and shall fall into all the miseries that attend captives; and the banquet of them that stretched themselves upon their couches, shall be removed. Their plenty shall be taken from them, and they shall eat the scorns of the rest, the poor and beggarly, and of the king's bread, and the death and fuel of their lusts. 1. Those who lived in luxury, shall lose even their liberty; and by being brought into servitude, shall be justly punished for the abuse of their dignity and dominion. 2. Those who trusted in the delights and pleasures of their own land, shall be carried away into a strange land, and so made ashamed of their pride and confidence; they shall go captive into Babylon, as those were that were carried captive into Babylon, more by the pleasures of sense, and set their hearts upon them, shall be deprived of those pleasures; their banquet shall be removed, and they shall know what it is to fare hard. 4. Those who stretched themselves, shall be made to contract themselves, and to come into a less compass. 5. Those who put the evil day far from them, shall find it nearer to them. than it is to others; they shall go captive with the first, who flatterd themselves with hopes that if trouble did come, they would be the last who should be seized by it. Those are ripening apace for trouble themselves, who lay not to heart the troubles of others, and of the church of God. Those who give themselves to mirth, when God calls them to mourning, will find it is a sin that shall not go unpunished, Isa. xxii. 14.

3. The Lord God hath sworn by himself, saith the Lord, the God of hosts, I abhor the excellency of Jacob, and hate his palaces: therefore will I deliver up the city, with all that is therein. 9. And it shall come to pass, if there remain ten men in one house, that they shall die. 10. And a man's uncle shall take him up, and he that burneth him, to bring out the bones out of the house, and shall say unto him that is by the sides of the house, Is there yet any with thee? and he shall say, No. Then shall he say, Hold thy tongue; for we may not make mention of the name of the Lord. 11. For, behold, the Lord commandeth, and he will smite the great house with breaches, and the little house with eclefs. 12. Shall horses run upon the rock? will one plough there with oxen? for ye have turned judgment into gall, and the fruit of righteousness into hemlock. 13. Ye which rejoice in a thing of nought, which say, Have we not taken to us horns by our own strength? 14. But, behold, I will raise up against you a nation, O house of Israel, saith the Lord, the God of hosts; and they shall afflict you from the entering in of Hamath unto the river of the wilderness.

In the former part of the chapter, we had these secure Israelites loading themselves with pleasures, as if they could never be made merry enough; here we have God loading them with punishments, as if they never could be made miserable enough. And observe,

1. How strongly this burden is bound on, not to be shaken off by their presumption and security; for it is bound by the Lord, the God of hosts, by his mighty, his almighty hand, which none can resist; it is bound with an oath, which puts the sentence past revocation; The Lord God has sworn, and he will not repent, and since he could swear by no greater, he has sworn by himself. How dreadful, how miserable, is the case of those whose ruin, whose destruction, God himself has sworn! God himself has sworn, who can execute his purpose, and cannot alter it!

II. How heavy this burden lies! Let us see the particulars.

1. God will abhor and abandon them; and that speaks misery enough, all misery; I abhor the excellency of Jacob; all that which they are proud of, and value themselves upon, and for which they flatter, and count themselves the chief of the nations. Their visible church-membership, and the privileges of that, their temple, altar, and priesthood, these were, more than any thing, the excellencies of Jacob; but when these were profaned and polluted by sin, God abhorred them, he hated and despised them, ch. v. 21. Note, God abhors that form of godliness which hypocrisy keep up, while they abhor the power of it. And if he abhors their temple, for the iniquity of that, no marvel that he hates their palaces, for the injustice and oppression he finds there. Note, That creature which we take such complacency, and put such a confidence in, as to make it a rival with God, is thereby made abominable to him. He hates the palaces of sinners, for the sake of the wickedness of them which dwell therein, Prov. iii. 23. The curse of the Lord is in the house of the wicked. And if God abhor them, immediately it follows, He will deliver up the city with all that is therein, deliver it up into the hands of the enemy, that will lay it waste, and make a prey of all its wealth. Note, Those that are abhorred and abandoned of God, are undone, as the enemies of God.

2. There shall be a great and general mortality among them; (v. 9.) If there remain ten men in one house, that have escaped the sword of the enemy, yet they shall be met with another way; they shall all die by famine or pestilence. In the most sickly times, if there be ten in a house, one may hope that at least the one half of them will escape, according to the proportion of two in a bed, one taken and the other left; but here not one of ten shall live to bury the rest. Another instance of the greatness of the mortality, is, (v. 10.) that the nearest relations of the dead shall be forced with their own hands to wind up their bodies, and bury them, for want of other hands to be employed in it; that is all that the next of kin, to whom the right of redemption belongs, can do for them; and the greater reluctance will they do that. It intimates that the young people shall be cut off soonest; for the uncle that survives, is, ordinarily, the senior relation. When the uncle comes with the sexton, (or him that burns,) to bring out the bones out of the house, he shall say to him that sees next about the house, “Hold thy tongue, Ged lice!” And he shall say, “No, this is the last; now the whole family is cut off by death, and neither root nor branch remains.” But that which makes this judgment the more grievous, is, that their hearts seem to be hardened under it. When he that was found by the sides of the house, began to enter into discourse with those that were carrying off the dead, they shall say, “Hold thy tongue, Ged lice!” and stand preaching to us about the hand of Providence in this calamity, for we may not make mention of the name of the Lord; God is so angry with us, that there is no speaking to him, he is so extreme to mark what we do amiss, that we dare not so much as make mention of his name.” Thus the foolishness of men perverts their way, and brings them into distress, and then their heart frets against the Lord. Even then they will not take notice of his hand, nor suffer these about them to do it. Perhaps it was forbidden by some of the idolatrous kings to make mention of the name of Jehovah, as by the law of Moses it was forbidden to make mention of the names of the heathen gods; We may not do it without incurring the penalty. Note, The use of the burden, which the Lord has decreed, that will not be brought to make mention of God’s name, and to worship him, when the hand of God is gone out against them, and when, as here, sickness and death are in their families. Thus those heap up wrath, who cry not when God binds them.

3. Their houses shall be destroyed, v. 11. God will smite the great house with brimstone, and the little house with eclefs; they shall both be destroyed, as to lose their beauty and strength, and to be hastening towards a fall. The princes’ palaces are not above the rebukes of divine justice, nor the poor men’s cottages beneath it; neither shall escape when sin has marked them for ruin, God will find ways to bring it about. It is by order from him that breaches are made.
AMOS, VII.

III. How justly they are thus burthened; if we understand the matter right, we shall say, The Lord is righteous.

1. The method used for their reformation had been all fruitless and ineffectual; (v. 12.) Shall horses draw a plough; or shall they bring the harrow over the ground there? Or will one plough there with oxen? No, for there will be no profit to countervail the pains. God had sent them his prophets, to break up their fellow-ground; but they found them as hard and inflexible as the rock, rough and rugged, and they could do no good with them, nor work upon them, and therefore they shall not attempt it any more. They will be reckoned, and therefore shall not be reprieved, but quite abandoned. Note, Those who will not be husbanded as fields and vineyards, shall be rejected as barren rocks and deserts, Heb. vi. 7, 8.

2. They had abused their power to the wrong and oppression of many, whose injured cause the sovereign Judge would not only right, but revenge; Ye have turned judgment into gall, which is nauseous, and the fruit of righteousness into hemlock, which is noxious; it would make one sick to see how those that were intrusted with the administration of public justice, bear down equity with that power with which they ought to have defended and supported it, and so turned its own artillery against itself. Note, When our services of God are sour with sin, his providences will justly be imbittered to us.

3. They had set the judgments of God at defiance, and confiding in their own strength, thought themselves a match for Omnipotence, v. 13. They rejoiced in a thing of naught, pleased themselves with a fancy that no evil should befall them, though they had no ground at all for that confidence, nothing to trust to that would bear any weight. They said, "Have we not taken to us horns, are we not arrived to great dignity and dominion, have we not flushed down our enemies, and flushed on our victories, and by our own strength rejoice in a thing of naught, and so they will find. Probably they did not say this with their lips, sed totem verbo, but it was the language of their hearts, and of their actions, both which God understands.

IV. How easily and effectually this burthen shall be brought upon them, v. 14. He that brings it upon them is the Lord, the God of hosts, who both may do, and can do, what he pleaseth; who has all creatures at his command, and who, when he has work to do, will not want instruments to do it with; though they are the house of Israel, yet he will raise up against them a nation which they feared not, but had many a time hoped in, even the Assyrians, and this nation shall afflict them, bring them into straits, and put them to pain, from the entering in of Hamath, in the north, to the river of the wilderness, the river of Egypt, Sihor, or Nile, in the south. The whole nation hath shared in the iniquity, and therefore must expect to share in the curse. Almighty God is not to be made to yield any arguments of affliction to us, we must see God raising them up against us, for they are his hand, the rod, the sword in his hand. The Lord hath hidden Shimei curse David.

CHAP. VII.

In this chapter, we have, 1. God contending with Israel, by the judgments brought on their land. 1. They are threatened with lesser judgments, but are preserved, and the judgments turned away at the prayer of Amos, v. 1. - 8. God's patience is at length worn out by their obstinacy, and they are rejected, and so threatened with utter ruin, v. 7. - 9. II. Israel contending with God, by the opposition given to his prophet. 1. Amaziah informs against Amos, (v. 10, 11.) and does what he can to rid the country of him as a public nuisance, (v. 12, 13.) Amos justifies himself in what he did as a prophet, (v. 14, 15.) and denounces the judgments of God against Amaziah his prosecutor, (v. 16, 17.) for when the contract is between God and man, it is very easy to foretell, who will come off with the worst of it.

1. Thus hath the Lord God shewed unto me; and, behold, he formed grasshoppers in the beginning of the shooting up of the latter growth; and, lo, it was the latter growth after the king's mowing.

2. And it came to pass, that when they had made an end of eating the grass of the land, then I said, O Lord God, forgive, I beseech thee; by whom shall Jacob arise? for he is small. 3. The Lord repented for this: This shall not be, saith the Lord. 4. Thus hath the Lord God shewed unto me; and, behold, the Lord God called to contend by fire, and it devoured the great deep, and did eat up a part. 5. Then said I, O Lord God, ease, I beseech thee; by whom shall Jacob arise? for he is small. 6. The Lord repented for this: This also shall not be, saith the Lord God. 7. Thus he shewed me; and, behold, the Lord stood upon a wall made by a plumb-line, with a plumb-line in his hand. 8. And the Lord said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, A plumb-line. Then said the Lord, Behold, I will set a plumb-line in the midst of my people Israel; I will not again pass by them any more: 9. And the high places of Isaac shall be desolate, and the sanctuaries of Israel shall be laid waste; and I will rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword.

We here see that God bears long, but that he will not bear always, with a provoking people; both these God here showed the prophet: Thus hath the Lord God shewed me, v. 1, 4, 7. He showed him what was present, foreshowed him what was to come; gave him the knowledge both of what he did, and of what he designed; for the Lord God reveals his secret to his servants the prophets, ch. iii. 7.

1. We have here two instances of God's anger mingled with mercy, remembered in the midst of his indignation, the narratives of which are so like one another, that they will be best considered together, and very considerable they are.

1. God is here coming forth against this sinful nation, first by one judgment, and then by another. (1.) He begins with the judgment of famine, the prophet saw it in vision. He saw God destroying grasshoppers, or locusts, and bringing them up upon the land, to eat up the fruits of it, and so strip it of its beauty, and starve its inhabitants, v. 1. God formed these grasshoppers, not only as they were his creatures, (much of the wisdom and power of God appears in the formation of minute animals, as much in the structure of an ant as of an elephant, but as they were instruments of his wrath. God is said to frame evil against a sinful people. Jer. xvii. 11.

These grasshoppers were to eat up the grass of the land; and vast numbers of them were prepared accordingly. They were sent in the beginning of the shooting up of the latter growth, after the king's mowing. See here how the judgment was mitigated by the mercy that went before it. God could have sent these insects to eat up the grass at the beginning of the first growth, in the spring, and thus have been long upon the land, and would have been very great, and was the best in its kind; but God suffered that to grow, and suffered them to gather it in; the king's mowing were safely housed, for the king himself is served from the field, (Eccle. v. 9.) and could as ill be without his mowings as without any other branch of his revenues. Uzziah was now king of Judah, who loved husbandry, 2 Chron. xi. 10.

But the grasshoppers were commissioned to eat up only, the latter growth, the edgrew, (we call it in the country,) the after-grass, which is of little value, in comparison with the former. The mercies which God gives us, and continues to us, are more valuable than those he removes from us; which is a good reason why we should be grateful for them. Where one branch of the mercies of the former growth should make us submissive to the will of God, when we meet with disappointments in the latter growth. The prophet, in vision, saw this judgment prevailing far. These grasshoppers eat up the grass of the land, which should have been for the cattle; which the owners must of course suffer by. Some understand this figuratively, of wasting, destroying armies brought upon them. In the days of Jeroboam, the kingdom of Israel began to recover itself from the desolations it had been under in the former reigns; (2 Kings xiv. 25.) the latter growth shot up, after the mowings of the kings of Syria, which we read of, 2 Kings xiii. 3. And then God commissioned the king of Assyria with an army of caterpillars to come upon them, and lay them waste; that nation spoken of, ch. vi. 14. which afflicted them from the entering of Hamath to the river of the wilderness, which seems to refer to 2 Kings xiv. 25. where Jeroboam is said to have restored their coast from the entering of Hamath to the sea of the plain. God can then bring all to ruin, when we think all is in some measure safe and secure.

(2.) He proceeds to the judgment of fire, to show that he has many arrows in his quiver, many ways of humbling a sinful nation; (v. 4.) The Lord God called to contend by fire. He contended; for God's judgments upon a people are his controversies with them; in them he prosecutes his action against them; and his controversies are neither causeless nor groundless. He called to contend; he did by his prophets give them notice of his controversy, and drew up a declaration, setting forth the meaning of it. Or, he called for his angels, or other ministers of his justice, that were to be employed in it. A fire was kindled among them; by which is meant, either a great drought, the heat of the sun, which should have warmed the earth, scorched it, and burnt up the enemy, for fire and sword used to go together; thus were the towns wasted, as the country was by the grasshoppers. This fire which God called for, did terrible execution; it devoured the great deep, as the fire that fell from heaven on Elijah's altar, licked up the water that was in the trench. Though the water designed for the stopping and quenching of this fire was as the water of Gomorra the fire remained in its place; it can stand before a fire kindled by the wrath of God? It did eat up a part, a great part, of the cities where it was sent; or, it was as the fire at Taberah, which consumed the uttermost parts of the camp; (Numb. xi. 1.) when some were overthrown, others were as brands flucked out of the fire. All desired to be devoured, but it ate up only a part, for God does not tire at all his wrath.

2. The prophet goes forth to meet him in the way of his judgments, and by prayer seeks to turn away his wrath, (v. 2.) when he saw, in vision, what dreadful work these caterpillars made, that they had eaten up in a manner all the grass of the land, (he foresaw they would do so, if suffered to go on,) then he said, O Lord God, forgive. I beseech thee; (v. 2.) cease, I beseech thee, v. 3. He forsook the judgment in his preaching to the people, yet deprecated it in his intercessions for them. He is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee. It was the business of prophets to pray for those whom they prophesied to, and so to make it appear that though they denounced, they did not desire, the windows day. God therefore gave the prophet the power of an intercessor, that they might befriend the people, not only by warning them, but by praying for them, and standing in the gap, to turn away God's wrath, as Moses, that great prophet, often did. Now observe here,

(1.) The prophet's prayer; O Lord God, [1.] Forgive, I beseech thee, and take away the sin. He sees sin at the bottom of the trouble, and therefore concludes that the pardon of sin must be at the bottom of the deliverance, and prays for that in the first place. Note, Whatever calamity we are under, personal or public, the forgiveness of sin is that which we should be most earnest with God for. [2.] Cease, I beseech thee, and take away the judgment; cease the fire, cease the controversy; cause thine anger towards us to cease. This follows upon the forgiveness of sin. Take away the cause, and the effect will cease. Note, Those whom God contends with, will soon find what need they have to cry for a cessation of arms; and there are hopes that though God has begun, and proceeded far, in his controversy, yet it may be obtained.

(2.) The people's prayer in answer to this prayer; By whom shall Jacob arise, for he is small? (v. 2.) And it is repeated, (v. 5.) and yet no vain repetition. Christ, in his agony, prayed earnestly, saying the same words again and again. [1.] It is Jacob that he is interceding for, the professing people of God, called by his name, calling on his name, the seed of Jacob, his chosen, and in covenant with him. It is Jacob's case that is in this prayer spread before the God of Jacob. [2.] Jacob is small, very small already, weakened and brought low by former judgments; and therefore if these come, he will be quite ruined, and brought to nothing. The people are few, the dust of Jacob is now soon counted, which once was innumerable. Those few are feeble; (it is the worm Jacob, Isa. xli. 14.) they are no match to the enemy, or another. Sin will soon make a great people small; will diminish the numerous, impoverish the plenteous, and weaken the courageous. [3.] By whom shall he arise? He is fallen, and cannot help himself up, and he has no friend to help him, none to raise him, unless the hand of God do it; what will become of him then, if the hand that should raise him be stretched out against him? Note, When the state of God's church is very low and very helpless, it is proper to be recommended by our prayers to God's pity.

3. God graciously lets fall his controversy, in answer to the prophet's prayer, once and again; (v. 3.)
The Lord repented for this; he did not change his mind, for he is in one mind, and who can turn him? But he changed his way, took another course, and determined to deal in mercy, and not in wrath. He said, It shall not be. And again, (v. 6.) This also shall not be. The carpenters were countermanded, a stop put to the progress of the fire, and thus a reprieve was granted. See the power of prayer, of effectual, fervent prayer, and how much influence it has in the divine family, to make them ashamed of their carnal confidences, which were the two things for which God had a controversy with them. When these were made desolate, they might read their sin and folly in their punishment. (2.) The royal family shall sink first, as an earnest of the ruin of the whole kingdom; I will rise against the house of Jeroboam, Jeroboam the second, who was king of the ten tribes. This family was extirpated in his son Zecariahs, who was slain with the sword before the people, by Shallum, who conspired against him, 2 Kings xv. 10. How unrighteous soever the instruments were, God was righteous, and in them God rose up against that idolatrous family. Even king's houses will be no shelter against the sword of God's wrath.

10. Then Amaziah, the priest of Beth-el, sent to Jeroboam king of Israel, saying, Amos hath conspired against thee in the midst of the house of Israel; the land is not able to bear all his words. 11. For thus Amos saith, Jeroboam shall die by the sword, and Israel shall surely be led away captive out of their own land. 12. Also Amaziah said unto Amos, O thou seer, go, flee thee away into the land of Judah, and there eat bread, and prophesy there: 13. But prophesy not again any more at Bethel: for it is the king's chapel, and it is the king's court. 14. Then answered Amos, and said to Amaziah, I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son; but I was a herdman, and a gatherer of sycamore-fruit: 15. And the Lord took me as I followed the flock, and the Lord said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel. 16. Now, therefore, hear thou the word of the Lord: Thou sayest, Prophesy not against Israel, and drop not thy word against the house of Isaac. 17. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Thy wife shall be a harlot in the city, and thy sons and thy daughters shall fall by the sword, and thy land shall be divided by line; and thou shalt die in a polluted land: and Israel shall surely go into captivity forth of his land.

One would have expected that what we met with in the former part of the chapter, should, 1. Have weakened the people to repentance, when they saw their sins; were not therefore, they were returned; they might have space to repent, and that they could not obtain a pardon unless they did repent. 2. That it should have endeared the prophet Amos to them, who had not only showed his good will to them, in praying against the judgments that invaded them, but had prevailed to turn away those judgments; which, if they had had any sense of gratitude, would have gained him an interest in their affections; but it fell out quite contrary; they continue impenitent, and the next news we hear of Amos, is, that he is perse-

4. And it is common for designing men to assert that as the services of the priests were in a great degree supported by the reproofs and threatenings which Amos was continually taunting them with in the name of the Lord; as it were the prerogative of the prince, and the privilege of the priests, when they are running headlong upon a fire-piece, not to be told of their danger. (4.) Because he could not expect any encouragement or encouragement there, but, on the contrary, to be bartered and ridiculed by some, and to be threatened and brow-beaten by others; however, he could not think to make any converts there, or to persuade any from that idolatry which was supported by the authority and example of the king. To preach his doctrine there, was but (as we say) to run his head against a post; and therefore it was not far from the time that the land of Judah was the fittest place for him to set up in: Flee thee away thither with all speed, and there eat bread, and prophesy there; there thou wilt be safe, there thou wilt be welcome, the king's court and chapel there are on thy side; the prophets there will second thee, the priests and princes will take notice of thee, and allow thee an honourable maintenance. See here, (1.) How willing good men are to get clear of their faithful reprovers, and how ready to say to the seers, See not, or see not for us; the two witnesses were a torment to them that dwelt on the earth, (Rev. xi. 10.) and it was indeed a pity that men should be tormented before the time, but that it is in order to the preventing of eternal torment. (2.) How apt worldly men are to measure either by others, as quicksighted, as to what a thing is aimed at nothing but the profit of his place, and he thought Amos, as a prophet, had the same views, and therefore advises him to prophesy there where he might eat bread, where he might be sure to have as much as he chose; whereas Amos was to prophesy where God appointed him, and where there was most need of him, not where he would get most money. Note, Those that wish for their godliness, and are governed by the hopes of wealth and preferment themselves, are ready to think these the most powerful inducements with others also.

III. The reply which Amos made to these sug gestions of Amaziah's; he did not consult with flesh and blood, nor was it his care to enrich himself, but to make full proof of his ministry, and to be found faithful in the discharge of it, not to sleep, nor to keep a continual watch, since therefore he resolves abide by his post, and, in answer to Amaziah,

1. He justifies himself in his constant adherence to his work, and to his place; (v. 14, 15.) and that which he is sure will not only bear him out, but bind him to it, is, that he had a divine warrant and commission for it; I was no prophet, or prophet's son, but was bred to a trade to which I was originally designed for a prophet, as Samuel and Jeremiah, not educated in the schools of the prophets, as many others were; but I was a herdman, a keeper of cattle, and a gatherer of sycamore-fruit. Our sycamores bear no fruit, but, it seems, theirs did, which Amos gathered, either for his cattle, or for himself and his family, or to sell; he was a plain countryman, bred up and employed in country work, and used to country fare. He followed the flocks as well as the herds, and thence God took him, and bid him go prophesy to his people Israel, deliver to them such messages as he should from time to time receive from the Lord. God made him a prophet, and a prophet to them; appointed him his work, and appointed him his post. Therefore he ought not to be silenced, for, (1.) He could produce a divine command from God, ought not to fear the face of man, he was sent, but pleased, as Paul, that he was called to be an apostle; and men will find it at their peril if they contradict and oppose any that come in God's name; if they say to his seers, See not, or silence those whom he has bid speak, such fight against God. An affront done to an ambassador is an affront to the prince that sends him. Those that have a warrant from God, ought not to fear the face of man, which, if they say to his seers, See not, or silence those whom he has bid speak, such fight against God. An affront done to an ambassador is an affront to the prince that sends him.

2. The mean character he wore before he received that commission, strengthened his warrant, so far was it from weakening it. [1.] He had no thoughts at all of ever being a prophet, and therefore his prophesying could not be imputed to a raised expectation, or a heated imagination, but purely to a divine impulse. [2.] He was not educated or instructed in the art or mystery of prophesying, and therefore he had no knowledge and skill in it, neither did he learn it, nor was it taught to him, or taught him of his own accord; God must have given it him, so that he could have had no skill, or knowledge of it, to speak with such boldness and confidence; and he therefore had not need to prophesy for bread, as Amaziah suggested, (v. 12.) did not take it up as a trade to live by, but as a trust to honour God and do good with. [4.] He had all his days been accustomed to a plain, homely way of living, among poor husbandmen, and never affected any dignity or dainties, and therefore would not have thrust himself so near the king's court and chapel, if the business God had called him to, had not called him thither. [5.] Having been so meanly bred, he could not have had courage to speak to kings and great men, especially to speak such bold and provoking things to them, if he had not been animated by a greater spirit than his own. If God did not strengthen and encourage him, he could not thus have set his face as a flint, Isa. 1. 7. Note, God often chooses the weak and foolish things of this world to confound the wise and mighty; and a herdman of Tekoa puts to shame a priest of Bethel, when he receives from God authority and ability to act for him.

2. He condemns Amaziah for the opposition he gave him, and denounces the judgments of God against him; not from any private resentment or revenge, but in the name of the Lord, and by authority from him, v. 15. And he would not suffer Amos to preach at all, and therefore he is here regularly ordered to preach against him; now therefore hear thou the word of the Lord, hear it and tremble. Those that cannot bear general woes, may expect woes of their own. The sin he is charged with is, forbidding Amos to prophesy; we do not find that he beat him or put him in the stocks, only he enjoined him silence, Prophecy not against Israel, and drop not thy word against the house of Isaac, he must not only not thunder against them, but he must not so much as drop a word against them; he cannot bear, no, not the most gentle distilling of that rain, that small rain. Let him therefore bear his doom.

(1.) For the opposition he gave to Amos, God will bring ruin upon himself and his family. This was the sin that filled the measure of his iniquity. [1.] He shall have no comfort in any of his relations, but be afflicted in those that were nearest to him. His wife shall be a harlot; either she shall be forcibly abused by the soldiers, as the Levite's concubine by the men of Gibeah, (they ravish the women in Zion, Lam. v. 11.) or she shall herself wickedly play the harlot, which, though she sin, her great sin, would be his affliction, his great affliction and reproach; and he may, indeed, be more particularly afflicted in the most holy place, and promulging spiritual whoredom. Sometimes the sins of our relations are to be looked upon as the judgments of God upon us. His children, though they keep honest, yet shall not keep alive; His sons and his daughters shall fall by the sword of war, and he himself shall live to see it. He had trained them up in iniquity, and therefore God will cut them off in their iniquity. [2.] He shall fall into the hands of the enemy, and be divided by line, by lot among the soldiers. What is ill got will not be long kept. [3.] He shall himself perish in a strange country, not in the land of Israel, which had been holiness to the Lord, but in a polluted land, in a heathen country, the fittest place for such a heathen to end his days in, that hated and silenced for his prophesies, and oppressed so much to the polluting the land with idolatry.

(2.) Notwithstanding the opposition he gave to Amos, God will bring ruin upon the land and nation; he was accused for saying, Israel shall be led away captive, (v. 11.) but he stands to it, and repeats it; for the unbelief of man shall not make the word of God of no effect; the burden of the word of the Lord may be driven with, but it cannot be shaken off; let Amaziah rage, and fret, and say what he will to the contrary, Israel shall surely go into captivity forth of his land. Note, It is to no purpose to contend with the judgments of God; for when God judges he will overcome. Stopping the mouth of God's ministers will not stop the progress of God's word, for it shall not return void.

CHAP. VIII.

Sinful times are here attended with sorrowful times, so necessary is the connexion between them; it is threatened here again and again that the laughter shall be turned into mourning. By the way, it is to be observed that fruit is signified the hastening on of the ruin threatened, (v. 1..3.) and that shall change their note. II. Oppressors are here called to an account for their abusing of the poor; and henceforward they are foretold, which will set them mourning, v. 4.-10. III. A famine of the word of God is here made the punishment of a people that go a whoring after other gods; (v. 11,14.) yet for this, which is the most cruel judgment of all, they are not here brought in mourning.

1. Thus hath the Lord God shewed unto me, and behold, a basket of summer-fruit. 2. And he said, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, A basket of summer-fruit. Then said the Lord unto me, The end is come upon my people of Israel; I will not again pass by them any more. 3. And the songs of the temples shall be howlings in that day, saith the Lord God: there shall be many dead bodies in every place; they shall cast them forth with silence.

The great reason why sinners defer their repentance de die in diem—from day to day, is, because they think God thus defers his judgments, and there is no song wherewith they so effectually sing themselves, and shew their complacency, and therefore God, by his prophets, frequently represents to Israel the day of his wrath not only as just and certain, but as very near and hastening on to peace; so he does in these verses.

1. The approach of the threatened ruin is represented by a basket of summer-fruit which Amos saw in a vision; for the Lord showed it to him, (v. 1.) and when he was about to send it to him (as he did), what sweet thou? Note, It concerns us to inquire whether we do indeed see that which God has been pleased to show us, and hear what he has been pleased to say to us; for many a thing God speaks, God shows once, yea, twice, and men perceive it not. Are we in the midst of the visions of the Almighty? Let it be as it was with him. He saw a basket of summer-fruit gathered and ready to be eaten, which signified, (1.) That they were ripe for destruction, rotten ripe, and it was time for God to put in the sedge of his judgments, and to cut them off; nay, the thing was in effect done already, and they lay ready to be eaten up. (2.) That the year of God's patience was drawing towards a conclusion, it was almost with it, and they that year would quickly have its period in a dismal winter. (3.) Those we call summer-fruits that will not keep till winter, but must be used immediately; an emblem of this people, that had nothing solid or consistent in them.

2. The intent and meaning of this vision is no more than this. It signifies that the end is come upon the people of Israel, for the end is kitz, which is of near affinity with kitz, the word used for summer-fruit. God had long spared them, and borne with them, but now his patience is tired out: they are indeed his people Israel, but their end, that latter end they had been so often reminded of, but had so long forgotten, is now come. Note, If sinners do not make an end of sin, God will make an end of them, yea, though they be his people Israel. What was said, ch. vi. 8. is here repeated as God's determined resolution; I will not again pass by them any more, they shall not be comibed at as they have been, nor the judgment coming turned away.

3. The consequence of this shall be a universal desolation; (v. 3.) When the end is come, sorrow and death shall ride in triumph, they are accustomed to go together, and shall length go away together, when in heaven there shall be no more death, nor sorrow, Rev. xxi. 4. But here in a sinful world, in a sinful nation, (1.) Sorrow reigns; reigns to that degree, that the songs of the temple shall be howlings; the songs of God's temple at Jerusalem, or, rather, of their idol-temples, where they used, when, in honour of the golden calves, they had eaten and drunk, to rise up and fly. They were perhaps wanton, profane songs; and it is certain that sooner or later those will be turned into howlings. Or if they had a sound or show of piety and religion, yet, not coming from the heart nor being sung to the glory of God, he valued them not, but would justly turn them into howlings. Note, Mourning will follow sinful mirth, yea, and sacred mirth too, if it be not sincere. And when God's judgments are abroad, they will soon turn the greatest joy into the greatest heaviness; the temple-songs, which used to sound so pleasant, not only into sighs and groans, but into loud howlings which sound dismal. They shall come to the temple, and, finding that in ruins, there they shall howl most bitterly.

(2.) Death reigns; reigns to that degree, that there shall be dead bodies, many dead bodies in every place, (Ps. cx. 6.) slain by sword or pestilence; so many, that the survivors shall not bury them with the usual pomp and solemnity of funerals, they shall not so much as have the belt tolled, but they shall cast them forth with silence; shall bury them in the dead of the night, and charge all about them to be silent, and to take no notice of it; either because they have not wherewithal to bear the charges of a funeral, or because, the killing disease being infectious, none will come near them; or for fear the enemy should be provoked, if they should be known to lament their slain. Or, they shall charge themselves and one another silently to submit to the hand of God in silence, and to be confounded by his pine and quarrel with him. Or, it may be taken not for a patient but a sullen silence; their hearts shall be hardened, and all these judgments shall not extort from them one word of acknowledgment, either of God's righteousness or their own unrighteousness.

4. Hear this, O ye that swallow up the needy, even to make the poor of the land to fail, 5. Saying, When will the new moon be gone, that we may sell corn? and the sabbath, that we may set forth wheat, making the ephah small, and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances by deceit? 6. That we may buy the poor for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes; yea, and sell the refuse of the wheat? 7. The Lord hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob, Surely I will never forget any of their works.

3. Shall not the land tremble for this, and every one mourn that dwelleth therein? and it shall rise up wholly as a flood; and it shall be cast out and drowned, as by the flood of Egypt. 9. And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord God, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day: 10. And I will turn your feasts into mourning, and all your songs into lamentation; and I will bring up sackcloth upon all loins, and baldness upon every head; and I will make it as the mourning of an only son, and the end thereof as a bitter day.

God is here contending with proud oppressors, and showing them, 1. The heinoussness of the sin they were guilty of; in short, they had the character of the unjust judge, (Luke xvii.) that neither feared God nor regarded man.

1. Observe them in their excursions, and you will say, "They have no reverence for God." Bad as they are they do indeed keep up a show and form of godliness, they observe the sabbath and the new moon, they put some difference between those days and other days; but they were soon weary of them, and had no affection at all to them, for their hearts..."
were wholly set upon the world and the things of it. It is a sad character which this gives of them, that they said, When will the sabbath be gone, that we may sell corn? Yet it is still the character of many of those who are called Christians. (1.) They were weary of sabbath-days; When will they be gone? They were weary of the restreints of the sabbaths and the new moons, and therefore wished them over, because they might do no servile work therein. They had no sabbaths and new moons, sniffed at it, (Mal. i. 13.) and were as Dog, detained before the Lord; (1 Sam. xxi. 7.) they would rather have been any where else than about God's altars. Note, Sabbath-days and sabbath-work are a burthen to carnal hearts, that are always afraid of doing too much for God and eternity. Can we spend our time better than in communion with God? And how much time do we spend pleasantly with the world? Will not the sabbath be gone before we have done the work of it, and reaped the gains of it? Why then should we be in such haste to part with it? (2.) They were fond of market-days; they longed to be selling corn, and setting forth weath. When they were employed in religious services, they were thinking of their marketings, their hearts were after them that dealt on the sabbaths and new moons, (Ezek. xiii. 2.) and thus made my Father's house, a house of merchandise, nay, a den of thieves. Therefore they were weary of holy duties, because their worldly business stood still the while; in which they were as in their element, but in God's sanctuary as a fish upon dry ground. Note, Those are strangers to God, and enemies to themselves, that love market-days better than sabbath-days, that would rather be selling corn than worshipping God.

2. Observe them in their conversations, and you will see they have no regard to man; and this commonly follows upon the former; those that have lost the savour of piety, will not long retain the sense of common honesty. These here neither do justice, nor love mercy.

(1.) They cheat those they deal with. When they sell their corn, they impose upon the buyer, both in giving out the goods, and in receiving the money for them. They measure him the corn by their own measure, and pretend to give him what he agreed for, but they make the ephah small. The measure is scanty, and not statute measure, and so they wrong him that way; when they receive his money, they must weigh it in their own scales, by their own weights, and their shekel; they weigh him by his own measures; and they give him not the fullness thereof. So that the money, being found too light, must have more added to it; and so they cheat that way too, and this under colour and pretence of exactness in doing justice. By such wicked practices as these, men show such a greediness of the world, such a love of themselves, such a contempt of mankind in general, of the particular persons they deal with, and of the sacred laws of justice, as speak their hearts. It was a great reproach to the first men of the earth, of that God who has so plainly said that false weights and balances are an abomination to him. Another instance of their fraudulent dealing is, that they sell the refuse of the wheat, and, taking the advantage of their neighbours' ignorance or necessity, make them take it at the same price at which they sell the finest of the wheat.

(2.) They are fierce and unmerciful to the poor; they swallow up the needy, and make the poor of the land to fail. [1.] They valued themselves so much on their wealth, that they looked upon all that were poor with the highest contempt imaginable; they hated them, could not endure them, but abandoned them; and therefore did what they could to make them cease; not by relieving them to make them cease to be poor, but by banishing and destroying them, to make them cease to be, or, at least, to be in their land. But he who thus reproaches the poor, despises his Maker, in whose hands rich and poor meet together. [2.] They were so eager to increase their wealth, and make it more, that they robbed the poor to enrich themselves; and therefore they fastened upon the poor, to make a prey of them, because they were not able to right themselves, nor to resist their revenge; they were的答案 into the hands of thieves. They frightened the riches that are got by the ruin of the poor, will bring ruin on those that get them. They swallowed up the poor by making them hard bargains, and cheating them in those bargains; for therefore they falsify the balances by deceit, not only that they may enrich themselves, may have money at command, and so may have every thing else (as they think) at command too, but that they may wish those about them, and bring them so low, that they may force them to become slaves to them, and so having drained them of every thing else, they may have their labour for nothing, or next to nothing: thus they buy the poor for silver, they bring them and their children into bondage, because they have not wherewithal to pay for the corn they have bought; Moreover they sold the poor for a pair of shoes. Why should we turn our eyes to commerce, where that were reduced to this extremity, that the price was very low; and the oppressors had beaten it down so, that you might buy a poor man to your sleeve for a pair of shoes. Property was first invaded, and then liberty: it is the method of oppressors first to make men beggars, and then to make them their vassals. Thus is the dignity of the human nature lost in the misery of those that are trampled on, and the tenderness of it in the sin of those that trample on them.

II. Observe the grievousness of the punishment that shall be inflicted on them for this sin. When the poor are injured, they will cry unto God, and he will hear their cry, and reckon with those that are injuries to them; for, they being his receivers, he takes the wrongs done to them as done to himself, Exod. xxxii. 23, 24. 3. God will remember their sin against them: He has sworn by the excellency of Jacob,(v. 7.) by himself, for he can swear by no greater; and who but he is the Glory and Magnificence of Jacob? He has sworn by these tokens of his presence with them, and his favour to them, which they had profaned and abused, and had done what they could to make them detestable to him; for he is said (ch. v. 5.) to *abhor the excellency of Jacob. He swears in his wrath, swears by his own name, that name which was so well known, and was so great in Israel; he swears, Surely I will never forget any of their works; but upon all occasions they shall be remembered against them, for more is implied than is expressed. I will never forget them, is as much as to say, I will never forgive them; and then it speaks the change of heart that must be wrought in them, that is so veritable indeed, eternally miserable; wo, and a thousand woes, to that man that is cut off by an oath of God from all benefit by pardoning mercy; and those have reason to fear judgment without mercy, that have showed no mercy.

2. He will bring utter ruin and confusion upon them. It is here described largely, and in a great variety of ways: God expresed, that, if possible, they might be frightened into a more repentant and reformation.

(1.) Two parts of it are a universal terror and consternation; Shall not the land tremble for this, (v. 8.) this land, out of which you thought to have driven the poor? Shall not every one mourn, that dwells therein? Certainly they shall. Note, Those that will not tremble and mourn as they ought for national sins, shall be made to tremble and mourn for national judgments; those that look unconcerned upon the sins of the oppressors, which should make them tremble, and upon the miseries of the oppressed, which should make them mourn, God will find out a way to make them tremble at the fury of those that oppress them, and mourn for their own losses and sufferings by it.

(2.) There shall be a universal deluge and desolation; when God comes forth against them, the waters of trouble and calamity shall rise up wholly as a flood, that swells when it is dammed up, and soon overflows its banks. Every thing shall make against them; that with which they thought to check the progress of God’s judgments, shall but make them rise the higher. Judgments shall force their way, as the breaking forth of waters. The whole land shall be cast out, and drowned, and laid under water, as the land of Egypt is every year by the overflowing of its river Nile. Or, the expressions may allude to some former judgments of God; Their ruin shall rise up wholly as a flood, as Noah’s flood, which overwhelmed the whole world, so shall this the whole land; and the land shall be cast out and drowned, as by the flood of Egypt, as Pharaoh and his Egyptians were buried in the Red sea, which was to them the flood of Egypt; both which judgments, as this here threatened, were the punishment of violence, and oppression, which the Lord is the Avenger of.

3. Behold, I will surprise them, and come upon them when they little think of it; (v. 9.) I will cause the sun to go down at noon, when it is in its full strength and lustre; at their noon, when they promise themselves a long afternoo, and think they have at least half a day good before them. The earth shall be darkened in the clear day; when every thing looks pleasant and hopeful. Thus uncertain are all our comforts and enjoyments. The highest degree of health and prosperity often proves the next degree to sickness and adversity; Job’s sun went down at noon; many are taken away in the midst of their days, and their sun goes down at noon; in the midst of life we are in death. Thus terrible are the judgments of God to those that sleep in security; they are to them as the sun’s going down at noon; the less they are expected, the more confounding they are; when they cry peace and safety, then sudden destruction comes, comes as a snare, Luke xxii. 35.

4. It shall change their note, and mar all their mirth; (v. 10.) I will turn your feasts into mourning, as v. 3. the songs of the temple into howlings. Note, The end of the sinner’s mirth and jollity is heavniness. As to the upright, there arises light in the darkness, which gives them the oil of joy for mourning, so on the wicked there falls darkness in the midst of light, which turns their laughter into mourning, their joy into heaviness. So great, so general shall the desolation be, that sackcloth shall be brough upon all loins, and baldness upon every head, instead of the well-set hair, and the rich garments they used to wear. To this shall be added, as a bitter day; a day of bitter mourning; the state of impatient sinners grows worse and worse at the day shall be as mourning for an only son, which speaks the most bitter and lasting lamentation. But are there no hopes that when things are at the worst they will mend, and that at evening time it will yet be light? No, even the end thereof should be as a bitter day; a day of bitter mourning; the state of impatient sinners grows worse and worse at and the day shall be as mourning for an only son, which speaks the most bitter and lasting lamentation.

11. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land; not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord:

12. And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the cast; they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it. 13. In that day shall the fair virgins and young men faint for thirst. 14. They that swear by the sin of Samaria, and say, Thy God, O Dan, liveth; and, The manner of Beer-sheba liveth; even they shall fall, and never rise up again.

In these verses is threatened,
I. A general judgment of spiritual famine coming upon the whole land; a famine of the word of God; the failing of oracles, and the scarcity of good preaching. This is spoken of as a thing at some distance; The days come, they will come hereafter, when another kind of darkness shall come upon that land of light. When Amos prophesied, and for a considerable time after, there was great plenty of prophets, abundant opportunities of hearing the word of God, in season and out of season, they had precept upon precept, and line upon line; prophecy was their daily bread; and it is probable that they surfeited upon it, as Israel on the manna, and therefore God threatens that hereafter he will deprived them of it. Now, as to the land of Israel there were not so many prophets, about the time that their destruction came upon them, as there were in the land of Judah; and when the ten tribes went into captivity, they saw not their signs, there were no more any prophets, none to show them how long. Ps. lxiv. 9. The Jewish church, after M-shacli, had no prophets for many ages; and it is likely they only, who knew a fife, and yet were in the blindness which is in part happened to Israel in the days of the Messiah, and the vail that is on the heart of the unbelieving Jews. They reject the gospel, and the ministers of it that God sends to them, and covet to have prophets of their own, as their fathers had, but they shall have none; the kingdom of God being taken from them, and given to another people. Observe books further yet, to 1. What the judgment itself is, that is threatened. It is a famine, a scarcity, not of bread and water, (which are the necessary supports of the body, and the want of which is very grievous,) but a much sorier judgment than that, even a famine of hearing the words of the Lord. There shall be no congregations for ministers to preach to, nor any ministers to preach, nor any instructions and abilities given to those that do set up for preachers, to enable them for their work. The word of the Lord shall be precious and scarce, there shall be no vision, 1 Sam. iii. 1. They shall have the written word, Bibles to read, but no ministers to explain and apply it to them; the water in the well, but nothing to draw. It is a gracious promise, (Isa. xxxv. 20.) that they shall have a scarcity of bread, and they shall have plenty of the means of grace. God will give them the bread of adversity, and the water of affliction, but their eyes shall see their teachers, and it was a common saying among the Puritans, that brown bread and the gospel is good fare; but it is here a threatening, that on the contrary they should have plenty enough of bread and water, and yet their teachers should be removed. Now, 1. This was the departure of a great part of their glory from their land. This made their nation great and high, that to them were committed the oracles of God; but when those were taken from them, their beauty was stained, and their honour laid in the dust. (2.) This was a token of God’s highest displeasure against them; surely he was angry indeed with them, when he would no more speak to them as he had done, and had abandoned them to ruin, when he would no more afford them the means of bringing them to repentance. (3.) This made all the other calamities that were upon them truly melancholy, that they had no prophets to instruct and comfort them from the word of God, nor to give them any hopeful prospect. We should say at any time, and will say in a time of trouble, that a famine of the word of God is of all others the most mischievous, the heaviest judgment.

2. What will be the effect of this; (v. 12.) They shall wander from sea to sea, from the sea of Tiberias to the great sea, from one border of the country to another, to see if God will send them prophets, either by sea or land, from other countries; since they have none among themselves, they shall go from the north to the south, when they are disappointed in one place, they shall try another, and shall waste and devour, as men at a loss, and in a hot pursuit to seek the word of the Lord, to inquire if there be any prophets, any prophecy, any message from God, but they shall not find it. (1.) Though to many this is no affliction at all, yet some will be very sensible of it as a great grievance, and will gladly travel far to hear a good sermon; but they shall sensibly feel the loss of those mercies which others have, and shall long for them. (2.) Even those that slighted prophets when they were sent among them, shall wish for them, as Saul did for Samuell, when they were deprived of them: many never know the worth of mercies till they feel the want of them. Or, it may be meant thus, Though they should thus wander from sea to sea, in quest of the word of God, yet they shall not find it. Note, The means of grace are moveable things; and the candlestick, when we think ourselves at home, may be carried out of its place; (Rev. ii. 5.) and those that now slight the days of the son of man, may wish in vain to see them. And in the day of this famine the fair virgins and the young men shall faint for thirst; (v. 13.) those who, one would think, could well enough have borne the toil, shall sink under it. The Jewish churches, and the masters of their synagogues, some take to the vanity of the virgins and the young men; these shall lose the word of the Lord, and the benefit of divine revelation, and shall faint away for want of it, shall lose all their strength and beauty. Those that trust in their own merit and righteousness, and think they have no need of Christ, others take to be meant by the fair virgins and the choice young men; those shall faint for thirst, when those that hunger and thirst after the righteousness of Christ shall be abundantly satisfied and filled.

II. The particular destruction of those that were ringleaders in idolatry, v. 14. Observe, 1. The sin they were charged with. They swear by the sin of Samaria, by the god of Samaria, the idol that was worshipped at Bethel, not far off from Samaria; thus did they glory in their shame, and swear by that as their god, which was their iniquity, thinking that that could justify them, which would certainly ruin them, and giving the highest honor and worship, which they should have looked upon with the utmost abhorrence and detestation. They say, Thy god, O Dan, liveth; that was the other golden calf, a dumb, dead idol, and yet caressed and complimented as if it had been the living and the true God. They say, The manner, or way, of Beer-sheba liveth; they swear by the religion of Beer-sheba, the way and manner of worship used there, which they looked upon as sacred, and therefore swear by, and appealed to as a judge of controversy. Thus the Papists swear by the mass, as the manner of Beer-sheba. 2. The destruction they are threatened with; those who thus give that honor to idols, which is due to God alone, will find that God they affront is thereby made their enemy, so that they shall fall, and that the gods they serve cannot stand their friends, that they shall never rise again. They will find that God is jealous, and will resent the indignity done him; and that he will be victorious, and it is to no purpose to contend with him.

In this chapter we have, I. Judgments threatened, which the sinner shall not escape, (v. 1-4.) which an mighty power shall inflect, (v. 5, 6.) which the people of Israel have deserved as a sinful people; (v. 7, 8.) and yet it shall not be the utter ruin of their nation, (v. 8.) for a remnant of good people shall escape. 2. But the wicked ones shall perish, v. 11. More promised, which was to be bestowed in the latter days, (v. 11-15.) as appears by the application of it to the days of the Messiah, Acts xiv. 16. And with those comfortable promises, after all the foregoing rebukes and threatening, the book concludes.

1. I SAW the Lord standing upon the altar: and he said, Smite the lintel of the door, that the posts may shake: and cut them in the head, all of them; and I will slay the last of them with the sword: he that fleeth of them shall not flee away; and he that escapeth of them shall not be delivered. 2. Though they dig into hell, thence shall my hand take them; though they climb up to heaven, thence will I bring them down: 3. And though they hide them selves in the top of Carmel, I will search and take them out thence; and though they be hid from my sight in the bottom of the sea, thence will I command the serpent, and he shall bite them: 4. And though they go into captivity before their enemies thence will I command the sword, and it shall slay them: and I will set mine eyes upon them for evil, and not for good. 5. And the Lord God of hosts is he that touch eth the land, and it shall melt, and all that dwell therein shall mourn; and it shall rise up wholly like a flood, and shall be drowned, as by the flood of Egypt. 6. It is he that buildeth his stories in the heaven, and hath founded his troop in the earth; he that calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth; The Lord is his name. 7. Are ye not as children of the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Israel? saith the Lord. Have not I brought up Israel out of the land of Egypt, and the Philistines from Caphtor, and the Assyrians from Kir? 8. Behold, the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful kingdom, and will deliver thee into his hand, and will throw thee upon the face of the earth; saving that I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob, saith the Lord. 9. For, lo, I will command, and I will sith the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sithed in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth. 10. All the sinners of my people shall die by the sword, which say, The evil shall not overtake nor prevent us.

We have here the justice of God passing sentence upon a provoking people; and observe,

1. With what solemnity the sentence is passed.
The prophet saw in vision the Lord going up the adoring multitudes, and declaring the Lord has a sacrifice, and multitudes must fall as victims to his justice. He is removed from the mercy-seat between the cherubims, and stands upon the altar, the judgment-seat, on which the fire of God used to fall, to devour the sacrifices. He stands upon the altar, to show that the ground of his controversy with his people was the wrath and sacrifice, that he would, with a law, move them, wound them in the head, all of them, break down the door of God's house, or of the courts of his house, in token of this—that he is going out from it, and forsaking it, and then all judgments are breaking in upon it. Or it signifies the destruction of those in the first place, that should be as the door-posts to the nation for its defense, so that, they being broken down, it becomes as a city without gates and walls, and as the lintel of a door, that the princes, who are as the posts, may shake; cut them in the head, cleave them down, all of them, as wood for the fire; and I will slay the last of them, the posterity of them, and their families, or the least of them, them and all that are employed under them; or, I will slay them all, them and all that remain of them, till it comes to the last man; the slaughter shall be general. There is no living for those of whom God has said, I will slay them; no standing before his sword.

2. What effectual care is taken that none shall escape the execution of this sentence. This is enlarged upon here, and is intended for warning to all that provoke the Lord to jealousy; let sinners read it, and tremble; as there is no fighting it out with God, unless there be some thing of remedy. This judgment, when they come with commission, as they will over power the strongest that think to outface them, so they will overtake the swiftest that think to outrun them, v. 2. Those of them that flee, and take to their heels, shall soon be out of breath, and shall not flee away out of the reach of danger; for as sometimes the wicked flee when none pursues, so he cannot flee away when God pursues, though he would vain flee out of his hand. Nay, he that escapes of them, that thinks he has gained his point, he shall not be delivered; evil pursues sinners, and will arrest them.

This is here-enlarged upon by showing that wherever sinners flee for shelter from God's justice, it will overtake them, and the shelter will prove but a refuge of safety, what David says of this, Ps. xxxiii. 10, 11, that God is the refuge of his people; that God is the strength of his people, that God is the shield of his people, that God is the joy of his people. The effectual care taken that none shall escape of them, who do not, as these sinners, think to hide themselves by their own presumption, and confidence in themselves, will be brought down, and filled with shame. (3. The top of Carmel, one of the highest parts of the dust of the world in that country, shall not protect them; "Though they hide themselves there, where they imagine nobody will look for them, I will see to it that they be burned; nor shall the thickest bushes, nor the darkest caves, in the top of Carmel, will serve to hide them." (4.) The bottom of the sea shall not serve to conceal them; though they think to hide themselves there, even there the judgments of God shall find them out, and lay hold on them; Thence will I command the serpent, and he shall bite them; the crooked serpent, even the dragon that is in the sea, xxviii. and they shall find their plague and death there where they hope to find shelter and protection; diving will stand them in no more stead than climbing. (5.) Remote countries will not be friend them, nor shall lesser judgments excuse them from greater; (v. 4.) Though they go into captivity before their enemies, who carry them to places at a great distance, and mingle them with the nations, and lose them to be lost, yet that shall not serve their turn; Thence will I command the sword, and it shall slay them; the sword of the enemy, or one another's sword; when God judges, he will overcome. That which binds on all this, and makes their escape impossible, and their ruin inevitable, is, that God will set his eyes upon them for evil, and not for good. His eyes are upon them, whatever place, are upon all men, and upon all the ways of men, upon some for good, to show himself strong on their behalf, but upon others for evil, to take notice of their sins, (Job xiii. 27.) and take all opportunities of punishing them for their sins. Their case is truly miserable, who have the providence of God, and all the dispensations of it, against them, working for their hurt.

What a great and mighty God he is, that pass es this sentence upon them, and will take the executing of it into his own hands. Threatenings are more or less formidable, according to the power of him that threatens. We laugh at importunate wrath; but the wrath of God is not so, it is omnipotent wrath; who knows the power of it? What he had before said he would do, (ch. viii. 8.) is here repeated, that he would make the land melt and tremble, and all that dwell therein mourn, that the judgment should rise up wholly like a flood, and the country should be drowned, and laid under water, as by the flood of Egypt, v. 5. But is he able to make his words good? Yes, certainly he is, he does but touch the land, and it melts, touch the mountains and they smoke; he can do it with the greatest ease, for, (1.) He is the Lord God of hosts against them; for the Lord God of hosts saith the word; it is the Lord God of hosts against them; it is the Lord God of hosts, and he saith, the Lord God of hosts is against them; the Lord God who has all the power in his hand, and all creatures at his beck and call, who, having made them all, and given them their several capacities, makes what use he pleases of them, and all their powers. Very miserable is the case of those who have the Lord of hosts against them, for they have hosts against them, the whole creation at war with them. (2.) He is the Creator and Governor of the upper world. It is he that builds his stories in the heavens, the celestial orbs or spheres, one over another, as so many stories in a high and stately palace; they are his, for he built them at first, when he said, Let there be a firmament, and he made the firmament, and he builds them still, is continually building them, not that they need repair, but by his providence, he always upholds them; his power is the pillars of heaven, by which it is borne up. Now he that has the command of those stories, is certainly to be feared, for from thence, as from a castle, he can fire upon his enemies, or cast upon them great hail stones, as on the Canaanites, or make the stars in their courses, the furniture of those stories, to fight against them, as against Sisera. (3.) He has the command of all the earth and sea, too, in which we dwell, the terraqueous globe, with earth, sea, and air, so that, which way soever his enemies think to make their escape, he will meet them, or to make opposition, he will match them. Do they think to make a land-fight of it? He has sounded his troop in the earth, his troop of guards, which he has at command, and makes use of for the protection of his subjects, and the punishment of his enemies. All the creatures on earth make one bundle, (as the margin reads it,) one bundle of arrows, out of which he takes what he pleases to discharge against the persecutors, Ps. vii. 13. They are all one army, one body, so closely are they connected, and so harmoniously and so much in concert do they act for the accomplishing of their Creator's purposes. Do they think to make a sea-fight of it? He has all the sea and seas there, for he has the waters of the sea at command: even its treasures, the most tumultuous, rebellious waters, do obey him. He calls for the waters of the sea in the course of his common Providence, causes vautours to ascend out of it, and pours them out in showers, the small rain and the great rain of his strength, upon the face of the earth this was mentioned before as a reason why we should seek the Lord, (ch. v. 8.) and make him our Rock, Friend, and helper in all reasons why we should fear him, and dread having him our Enemy.

4. How justly God passes this sentence upon the people of Israel. He does not destroy them by an act of sovereignty, but by an act of righteousness; for, (v. 8.) it is a sinful kingdom, and the eyes of the Lord are upon it, discovering it to be so; he sees the great sinfulness of it, and therefore he will destroy it from off the face of the earth. Note, When those kingdoms that in name and profession were holy kingdoms, and kingdoms of priests, as Israel was, become sinful kingdoms, no other can be expected than that they should be cut off and abandoned. Let sinful kingdoms, and sinful families, and sinful persons too, see the eyes of the Lord upon them, observing all their wickedness, and reserving the notice of it for the day of reckoning and recompense. This being a sinful kingdom, see how light God makes of it, v. vii. (1.) Of the relation wherein he stood to it; Are ye not as children of the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Israel? A sad change! children of Israel become as children of the Ethiopians! [1.] They were so in themselves, that was their sin; it is a thing to be greatly lamented. (2.) They were so in connection with others, the children of the Ethiopians; the children of godly parents degenerate, and become the reverse of those that went before them. Those that were well educated and trained up in the knowledge and fear of God, and set out well, and promised fair, throw off their profession, and become as bad as the worst. How is the gold become dim! [2.] They were so in God's account for them, their punishment; he valued them no more, though they were children of Israel, than if they had been children of the Ethiopians. We read of one in the title of Ps. vii. that was Cush, (an Ethiopian, so some understand it,) and yet a Benjaminite. That which by birth and profession are children of Israel, if they degenerate, and become wicked and vile, are to God no more than children of the Ethiopians. This is an intimation of the rejection of the unbelieving Jews in the days of the Messiah; because they embraced not the divine person of Christ, the kingdom of God was cast off from them, they were unchristian and cast out of covenant, became as children of the Ethiopians, and are so to this day. And it is true of those that are called Christians, but do not live up to their name and profession, that rest in the form of piety, but live under the power of reigning iniquity, that they are to God as children of the Ethiopians; he rejects them, and makes them over to the judgment. He makes of the favours he had conferred upon them; they thought he would not, he could not, cast them off, and put them upon a level with other nations, because he had done that for them which he had not done for other nations, whereby they thought he was bound to them, so as never to leave them. No, says he, The favours showed you are no so distinguishing as you think they are; Have I not brought up Israel out of the land of Egypt? It is true, I have; but I have also brought the Philistines from Caphtor, or Cappadoceia, where they were either natives, or captives, or both; or they are called the remnant of the country of Caphtor, (Jer. xlvii. 4.) and the Philistines are joined with the Caphtorim, Gen. x. 14. In like manner, the Syrians were brought away, and then they had been carried away thither, 2 Kings. v. 21. Now if God's Israel lose the peculiarity of their holiness, they lose the peculiarity of their privileges; and what was designed as a favour of special grace shall be set in another light, shall have its property altered, and shall become an act of common providence; if professors liken themselves to the world, God will level them with the world. And if we live not as the children of light, and in the powers of darkness, we forfeit the favour and comfort of them.

How graciously God will separate between the precious and the vile, in the day of retribution. Though the wicked Israelites shall be as the wicked Ethiopians, and their being called Israelites shall stand them in no stead, yet the pius Israelites shall not be as the wicked ones; no, the Judge of all the earth will do right, more right than to save the righteous with the wicked, Gen. xviii. 25. His eyes are upon the sinful kingdom, to spy out those in it who preserve their integrity, and swim against the stream, who sigh and cry for the abominations of their land, and they shall be marked for preservation, so that the destruction shall not be total; I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob, not ruin them by wholesale, and in the gross, good and bad together, but I will distinguish, as becomes a righteous Judge. The house of Israel shall be sifted as corn is sifted; they shall be greatly hurried, and shaken, and tossed, but still in the hands of God, in both his hands, as the sieve in the hands of him that sifts; (v. 8.) I will sift the house of Israel among all nations; wherever they are shaken and scattered, God will have his eye upon them, and will take care to sift them, and strike them off from the kingdom of God, which was the thing he designed in sifting them. (1.) The righteous ones among them, that are as the solid wheat, shall none of them perish; they shall be delivered either from, or through, the common calamities of the kingdom; not the least grain shall fall on the earth, so as to be lost and forgotten; not the least stone, so the word is, for the good corn is saved. (2.) The wicked ones, in a step of correction, in with which we call light corn. Note, Whatever shakings there may be in the world, God does, and will, effectually provide that none who are truly his, shall be truly miserable. (2.) The wicked ones among them, who are hardened in their sins, shall all of them perish, v. 10. See what a height of impolicy they are come to; They say, The evil shall not overtake and prevent us, They think they are innocent, and do not deserve punishment, or, that the profession they make of relation to God will be their exemption and security from punishment, or, that they shall be able to make their part good against the judgments of God, that it shall flce the wrath of God, that they shall not overtake them, or guard so carefully against them, that they shall not prevent or surprise them. Note, Hope of impurity is the deceitful refuge of the impotent. But see what it will come to at last; all the sinners that thus flatter themselves, and afford God, shall die by the sword, the sword of war, which to them shall be the sword of divine vengeance; yea, though they be the sinners of my people; for their profession shall not be their protection. Note, Evil is often nearest those that put it at the greatest distance from them.

11. In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old; 12. That they may possess the remnant of Edom, and of the heathen, which are called by my name, saith the Lord that doeth this. 13. Behold, the days, saith the Lord, that the ploughman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed; and the mountains shall drop sweet wine, and all the hills shall melt. 14. And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. 15. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God.

To Him to whom all the prophets bare witness, this prophet, here in the close, bears his testimony, and speaks of that day, those days that shall come, in which God will do great things for his church, by the setting up of the kingdom of the Messiah, for the rejecting of which the rejection of the Jews was foretold in the foregoing verses. The promise here is said to be agreeable to the planting of the Christian church, and in that to be fulfilled, Acts xv. 15. 17.

1. It is promised that in the Messiah the kingdom of David shall be restored; (v. 11.) the tabernacle of David it is called, his house and family, which, though great and fixed, yet, in comparison with the kingdom of heaven, was mean and movable as a tabernacle. The church militant, in its present state, dwelling as in shepherds' tents, to feed, as in soldiers' tents, to fight, is the tabernacle of David. God's tabernacle is called the tabernacle of David, because David desired and chose to dwell in God's tabernacle for ever, Ps. lix. 4. Now, (1.) These tabernacles were fallen and gone to decay, the royal family was so impoverished, its power abridged, its honour stained, and laid in the dust; for many of that race degenerated, and in the captivity it lost the imperial dignity; sore breaches were made upon it, and at length it was laid in ruins. So it was with the church of the Jews; in the latter days of it, its glory was departed, it was like a tabernacle broken down, and brought to ruin, in respect both of purity and of prosperity. (2.) By Jesus Christ these tabernacles were raised and rebuilt. In him God's covenant with David had its accomplishment; and the glory of that house, which was not only sullied, but quite sunk, revived again, the breaches of it were closed, and its referendum upheld; nay, the spiritual glory of the family of Christ far exceeded the temporal glory of the family of David, when it was at its height. In him also God's covenant with Israel had its accomplishment, and in the gospel-church the tabernacle of God was set up among men again, and raised up out of the ruins of the Jewish state. This is quoted in the first compound veneration of Jerusalem, the temple and hills; yea, the spiritual tabernacle of God's people among men, and of God's taking out of them a people for his name. Note, While the world stands, God will have a church in it, and it if be fallen down in one place, and among one people, it shall be raised up elsewhere.

2. It is promised that that kingdom shall be enlarged, and the territories of it shall extend far, by the accession of many countries to it; (v. 12.) that the house of David may possess the remnant of Edom, and of all the heathen, that is, that Christ may have them given him for his inheritance, even the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession, Ps. ii. 8. Those that had been strangers and enemies, shall become willing, faithful subjects to the son of David, shall be added to the church, as those that were added by the Lord, that belong to the election of grace, and are ordained to eternal life; (Acts xiii. 48.) for it is true of the Gentiles as well as of the Jews, that the election hath obtained, and the rest were blinded, Rom. xi. 7. Christ died to gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad, here said to be these that were called by his name; the promise is that all that were ever of the house of them the Lord our God shall call, Acts ii. 39. St. James expounds this as a promise, that the residue of men should seek after the Lord, even all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called. But may the promise be depended upon? Yes, the Lord saith this, who doeth this; who can do it, who has determined to do it, the power of whose grace is engaged for the doing of it; and whom saying and doing are not two things, as they are with us.

3. That in the kingdom of the Messiah there shall be great plenty, and abundance of all good things, that the country produces, (v. 13.) The ploughman shall overtake the reaper; there shall be such a plentiful harvest every year, and so much corn to be gathered, that it shall last all summer, even till autumn comes; when it is then to begin to melt again, and in like manner the vintage shall continue till seed-time; and there shall be such abundance of grapes, that even the mountains shall drop new wine into the vessels of the grape-gatherers, and the hills that were dry and barren, shall be moistened, and shall melt with the finness, or mellowness (as we render the word) of the grapes; and God shall add the rain, Joel ii. 24 and iii. 18. This must certainly be understood of the abundance of spiritual blessings in heavenly things, which all those are, and shall be, blessed with, who are in sincerity added to Christ and his church; they shall be abundantly replenished with the goodness of God's house, with the graces and comforts of his Spirit; they shall have bread, the bread of life, to eat, and strong drink, to drink, and many consolations to make them glad; meat indeed, and drink indeed, all the benefit that comes to the souls of men from the word and Spirit of God; these had been long confined to the vineyard of the Jewish church, divine revelation, and the power that attended it, were to be found only within that enclosure; but in gospel-times, the mountains and hills of the Gentile world shall be enriched with these privileges by the gospel of Christ preached. and professed, and received in the power of it. When great multitudes were converted to the faith of Christ, and nations were born at once, when the preachers of the gospel were always caused to triumph in the success of their preaching, then the ploughman overtook the reaper; and when the Gentile churches were enriched in all utterance, and in all knowledge, and all manner of spiritual gifts, (1 Cor. i. 5.) then the mountains dropped sweet wine.

4. That the kingdom of the Messiah shall be well peopled; as the country shall be replenished, so shall the cities be; there shall be mouths for this meat, v. 14. Those that were carried captives, shall be brought back out of their captivity; their enemies shall not be able to detain them in the land of their captivity, nor shall they themselves incline to settle in it, but the remnant shall return, and shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them, shall form themselves into Christian churches, and set up pure doctrine, worship, and discipline among them, according to the gospel-charter, by which Christ’s cities are incorporated; and they shall enjoy the benefit and comfort thereof, they shall plant vineyards, and make gardens; though the mountains and hillocks drop wine, and the privileges of the gospel-church are laid in common, yet they shall enclose for themselves, not to monopolize these privileges, to the exclusion of others, but to appropriate and improve these privileges, in communion with others; and they shall drink the wine, and eat the fruit, of their own vineyards and gardens; for they that take pains in religion, as men must do about their vineyards and gardens, shall have both the pleasure and the profit of it. The bringing again of the captivity of God’s Israel, which is here promised, may refer to the cancelling of the ceremonial law, which had been long to God’s Israel as a yoke of bondage, and the investing of them in the liberty wherewith Christ came to make his church free, Gal. v. 1.

5. That the kingdom of the Messiah shall take such deep rooting in the world, as never to be root-ed out of it; (v. 15.) I will plant them upon their land. God’s spiritual Israel shall be planted, by the right hand of God himself, upon the land assigned them, and they shall no more be pulled up out of it, as the old Jewish church was. God will preserve them from throwing themselves out of it by a total apostasy, and will preserve them from being thrown out of it by the malice of their enemies; the church may be corrupted, but shall not quite forsake God, may be persecuted, but shall not quite be forsaken of God, so that the gates of hell, neither with their temptations, nor with their terrors, shall prevail against it. Two things secure the perpetuity of the church; (1.) God’s grants to it; It is the land which I have given them; and God will confirm and maintain his own grants. The part he has given to his people, is that good part which shall never be taken from them; he will not revoke his grant, and all the powers of earth and hell shall not invalidate it. (2.) Its interest in him; He is the Lord thy God, who has said it, and will make it good, thine, O Israel, who shall reign for ever, as thine unto all genera-tions. And because he lives, the church shall live also.

WITH

OF THE PROPHECY OF

OBADIAH.

This is the shortest of all the books of the Old Testament, the least of those tribes; and yet it is not to be passed by, or thought meanly of, for this penny has Caesar's image and superscription upon it; it is stamped with a divine authority. There may appear much of God in a short sermon, in a little book; and much good may be done by it; multum in parvo—much in a little. Mr. Norris says, "If angels were to write books, we should have few folios;" that may be very precious, which is not voluminous. This book is entitled, The Vision of Obadiah. Who this Obadiah was, does not appear from any other scripture; some of the ancients imagined him to be the same with that Obadiah that was steward to Ahab's household; (1 Kings xviii. 3.) and if so, he that hid and fed the prophets, had indeed a prophet's reward, when he was himself made a prophet. But that is a conjecture which has no ground. This Obadiah, it is probable, was of a later date; some think contemporarily with Hosea, Joel, and Amos; others think he lived about the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, when the children of Edom so barbarously triumphed in that destruction. However, what he wrote was what he saw; it is his vision; probably, there was much more, which he was divinely inspired to speak, but this is all he was inspired to write; and all he writes is concerning Edom. It is a foolish fancy of some of the Jews, that because he prophesies only concerning Edom, he was himself an Edomite by birth, but a proselyte to the Jewish religion; other prophets prophesied against Edom, and some of them seem to have borrowed from him in their predictions against Edom, as Jer. xlix. 7. &c. Ezek. xxv. 12. &c. Out of the mouth of these two or three witnesses every word will be established.

OBADIAH.

This book is wholly concerning Edom, a nation nearly allied, and near adjoining to Israel, and yet an enemy to the seed of Jacob, inheriting the enmity of their father Esau to Jacob. Now here we have, after the preface, v. 1. Threatenings against Edom. 1. That their pride should be humbled, v. 4. 2. That their wealth should be plundered, v. 5. 7. 3. That their wisdom should be infatuated, v. 8. 9. 4. That their spoil and goods shall not return, v. 10. 16. II. Gracious promises to Israel; that they shall be restored and reformed, and shall be victorious over the Edomites, and become masters of their land and the lands of their other neighbours, (v. 17. 20.) and that the kingdom of the Messiah shall be set up by the bringing in of the great salvation, v. 21.

1. THE vision of Obadiah. Thus saith the Lord God concerning Edom. We have heard a rumour from the Lord, and an ambassador is sent among the heathen, Arise ye, and let us rise up against her in battle. 2. Behold, I have made thee small among the heathen: thou art greatly despised. 3. The pride of thy heart hath deceived thee, thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock, whose habitation is high; that saith in his heart, Who shall bring me down to the ground? 4. Though thou exalt thyself as the eagle, and though thou set thy nest among the stars, thence will I bring thee down, saith the Lord. 5. If thieves came to thee, if robbers by night, (how art thou cut off!) would they not have stolen till they had enough? if the grape-gatherers came to thee, would they not leave some grapes? 6. How are the things of Esau searched out! how are his hidden things sought up! 7. All the men of thy confederacy have brought thee even to the border: the men that were at peace with thee have deceived thee, and prevailed against thee; they that eat thy bread have laid a wound under thee: there is none understanding in him. 8. Shall I not in that day, saith the Lord, even destroy the wise men out of Edom, and understanding out of the mount of Esau? 9. And thy mighty men, O Teman, shall be dismayed, to the end that every one of the mount of Esau may be cut off by slaughter.

Edom is the nation against which this prophecy is levelled, and which, some think, is put for all the enemies of Israel, that shall be brought down first or last. The rabbins by Edom understand Rome, Rome Christian they understand it of, and have an impicable enmity to it as such; but if we understand it of some anti-Christian, we shall find the passages of it applicable enough. And though Edom was mortified in the time of the Maccabees, as it had been before by Jehoshaphat, yet its destruction seems to have been typical, as their father Esau's rejection, and to have had further reference to the destruction of the enemies of the gospel-church; for so shall all God's enemies perish: and we find (in the first Epistle of Peter) that the enemies of him which was descended from Edom, to signify the general day of God's recompenses for the controversy of Zion, v. 8. Some have well observed, that it could not but be a temptation to the people of Israel, when they saw themselves, who were the children of beloved Jacob, in trouble, and the Edomites, the seed of hated Esau, not only prospering, but triumphing over them in their troubles; and therefore God gives them a prospect of the destruction of Edom, which should be total and final, and of a happy issue of their own correction.

Now we may observe here,

I. A declaration of war against Edom; (v. 1.) We have heard a rumour, or rather, an order, from the Lord, the God of hosts; he has given the word of command, it is his counsel and decree, which can neither be reversed nor resisted, that all who do mischief to his people, shall certainly bring mischief upon themselves. We have heard a report, that God is raised up out of his holy habitation, and is preparing his throne for judgment; and an ambassador is sent among the heathen, a herald rather, some minister or messenger of Providence, to alarm the nations, or the Lord's prophets, who gave each nation its burdens: These whom God employs, cry to each other, Arise ye, stir up yourselves and one another, and let us rise up against Edom in battle. The confederate forces under Nebuchadnezzar thus animate themselves and one another to make a descent upon that country; Gather ye together, and come against her; so it is in the parallel place, Jer. xlix. 14. Note, When God has the work to do among the enemies of his church, he will find out and fit up both hands and hearts to do it.

II. A prediction of the success of that war. Edom shall certainly be subdued, and spoiled, and brought down; for all her confidences shall fail her, and stand her in no stead, and in like manner shall all the enemies of God's church be disappointed in their hopes of it as which they staved themselves upon.

1. Do they depend upon their grandeur, the figure they make among the nations, their influence upon them, and interest in them? That shall dwindle; (v. 2.) Behold, I have made thee small among the heathen, so that none of thy neighbours will court thy friendship, or court an alliance with thee; thou art greatly despised among them, and looked upon with contempt, as an infatuated and unfaithful nation." And thus (v. 3.) the pride of thine heart has deceived thee. Note, (1.) Those that think well of themselves are not to expect any times of no times from them; but when they come to make trial of them, they will find themselves mistaken, and thus their pride deceives them, and by it slays them. (2.) God can easily lay those low, that have magnified and exalted themselves; and will find out a way to do it, for he resists the proud; and we often see those small and greatly despised, who once looked very big, now greatly esteemed and accounted of.

2. Do they depend upon the fortifications of their country, both by nature and art, and glory in the advantages they have thereby? Those also shall deceive them. They dwell in the cliffs of the rock, as an eagle in her nest, and their habitation was high, not only exalted above their neighbours, which was the matter of their pride, but fortified against their enemies, which was the matter of their security, so high as to be out of the reach of danger. Now observe, (1.) What Edom says in the pride of his heart; Who shall bring me down to the ground? He speaks with a confidence of his own strength, and a contempt of God's judgments, as if almighty power itself could not overpower him. As for all his enemies, even God himself, he puff s at them, (Ps. x. 5.) sets them all at defiance. Their strong Edom is but a brother to a small one that have lifted up themselves, as if to them had still remained the excellency of dignity and power. Many forfeit their privileges, and yet boast of them. Because Edom is high and lifted up, he imagines none can bring him down. Note, Carnal security is a sin that most easily besets men in the day of their pomp, power, and prosperity; and does, as much as any thing, both to open men for ruin, and aggravate it when it comes. (2.) What God says to this, v. 4. If men will dare to challenge omnipotence, their challenge shall be taken up; Who shall bring me down? says Edom. I will, says God; Though thou exalt thyself as the eagle that soars high, and builds high, nay, though thou set thy nest among the stars, higher than ever any eagle flew, it is but in the day of his anger will he break thee down. This we had, Jer. xlix. 15. 16.Note, Sinners will certainly be made ashamed of their pride and security; of their pride when it has a fall, and of their security when their confidences fail their expectation.

3. Do they depend upon their wealth and treasure, the abundance of which is looked upon as the shield of war? Is their money their defence? Is that their strong city? It is so but in their own conceit, for it shall rather expose them than protect them; it shall be made a prey to the enemy, and they for the sake of it, v. 5, 6. Much to this purpose we had, Jer. xlix. 9, 10. Only here comes in a parenthesis, (How art thou cut off?) thou and all thy stores. The prophet foretells it, but laments it; that the end of their prosperity was cut off. How art thou cut off! How art thou stubified! So the Chaldee words it. How senseless art thou under these desolating judgments, as if they were but common strokes! But he shows that it should be an utter ruin, not a usual calamity; for, (1.) It is indeed a usual calamity for those that have wealth, to have it stolen, and to lose a little out of their great deal. Those came to them, (v. 6.) the end of their prosperity was cut off. How art thou fallen, and how great is thy fall! How art thou stubified! So the Chaldee words it. How senseless art thou under these desolating judgments, as if they were but common strokes! But he shows that it should be an utter ruin, not a usual calamity; for, (1.) It is indeed a usual calamity for those that have wealth, to have it stolen, and to lose a little out of their great deal. Those came to them, (v. 6.) the end of their prosperity was cut off. How art thou fallen, and how great is thy fall! How art thou stubified! So the Chaldee words it.
and out of a great stock it is scarcely missed. Those that rob orchards, or vineyards, carry off what they think fit; but they leave some grapes, some fruit for the owner, who easily bears his loss perhaps, and soon recruits it; but, (2.) It shall not be so with Edom; his wealth shall all be taken away, and nothing shall be left of the honour of his pillars.

6. How are the things of Esau, the things he sets his heart upon, and places his happiness in, his good things, his best things, how are these things, which were so carefully treasured up and concealed, how searched out by the enemy and seized! How are his hid things, his hid treasures, plundered, rifled, and carried away? It is said, that they have seen the light for many years, are now a spoil to the enemy. Note, Treasures on earth, though ever so fast locked up, and ever so artily hidden, cannot be so safely laid up but that thieves may break through and steal; it is therefore our wisdom to lay up for ourselves treasures in heaven.

4. Do they depend upon their alliances with neighbouring states and potentates? Those also shall fail them; (v. 7.) "The men of thy confederacy, all of them, the Ammonites and Moabites, and other thy high allies that were at peace with thee, that entered into a league offensive and defensive with thee, that solemnly engaged not only to do thee no hurt, but to do thee all the service they could; they did eat thy bread, were magnificently treated and entertained to the borders of the land; till thou wast just ready to engage the invading enemy; but then," (1.) "They have deceived thee; they flew back and retreated when thou wast in extremity, and proved as a broken reed to the traveller that is weary, and as the brooks in summer to the traveller that is thirsty; they bear no weight, yield no relief. Nay, (2.) "They have prevailed against thee; they were too hard to be taken in thy net, imposed upon thee, and by cheating thee ruined thee; thy fruits are destroyed, and disease and danger, and there left thee an easy prey to thine enemies. Note, Those that make flesh their arm, arm it against them. Yet this was not the worst. (3.) "They have laid a wound under thee; they have laid that under thee for a stay and support, for a foundation to rely on, for a pillow to repose on, which will prove a wound to thee; not as thorns only, but as swords. If God lay under thy arms of his power and love, these will be firm and easy under us, the God of our covenant will never deceive us; but if we trust to the men of our confederacy, and what they will lay under us, it may prove to us a wound and dishonour. And observe the just censure here passed upon Edom for trusting to men who thus played tricks with him; There is no understanding in him, or else he would never have put it into their power to betray him by putting such a confidence in them. Note, Those show they have no understanding in them, who, when they are encouraged to trust in the Creator, put a cheat upon themselves by reposeing a confidence in the creature.

5. Do they depend upon the politics of their enemies? These shall fail them, v. 8. Edom had been famous for great statesmen, men of learning and experience, that sat at the helm of government, and were masters of all the arts of management, that in all treaties used to outwit their neighbours; but now the counsellors are become fools, and the wise God makes them so; Shall I not in that day destroy the wise men out of Edom? As men, they shall fall by the sword in common with others, (Ps. xlix. 10.) and their wisdom shall not secure them; as wise men, they shall be infatuated in all their counsels, their best-laid designs shall be baffled, their measures broken, and those very projects by which they thought to establish themselves and the public interests, shall be the ruin of both. Thus wisdom perishes from Teman, as it is in the parallel place, Jer. xlix. 7. This was, (1.) The just punishment of their folly in trusting to an arm of flesh; There is no understanding in them, v. 7. They have not sense to trust in a living God, and the God of truth, but put confidence in men that make no hit of all. But if, (2.) God will destroy their understanding. Note, God will justly deny those understanding to keep out of the way of danger, that will not use their understanding to keep out of the way of sin. He that will be foolish, let him be foolish still. (2.) It was the forerunner of their destruction. A nation is then marked for ruin, when God hides the things that belong to its peace from the eyes of those that are intrusted with its counsels. Quos Deus vult perdere, eos demersurus est—God infatuates those whom he designs to destroy, Job xlii. 17.

6. Do they depend upon the strength and courage of their soldiers? They are not only able-bodied, but men of spirit and courage, they can face an enemy, and stand their ground; but now, (v. 9.) Those mighty men, those men of renown shall fall down, and their courage shall fail them, to the end that every one of the multitude of Esau may be cut off by slaughter, and none escape; the weak and feeble and unarmed must fall of course into the hands of the destroyer, when the mighty men are dismayed, and not only lose the day, but lose their lives, because they have lost their spirit. Hool, fir-trees, if the cedar be shaken, N. T. The death by damning of the mighty, often proves the death and destruction of the many; and it is in vain to depend upon mighty men for our protection, if we have not an Almighty God for us, much less if we have an Almighty God against us.

10. For thy violence against thy brother Jacob, shame shall cover thee, and thou shalt be cut off for ever. 11. In the day that thou standest on the other side, in the day that the strangers carried away captive his forces, and foreigners entered into his gates, and cast lots upon Jerusalem, even thou wast as one of them. 12. But thou shouldst not have looked on the day of thy brother, in the day that he became a stranger; neither shouldst thou have rejoiced over the children of Judah in the day of their destruction; neither shouldst thou have spoken proudly in the day of distress. 13. Thou shouldst not have entered into the gate of my people in the day of their calamity; yea, thou shouldst not have looked on their affliction in the day of their calamity, nor have laid hands on their substance in the day of their calamity. 14. Neither shouldst thou have stood in the cross-way, to cut off those of his that did escape; neither shouldst thou have delivered up those of his that did remain in the day of distress. 15. For the day of the Lord is near upon all the heathen: as thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee; thy reward shall return upon thine own head. 16. For as ye have drunk upon my holy mountain, so shall all the heathen drink continually; yea, they shall drink, and they shall swallow down, and they shall be as though they had not been.

When we have read Edom's doom, no less than utter ruin, it is natural to ask, What evil has he done? What is the ground of God's controversy with him? Many things, no doubt, were amiss in Edom, they were a sinful people, and a people laden with iniquity; but that one single crime which is laid to their charge, as filling their measure, and bringing this ruin upon them, that for which they here stand indicted, of which they are convicted, and for which they are condemned, is, the injuries and wrongs they had done to the people of Judah; (v. 10.) “It is for thy violence against thy brother Jacob, that ancient and hereditary grudge which thou hast borne to the people of Israel, that is it for which all this shame shall cover thee, and thou shalt be cut off for ever.” Note, Injuries to men are affronts to God, the righteous God that loveth righteousness, and hatcheth wickedness; and, as the Judge of all the earth doth not shun away from sin, so he will take notice of a sin that suffer wrong, and take vengeance upon those that do wrong. All violence, all unrighteousness, is sin; but it is a great aggravation of the violence, if it be done either, 1. Against any of our own people; it is violence against thy brother, thy near relation, to whom thou shouldst be a God—a redeemer, whom it is thy duty to right, if others wronged him; how wicked is it then for thee thyself to wrong him! Thou standest and abusest thine own mother’s son; this makes the sin exceeding sinful, Ps. 1. 20. Or, 2. Much more if he be done against any of God’s people; it is thy brother Jacob, that is in covenant with God, and dear to him. Thou hastest him whom God has loved, and because God has loved him; him whose cause God espouses, and will plead with jealousy; and in whose interest God is pleased so far to interest himself, that he takes the violence done to him as a matter of dishonor to himself; whose touches Jacob, touches the apple of the eye of Jacob’s God. So that it is crenim bestatius—high treason; for which, as for high treason, let Edom expect an ignominious punishment; Shame shall cover thee, and a ruining one, thou shalt be cut off for ever.

In the following verses we are told more particularly, 1. What the violence was which Edom did against his brother Jacob, and what are the proofs of his charge. It does not appear that the Edomites did themselves invade Israel, but that was more for want of power than will, they had malice enough to do it, but were not a match for them; but that which is laid to their charge, is, their barbarous conduct toward Judah and Jerusalem, when they were in distress, and ready to be destroyed, probably, by the Chaldeans; or upon occasion of the other calamities of the Jews; for this seems to have been always their temper toward them. See this charged upon the Edomites, (Ps. cxxxvii. 7.) that in the day of Jerusalem, they said, Raze it, raze it, and Ezek. xxv. 12. They are here told particularly what they did, by being told what they should not have done; (v. 12.—14.) Thou shouldst not have looked, thou shouldst not have entered; but thou didst do so. Note, In reflecting upon ourselves, it is good to compare what we have done with what we should have done, our practice with the rule, that we may discover wherein we have done amiss, have done those things which we ought not to have done; we should not have been where we were at such a time, should not have been in such and such company, should not have said what we said, nor have taken the liberty that we took. Sin thus looked upon in the glass of God’s commandment, will appear exceeding sinful. Let us see,

1. What was the case of Judah and Jerusalem, when the Edomites behaved themselves thus basely, and insulted over them. (1.) It was a day of distress with them; (v. 12.) it was the day of their calamity, so it is called three times, v. 13. With the Edomites it was a day of prosperity and peace, when with the Israelites it was a day of distress and calamity, for judgment commonly begins at the house of God. Children are corrected when strangers are let alone. (2.) It was the day of their destruction, (v. 12.) when both city and country were laid waste, were lied in ruins. (3.) It was a day when foreigners entered into the gates of Jerusalem, when the city, after a long siege, was broken up, and the great officers of the king of Babylon’s army came, and sat in the gates, as judges of the land; when they cast lots upon the spoils of Jerusalem, as the soldiers for Christ’s garments, what shares each of the conquerors shall have, what share of the lands, what share of the goods; or, cast lots, to determine themselves when and where they should attack it. (4.) It was a day when the strangers carried away captive his persons, (v. 11.) took the men of war from within the war, and carried them off, in poverty and shame, to their own country; or such a multitude of captives, that they were as an army. (5.) It was a day when thy brother himself, that had long been at home, at rest in his own land, became a stranger, an exile in a strange land. Now when this was the woful case of the Jews, the Edomites, their neighbours and brethren, should have pitied them and helped them, had been astonished with them and comforted them; but they have trembled to think that their own turn would come next: for if this were done in the green tree, what shall be done in the dry? But,

2. See what was the conduct of the Edomites toward them when they were in this distress, for which were they are here condemned. (1.) They looked with pleasure upon the affliction of God’s people; they were pleased, when the Israelites were afflicted, to add a piece of their misfortune, and take joy in it. (2.) They were pleased with it, that God had sent so many to Jerusalem, which they should have come in to the relief of their distressed neighbours, and looked upon them, and their day, looked on their affliction, (v. 12, 13.) with a careless, unconcerned eye, as the priest and Levite looked upon the wounded man, and passed by on the other side; these have a great deal to answer for, that are idle spectators of the troubles and afflictions of their neighbours, when they are capable of being their active helpers. But this was not all; they looked upon it with a scornful eye, with an eye of complacency and satisfaction: they looked and laughed to see Israel in distress, saying, Aha, so would we have it; they fed their eyes with the dreadful spectacle of Jerusalem’s ruins, and looked at it as those that had long looked for it, and often wished and prayed to see it. They were surprised, not by what they saw, but by what they saw as a proof of God’s displeasure against the children of Judah in the day of their destruction; they had not the good manners to conceal the pleasure they took in Judah’s destruction, and to disguise it, but openly declared it, and rudely and insolently declared it to them; they rejoiced over them, crowed, and hectored, and triumphed; upon them. Those have the spirit of Edomites, that can rejoice over any, especially over Israelites, in the day of their calamity. (3.) God spared not them, 32. They made their mouth wide, and they magnified the mouth, (so the word is,) against Israel; talked with a great disdain of the suffering Israelites, and with an air of haughtiness of the present safety and prosperity of Edom; as if it might be inferred from their present different state that the tables were turned, and now Edom was beloved, and the favourite of Heaven, and Jacob hated and forsaken. But they expect to be somehow or other effectually humbled and mortified themselves, that are puffed up and made proud by the humiliations and mortifications of others. (4.) They went further yet, for they entered into the gate of God's people in the day of their calamity, and laid hands on their substance; though they did not help to conquer them, they helped to plunder them, and put in for a share in the prey. v. 13. Jerusalem was thrown open, and then they entered it; its wealth was thrown about, and they seized it for themselves, excusing it with this, that they might as well take it as let it be lost; whereas it was taking what was not their own. Babylon lays Jerusalem waste, but Edom, by meddling with the spoil, becomes coart- courtor of the spoils. They reckoned with an accessory as post facto after the fact. Note, Those do but impoverish themselves, that think to enrich themselves by the ruins of the people of God; and those deceive themselves, who think they may call all that substance their own, which they can lay their hands on in a day of calamity. (5.) They did yet worse things; they not only invaded their borders, but invaded them in the day of their calamity; laid hands not only on their substance, but on their persons. v. 14. When the victorious sword of the Chaldeans was making bloody work among the Jews, many made their escape, and were in a fair way to save themselves by flight; but the Edomites basely intercepted them, stood in the cross-way where several roads met, by one of which the trembling Israelites were making the best of their way from the fury of the pursuers, and there they stopped them: some they barbarously and coward-like cut off themselves; others they took prisoners, and delivered up to the pursuers, only to ingratiate themselves with them, because they were now the conquerors. They should not have been thus cruel to them that lay at their mercy, and never had done them any hurt; or were more likely to do them any hurt; they should not have betrayed those whom they had such a fair opportunity to protect; but such are the tender mercies of the wicked. One cannot read this without a high degree of compassion toward those who were thus basely abused, who, when they fled from the sword of an open enemy; and thought they were got out of the reach of it, fell upon, and fell by, the sword of a treacherous neighbour, whom they were not apprehensive of any danger from. Nor can one read this, without a high degree of indignation toward those who were so perfectly lost to all humanity, as to exercise such cruelty upon such proper objects of compassion. (6.) In all this they joined with the open enemies and persecutors of Israel. Even thou shalt as one of them, an accessory in all the cruelties which joined in with evil-doers, and is aiding and abetting in their evil deeds, shall be reckoned, and shall be reckoned with, as one of them. 11. What the shame is, that shall cover them for this violence of theirs. 1. They shall soon find that the cup is going round, even the cup of trembling; and then they shall be punished in the same manner. In their condition that the Israel of God is now in, they will be ashamed to remember how they triumphed over them; (v. 15.) The day of the Lord is near upon all the heathen, when God will recompense tribulation to the trouble of his church. Though judgment begins at the house of God, it shall not end there. This should effectually drive us from tripping over others in their misery, that we know not how soon it may be our own case. 2. Their enmity to the people of God, and the injuries they have done them, shall be recompensed into their own bosoms; As thou hast done it shall be done unto thee. The righteous God will render both to nations and to particular persons. The punishment of wicked men is often made exactly to answer to the sin—and those that have abused others, come to be themselves abused in like manner. The just and jealous God will find out a time and way to avenge the wrongs done to his people, on those that have been injurious to them. As ye have drunk upon my holy mountain; (v. 16.) that is, God's professing people, who inhabit the holy mount Zion, have drunk deep of the cup of affliction, and (they being of the holy mountain would not excuse them,) so shall all the heathen drink, in their turn, of the same bitter cup; for if God bring evil on the city that is called by his name, shall they be unpunished, that never knew his name? See Jer. xxv. 29. And it is part of the burden of Edom; (Jer. xlix. 12.) They shall burn the forest with fire; he that had reason to promise themselves an exemption from it, have assuredly drunken; and shall Edom go unpunished, that is the generation of God's wrath? No, thou shalt surely drink of it; the cup of trembling shall be taken out of the hand of God's people, and put into the hand of them that afflict them, Isa. li. 22, 23. Nay, they may expect their case to be worse in the day of God's wrath than of old was in their day; for, (1.) The afflictions of God's people were but for a moment, and soon had an end, but their enemies shall drink continually the wine of God's wrath, Rev. xiv. 10. (2.) The dregs of the cup are reserved for the wicked of the earth: (Ps. lxxv. 8.) they shall drink and swallow down, or sip up, (as the margin reads it,) shall drink it to the bottom. (3.) The people of God, though they may be made to drink of the wine of astonishment for awhile, (Ps. lix. 3.) shall yet recover it, and come to themselves again; but the heathen shall drink, and be as though they had not been, there shall be neither any remains nor any remembrance of them, but they shall be wholly extinguished and rooted out. So let all thine enemies perish, O Lord; so they shall perish, if they turn not. 17. But upon mount Zion shall be deliverance, and there shall be holiness; and the house of Jacob shall possess their possessions. 18. And the house of Jacob shall be a fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, and the house of Esau for stubble, and they shall kindle in them, and devour them; and there shall not be any remaining of the house of Esau; for the Lord hath spoken it. 19. And they of the south shall possess the mount of Esau; and they of the plain the Philistines; and they shall possess the fields of Ephraim, and the fields of Samaria; and Benjamin shall possess Gilead. 20. And the captivity of this host of the children of Israel shall possess that of the Canaanites, even unto Zarephath; and the captivity of Jerusalem, which is in Sepharad, shall possess the cities of the south. 21. And salvation shall come up on mount Zion to judge the mount of Esau; and the kingdom shall be the Lord's.

After the destruction of the church's enemies is threatened, which will be completely accomplished in the great day of recompense, and that judgment for which Christ came once, and will come again, into this world, here follow precious promises of the salvation of the church, with which this prophecy concludes, as those of Joel and Amos did, which, however they might be in part fulfilled in the return of the Jews out of Babylon, notwithstanding the triumphant orations of many heart-seekers, yet if it were not actual, are yet, doubtless, to have their full accomplishment in that great salvation wrought out by Jesus Christ, to which all the prophets bare witness.

It is promised here,

1. That there shall be salvation upon mount Zion, that holy hill where God sets his anointed King; (Ps. ii. 6.) Upon mount Zion shall be deliverance, or, v. 17. There shall be those that escape: so the margin. A remnant of Israel, upon the holy mountain, shall be saved, v. 16. Christ said, Salvation is of the Jews, John iv. 22. God wrought deliverances for the Jews, typical of our redemption by Christ. But mount Zion is the gospel-church, from thence the New Testament law went forth, Is. ii. 3. Their salvation shall be preached and prayed for; to the gospel-church those are added, whose souls shall be saved; and for the faith and hope to this mount Zion, deliverance shall be wrought from wrath and the curse, from sin, and death, and hell, while those who continue afar off, shall be left to perish.

2. That, where there is salvation, there shall be sanctification in order to it. And there shall be holiness, to prepare and qualify the children of Zion for this deliverance; for wherever God designs glory, he gives no temporal deliverances are then wrought for us in mercy, when with them there is holiness; when there is wrought in us a disposition to receive them with love and gratitude to God, when we are sanctified, they are sanctified to us. Holiness is itself a great deliverance, and an earnest of that eternal salvation which we look for. There, upon mount Zion, in the gospel-church, shall be holiness; for that is it which becomes God's house forever, and the great design of the gospel, and its grace, is, to plant and promote holiness. There shall be the holy Spirit, the holy ordinances, the holy Jesus, and a select remnant of holy souls, in whom, and among whom, the holy God will delight to dwell. Note, Where there is holiness, there shall be deliverance.

3. That this salvation and sanctification shall spread, and prevail, and get ground, in the world; The house of Jacob, even this mount Zion, with the deliverance and the holiness there wrought, shall possess their possessions; the gospel-church shall be set up among the heathen, and shall replenish the earth; the apostle of Christ by their preaching shall gain possession of the hearts of men, for him whose messengers and ministers they are; and when they have passed the bounds of their own country, they shall possess their possessions, for those who have given up themselves to the Lord, give up all they have to him. When Lydia's heart was opened to Christ, her house was open to his ministers. When the Gentile nations became nations of them that were saved, were disciplined, walked in the light of the Lord, and brought their glory and honor, (1 Cor. xiv. 24.) even the house of Jacob possessed their possessions. This is in part fulfilled by the planting of the Christian religion in the world, and shall be fulfilled yet more and more by the setting up of Christ's throne there where Satan's seat is, and the erecting of the trophies of his victory upon the ruins of the devil's kingdom.

Now here is foretold, (1.) How this possession shall be gained, and the opposition given to it, got over; (v. 18.) The house of Jacob shall be a fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, for their God, and shall be a consuming fire, and the house of Esau shall be for stubble, easily devoured and consumed by this fire. This is fulfilled, [1.] In the conversion of multitudes by the grace of Christ; the gospel, preached in the house of Jacob and Joseph, and there owned and professed, shall be as a fire and a flame to melt and soften hard hearts, to burn up the dross of sin and corruption, that they may be purified and refined, and the honey and the spirit of burning. Christ, when he comes, shall be as a refiner's fire, Mal. iii. 1. [2.] In the confusion of all the impetuous, implicable enemies of the gospel of Christ, that oppose it, and do all they can to hinder the setting up of the kingdom of the Messiah by it. The gospel-day is a day that burns like an oven, in which all the proud, and all that do wickedly, shall be as stubble, Mal. iv. 1. Jacob and Joseph shall be as a fire and a flame; for those that meddle with them, to do them hurt, will find it is at their peril; they shall be to them as a torch of fire in a sheaf, Zech. xii. 6. The word of God in the mouth of his ministers is said to be like fire, and the people as wood to be devoured by it, Jer. v. 14. And the man of sin is to be consumed by the strong stream of Christ's church; 27. Iesd. and Joseph favoured the house of Esau, so that there was none of them left remaining. This the Lord spake by his prophets, and this he did by his apostles. (2.) How far this possession shall extend, v. 19, 20. This is described in Jewish language, which speaks the accession made to the land of Israel, after the return out of captivity in Babylon. The captivity of this host of Israel, this host of Israel that has been to captivity, and, now they are come back, are still called the children of the captivity, these shall not only recover their own land, but shall gain ground upon their neighbours adjoining to them, some of whom shall become proselites, and shall incorporate with the Jews, who, by possessing them in a holy communion, possess their land. We must reckon ourselves truly enriched by the conversion of our neighbours, to the fear of God, and the faith of Christ, and their coming to join with us in the worship of God. Such an accession to our Christian communion we must reckon to be more ruin and wealth and strength than an accession to our estates. Or, The ancient inhabitants of these lands that were carried away into captivity being lost, and never returning to their former city of Samaria, and many of the house of Israel that were carried away; they shall possess their possessions, for those who have given up themselves to the Lord, give up all they have to him. When Lydia's heart was opened to Christ, her house was open to his ministers. When the Gentile nations became nations of them that were saved, were disciplined, walked in the light of the Lord, and brought their glory and honor, (1 Cor. xiv. 24.) even the house of Jacob possessed their possessions. This is in part fulfilled by the planting of the Christian religion in the world, and shall be fulfilled yet more and more by the setting up of Christ's throne there where Satan's seat is, and the erecting of the trophies of his victory upon the ruins of the devil's kingdom.
Jordan, which had belonged to the two tribes and a half. The kingdom of Israel shall join with that of Judah, both in civil and sacred interests, and, as friends and brethren, shall mutually possess and enjoy one another; and both together shall possess the Canaanites, even to Zarephath, which belongs to Zidon; and Jerusalem shall possess the cities of the south, even to Sepharad. Thus did the Jews enlarge their borders on all sides. The modern rabbins teach their scholars by Zarephath and Sepharad to understand France and Spain, grounding upon this a foolish, groundless expectation, that, some time or other, the Jews shall be master of those countries; and they call and count the Christians Edomites, over whom they are to have dominion. But the promise here, no doubt, has a spiritual signification, and had its accomplishment in the setting up of the Christian church, the gospel Israel, in the world, and shall have its accomplishment more and more in the enlargement of it, and the additions made to it, till the mystical body is completed. When ministers and Christians prevail with their neighbours to come to Christ, to yield themselves to the Lord, they possess them. The converts that Abraham made, are said to be the souls that he had gotten, Gen. xii. 5. The possession is gained, not "vit et armis—by force and arms; for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but spiritual; it is by the preaching of the gospel, and the power of divine grace given along with it, that this possession is got and kept.

4. That the kingdom of the Redeemer shall be erected and maintained, to the comfort of his loyal subjects, and the terror and shame of all his enemies; (v. 21.) The kingdom shall be the Lord’s, the Lord Christ’s. God shall give it him, by putting all things into his hand, all power both in heaven and in earth; men shall give it him, by resigning themselves to him as his willing people, and appointing him their Head. Now the work of kings is to protect their subjects and suppress their enemies; and this Christ will do; he will both reward and punish. (1.) The mountain of Zion shall be saved; on it saviours shall come; the preachers of the gospel, who are called saviours, because their business is to save themselves and those that hear them; and in this they are workers together with Christ, but to little purpose, if he by his grace did not work together with them. (2.) The mountain of Esau shall be judged; and the same that come as saviours on mount Zion, shall judge the mountain of Esau; for the word of the gospel in their mouth, that saves believers, judges unbelievers, convinces and condemns them. Christ’s ministers are saviours on mount Zion, when they preach that he that believes shall be saved; but they judge the mount of Esau, when they preach, that he that believes not shall be damned, which they are not only commissioned, but commanded to do, Mark xvi. 16. And in the course of God’s providence his scripture is fulfilled: when God raises up friends to the church in her distress, (as he raised up judges to deliver Israel of old, Judg. ii. 16.) then saviours come on mount Zion, to save it from being sunk and ruined; and when the enemies of the church are brought down, and their power broken, then is the mount of Esau judged; and this shall be done in every age in such a way as God thinks best; we may depend upon it, that the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church, but the church shall prevail against them; for the kingdom shall be the Lord’s, the kingdom of the world shall become his, and he has taken and will take to himself his great power and reign.

WITH

JONAH.

This book of Jonah, though it be placed here in the midst of the prophetic books of scripture, is yet rather a history than a prophecy; one line of prediction there is in it, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown; the rest of the book is a narrative of the preface to, and the consequences of, that prediction. In the midst of the obscure prophecies before and after this book, wherein are many things dark, and hard to be understood, which are puzzling to the learned, and are strong meat for strong men, comes in this plain and pleasant story, which is entertaining to the weakest, and milk for babes. Probably Jonah was himself the penman of this book, and he, as Moses and other inspired penmen records his own faults, which is an evidence that in these writings they designed God's glory, and not their own. We read of this same Jonah, 2 Kings xiv. 25. where we find that he was of Gath-hepher in Galilee, a city that belongs to the tribe of Zebulun; in a remote corner of the land of Israel: for the Spirit, which like the wind bloweth where it listeth, will as easily find out Jonah in Galilee as Isaiah at Jerusalem. We find also that he was a messenger of mercy to Israel, in the reign of Jeroboam the second; for the success of his arms, in the restoring of the coast of Israel, is said to be according to the word of the Lord, which he spoke by the hand of his servant Jonah the prophet. Those prophecies were not committed to writing, but this against Nineveh was, chiefly for the sake of the story that depends upon it, and that is recorded chiefly for the sake of Christ, of whom Jonah was a type; it contains also very remarkable instances of human infirmity in Jonah; and of God's mercy, both in pardoning repenting sinners, witness Nineveh, and in bearing with reviving saints, witness Jonah.

JONAH, I.

In this chapter we have, 1. A command given to Jonah to preach at Nineveh; v. 1, 2. II. Jonah's disobedience to that command, v. 3. III. The pursuit and arrest of him for that disobedience by a storm, in which he was asleep, v. 4-6. IV. The discovery of him, and his disobedience, to be the cause of the storm, v. 7, 10. V. The casting of him into the sea, for the stilling of the storm, v. 11, 12. VI. The miraculous preservation of his life there in the belly of a fish, (v. 17.) which was his reservation for further services.

1. NOW the word of the Lord came unto Jonah, the son of Amittai, saying, 2. Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and cry against it; for their wickedness is come up before me. 3. But Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord, and went down to Joppa; and he found a ship going to Tarshish: so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it, to go with them unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord.

1. The honour God put upon Jonah, in giving him a commission to go and prophesy against Nineveh, Jonah signifies, a dove; a proper name for all God's prophets, all his people, who ought to be harmless as doves, and to mourn as doves for the sins and calamities of the land. His father's name was Amittai—My truth; for God's prophets should be sons of truth. To him the word of the Lord came, to him it was, (so the word signifies,) for God's word is a real thing; men's words are but wind, but God's words are substance. He had been before acquainted with the word of the Lord, and knew his life was as near as it was possible to be, given him were, Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city. 2. Nineveh was at this time the metropolis of the Assyrian monarchy, an eminent city, (Gen. x. 11.) a great city, that great city, forty-eight miles in compass; some make it much more; great is the number of the inhabitants, as appears by the multitude of infants in it; (Jeh. xlix. 28.) in wealth, there was the end of its store; (Nah. ii. 9.) great in power and dominion, it was the city that for some time ruled over the kings of the earth. But great cities, as well as great men, are under God's government and judgment. A great city, and yet a heathen city, without the knowledge and worship of the true God. How many great cities and great nations are there, that sit in darkness, and in the valley of the shadow of death! This great city was a wicked city; Their wickedness is come up before me; (their malice, so some read it;) their wickedness was presumptuous, and they sinned with a high hand. It is said to think what a great deal of sin is committed in great cities, where there are many sinners, who are not only all sinners, but making one another sin, and thus aggravating their guilt; that is, it is come to a high degree, to the highest pitch, the measure of it is full to the brim; their wickedness is come up, and then it is time for vengeance to come down. Or, The cry of their wickedness is come up, as that of Sodom, Gen. xviii. 20, 21. It is come up before me; to my face; (so the word is;) it is a bold and open infraction to God. It is sinning against him in his sight, therefore Jonah must cry against it; he must witness against their great wickedness, and must warn them of the destruction that was coming upon them for it. God is coming forth against it, and he sends Jonah before, to proclaim war, and to sound an alarm, Cry aloud, spare not. He must not whisper his message in a corner, but publish it in the streets of Nineveh; he that has ears to hear, let him hear what God has to say by his prophet against that wicked city; when the cry of sin comes up to God, the cry of vengeance comes out against the sinner. He must go to Nineveh, and cry there upon the spot, against the wickedness of it. Other prophets were ordered to send messages to the neighbouring nations, and to order them to return to obedience to God, to destroy the borders of Nineveh; but Jonah must go, and carry the message himself; Arise quickly, apply thyself to the business with speed and courage, and the resolution that becomes a prophet, arise, and go to Nineveh. Those that go on God's errands, must rise and go; and must stir up themselves to the work cut out for them. The prophets were sent first to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, yet not to them only; they had the children's bread, but Nineveh eats of the crumbs. 2. The summons Jonah did to God in refusing to obey his orders, and to go on the errand on which he was sent; (v. 3.) But Jonah, instead of rising to go to Nineveh, rose up to go to Tarshish, to the sea, not by land, and for any profit or desire to get away from the presence of the Lord; and if he might but do that, he cared not whether he went; not as if he thought he could do any wither whether from under the eye of God's inspection, but from his special presence, from the spirit of prophecy, which, when it put him upon this work, he thought himself haunted with, and coveted to get out of the hearing of. Some think Jonah went upon the opinion of some of the Jews, that the spirit of prophecy was confined to the land of Israel; (which in Ezekiel and Daniel was effectually proved to be a mistake;) and therefore he hoped he should get clear of it, if he could but get out of the borders of that land. (1.) Jonah would not go to Nineveh, to cry against it; either because it was a long and dangerous journey thither, and he knew he had nothing to gain by it, or because he thought it would be as much as his life was worth to deliver such an ungrateful message to that great and potent city; he consulted with flesh and blood, and declined the embassy, because he could not go with safety; or because he was jealous for the prerogatives of his country, and not willing that any other nation should have the credit of performing one of the most illustrious miracles in the world. He knew it would be the beginning of the removal of the kingdom of God from the Jews to another nation that would bring forth more of the fruits of it. He owns himself, (ch. iv. 2.) that the reason of his aversion to this journey, was, because he foresaw that the Ninevites would repent, and God would forgive them, and take them into favour, which would be a slur upon the people of Israel, who had been long a peculiar people to God. (2.) He therefore went to Tarshish; to Tarsus in Cilicia, (so some,) probably because he had friends and relations there, with whom he hoped for some time to absent himself; he went to Joppa, a famous sea-port in the land of Israel, in quest of a ship bound for Tarshish; and there he found one. Providence seemed to favour his design, and put him an opportunity to escape; we may be out of the way of duty, and yet may meet with a favourable gale. The ready way is not always the right way; he found the ship just ready to weigh anchor, perhaps, and to set sail for Tarshish; and so he lost no time, but, perhaps, therefore he went to Tarshish, because he found the ship going thither, otherwise all places were to him; he did not think himself out of his way, the way he would go, provided he was not in his way, the way he should go. So he paid the fare thereof; for he did not regard the charge, so he could but gain his point, and get to a distance from the presence of the Lord; he went with them, with the mariners, with the passengers, with the merchants, whoever they were that were going to Tarshish. Jonah, forgetting his dignity, as well as duty, huddled himself with them, and went down into the ship, to go with them to Tarshish. See what the best of men are, when God leaves them to themselves, and what need we have, when the word of the Lord comes to us, to have the Spirit of the Lord come along with the word, to bring every thought within us, to his obedience to it. The prophet Isaiah owns that therefore he was not rebellious, neither turned away back, because God not only spake to him, but opened his ear, Isa. i. 5. Let us learn hence, to cease from man, and not to be too confident either of ourselves, or others, in a time of trial; but let him that thinks he stands, take heed lest he fall. 4. But the Lord sent out a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was like to be broken. 5. Then the mariners were afraid, and cried every man unto his god, and cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them: but Jonah was gone down into the sides of the ship; and he lay, and was fast asleep. 6. So the shipmaster came to him, and said unto him, What meanest thou, O sleeper? arise, call upon thy God, if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not. 7. And they said one each to his fellow, Come, and let us cast lots, that we may know for whose cause this evil is upon us.
So they cast lots, and the lot fell upon Jonas. 3. Then said they unto him, Tell us, we pray thee, for whose cause this evil is upon us. What is thine occupation? and whence comest thou? what is thy country? and of what people art thou? 9. And he said unto them, I am a Hebrew; and I fear the Lord, the God of heaven, which hath made the sea and the dry land. 10. Then were the men exceedingly afraid, and said unto him, Why hast thou done this? (for the men knew that he fled from the presence of the Lord, because he had told them.)

When Jonah was set on ship-board, and under sail for Tarshish, he thought himself safe enough; but here we find him pursued and overtaken, discovered and convicted, as a deserter from God, as one that had run his colours.

I. God sends a pursuer after him, a mighty tempest in the sea, v. 4. God has the winds in his treasure, (Ps. cxxxv. 7.) and out of these treasures God sent forth, he cast forth, (so the word is,) with force and violence, a great wind into the sea; even stormy winds fulfil his word, and are the messengers of his wrath; he gathers the winds in his fist, (Prov. xxx. 4.) where he holds them, and whence he squeezes them when he pleases; for though, as to us, the wind blows where it listeth, yet not as to God, but where he directs. The effect of this wind was a mighty tempest; for when the winds blow, the waves run. Note, Sin being stormy and tempestuous into the soul, into the family, into churches and nations; it is a disquieting, disturbing thing. The tempest prevailed to that degree, that the ship was like to be broken, the mariners expected no other; that ship, (so some read it,) that and no other; other ships were upon the same sea at the same time, yet, it should seem, that ship in which Jonah was, was tossed more than any other, and was more in danger. This wind was sent after Jonah, to fetch him back again to God and to his duty; and it is a great remedy to be reckoned and called home, when we go astray, though it be by a tempest.

II. The ship’s crew were alarmed by this mighty tempest, but Jonah only, the person concerned, was unconcerned, v. 5. The mariners were affected with their danger, though they did not know by what hand God had this controversy; (1.) They were afraid; though, their business leading them to be very much conversant with dangers of this kind, they used to make light of them, yet now the oldest and stoutest of them began to tremble, being apprehensive that there was something more than ordinary in this tempest, so suddenly did it rise, so strongly did it rage. Note, God can strike a terror upon the most daring; and make even great men and chief captains call for shelter from rocks and mountains. 2. They cried every man unto his god, this was the effect of their fear; many will not be brought to prayer till they are frightened to it; he that would learn to pray, let him go to sea. Lord, in trouble have they visited thee. Every man of them prayed, they were not all praying and others were not praying; but when Jonah was engaged, as the danger was general, so was the address to Heaven, there was not one praying for them all, but every one for himself. They cried every man to his god, the god of his country or city, or his own tutelar deity; it is a testimony against atheism, that every man had a god, and had the belief of a god; but it is an instance of the folly of paganism, that they had gods many, every man the god he had a fancy for; whereas there can be but one God, there needs be no more. But though they had lost that dictate of the light of nature—that there is but one God, they still were governed by that direction of the law of nature, and God is to be feared and obeyed. (Should not a people seek unto their God? Isa. viii. 19.) and that he is especially to be prayed to when we are in distress and danger. Call upon me in the time of trouble. Is any afflicted? Is any frightened? Let him pray. 3. Their prayers for deliverance were seconded with endeavours, and, having called upon their gods to help them, they did all that was in their power to help themselves. They cast forth the sares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them; as Paul’s mariners in a like case cast forth even the tackling of the ship, and the wheat, Acts xxvii. 18, 19, 38. These here were making a trading voyage, as it should seem, and were laden with many goods and much merchandise, by which they hoped to get gain; but now they are content to suffer loss by throwing them all overboard, to save their lives. See how powerful the natural love of life is; Skin for skin, and all that a man has, will he give for it; and shall we not put a like value upon the spiritual life, the life of the soul, reckoning that the gain of all the world cannot counterbalance the loss of the soul? See the vanity of worldly goods, and the value and importance of our spiritual possessions. This tempest made a deep impression upon their minds, and made them tremble with fear, as they saw the consequences of their sin, the judgments of God visited upon them. What will be the end of the wicked? The Lord saith, How long shall the revolters be reprieved? when will ye cease to be traitors? O sleeper! Here we commend the shipmaster, who gave him this reproof, for though he was a stranger to him, he was, for the present, as one of his family; and whoever has a precious soul, we must help, as we can, to save it from death. We pity Jonah, who needed this reproof; as a prophet of the Lord, if he had been in his place, he might have been reproving the king of Nineveh, but being out of the way.
of his duty, he does himself lie open to the reproofs of a sorry shipmaster. See how men by their sin and folly diminish themselves, and make themselves mean. Yet we must admire God's goodness in sending him this seasonable reproof, for it was the first step toward his recovery; as the crowing of the cock was to Peter. Note, Those that sleep in a storm, may well be asked what they mean. 2. A just and solemn word of advice; "Arise, call upon thy God; we are here crying every man to his god, why dost thou not get up, and cry to thine? Art not thou equally concerned with the rest, both in the danger dreaded, and in the deliverance desired?" Note, The devotions of others should quicken ours; and those who hope to share in a common mercy, ought in all respects to own, profess, and practice with the most fervent supplications and applications that are made for it. In times of public distress, if we have any interest at the throne of grace, we ought to improve it for the public good. And the servants of God themselves have sometimes need to be called and stirred up to this part of their duty. 3. A good reason for this advice; If so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not. It should seem that very gods they called upon were considered by them but as mediators between them, and the supreme God, and intercessors for them with him; for the shipmaster speaks of one God still, from whom he expected relief. To engage prayer, he suggests that the danger was very great and imminent; We are all likely to perish; there is but a little space between us and death, as the prophet saith, the waters will not be steep. Yet he suggests that there was some hope remaining, that their destruction might be prevented, and we may not perish; while there is life, there is hope, and while there is hope, there is room for prayer. He suggests also it was God only that could effect their deliverance, and it must come from his power and his pity. If he think upon us, and he will deliver us, he will deliver his people and the cause to him we must look, and in him we must put our trust, when the danger is ever so imminent.

IV. Jonah is found out to be the cause of the storm.

1. The mariners observed so much peculiar and uncommon either in the storm itself, or in their own distress by it, that they concluded it was a messenger from God, that they knew not what to think or to do; that were in that ship, as having been guilty of some enormous crime; judging as the barbarous people, Acts xxviii. 4. "No doubt, one of us is a murderer, or guilty of sacrilege, or perjury, or the like, who is thus pursued by the vengeance of the sea, and it is for his sake that we all suffer." Even the light of nature teaches, that in extraordinary judgments the wrath of God is revealed from heaven upon some extraordinary sins and sinners. Whatever evil is upon us at any time, we must conclude there was a cause for it; there is evil done by us, or else this evil would not be upon us; there is a ground for God's opposition. 2. They determined to refer it to the lot, which, of their credit, was a criminal that had occasioned this storm; Let us cast lots, that we may know for whose cause this evil is upon us. None of them suspected himself, or said, Is it I, Lord? is it I? But they suspected one another, and would find out the man. Note, It is a desirable thing, when any evil is upon us, to know for what cause it is upon us, that what is amis may be amended, and the grievance being redressed, the grief may be removed. In order to this, we must look up to Heaven, and pray, Lord, show me wherefore thou contendest with me; that which I see not, teach thou me. These mariners desired to know the person that was the dead weight in their ship, the occurred thing, that that one man might die for the people, and that the whole ship might not be lost; this was not only expedient, but highly just. In order to this, they cast lots, by which they appealed to the judgment of God, to whom all hearts are open, and from whom no secret is hid; agreeing to acquiesce in his discovery and determination, and to take that for truth for which the lot spoke; for they knew by the light of nature, what the scripture tells us, that the lot to cast into the lap, but the whole disposal thereof is of the Lord. Even the heathen looked upon the casting of lots to be a sacred thing, and to be done with seriousness and solemnity, and not to be made a sport of. It is a shame for Christians, if they have not a like reverence for an appeal to Providence.

3. The lot fell upon Jonah, who could have saved them this trouble, if he would but have told them that his sin was the reason of the present distress; but, as is usual with criminals, he never confesses till he finds he cannot help it, till the lot falls upon him. We may suppose there were those in the ship, who, upon other accounts, were greater sinners than Jonah, and yet he is the man that the tempest pursues, and that the lot fitteth upon; for it is his own child, his own servant, that the master casts out, and permits to be cast overboard, because he presumes upon their destruction, and he leaves to the law. The storm is sent after Jonah, because God has work for him to do, and it is sent to fetch him back to it. Note, God has many ways of bringing to light concealed sins and sinners, and making manifest that folly which was thought to be hid from the eyes of all living. God's right hand will find him out, and bring him to light, as all his enemies that have designs against his yet, though they flee to the utmost parts of the sea, or go down to the sides of the ship.

4. Jonah is hereupon brought under examination, before the masters and mariners. He was a stranger, none of them could say that they knew the prisoner, or had any thing to lay to his charge, and their examination would conclude that he was innocent, and judge him out of his own mouth; and for this there needed no rack, the shipwreck they were in danger of was sufficient to frighten him, so as to make him tell the truth. Though it was discovered by the lot, that he was the person for whose sake they were thus damaged and exposed, yet they did not fly outrageously upon him, as one would fear they might; they have not in so short a time quitted the ship, nor quitted the shipwreck, nor quittred his case. There is a compassion owing to offenders when they are discovered and convicted; they gave him no hard words, but, Tell us, we pray thee, what is the matter? Two things they inquire of, (1.) Whether he would himself own that he was the person for whose sake the storm was sent, as the lot had intimated; "Tell us for whose sake this evil is upon us;" is it indeed for thy cause, and if so, for what cause? What is the offence for which thou art thus prosecuted?" Perhaps the gravity and decency of Jonah's aspect and behaviour made them suspect that the lot had missed its man, had missed its mark, and therefore they would not trust it, unless he would himself own his guilt; they therefore required from him whether he had committed this matter. Note, Those that would find out the cause of their troubles, must not only begin, but pursue the inquiry, must descend to particulars, and accomplish a diligent search. (2.) What his character was; both as to his calling and as to his country. [1.] They inquire concerning his calling; What is thine occupation? This was a proper question to be put to a vagrant. Perhaps they suspected his calling to be such as might bring this trouble upon them; "Art thou a diviner, a sorcerer, a student in the black art? Hast thou been conjuring for this wind? Or what business art thou now going on? Is it like Balaam's, to curse any of God's people, and is this wind sent to stop thee?" [2.] They inquire concerning his country; one asked, Whence comest

11. Then said they unto him, What shall we do unto thee, that the sea may be calm unto us? (for the sea was now very calm.) 12. And he said unto them, Take me up, and cast me forth into the sea; so shall the sea be calm unto you: for I know that for my sake this great tempest is upon you. 13. Nevertheless, the men rowed hard to bring it to the land; but they could not: for the sea was now very calm, and was tempestuous against them. 14. Wherefore they cried unto the Lord, and said, We beseech thee, O Lord, we beseech thee, let us not perish for this man’s life, and lay not upon us innocent blood: for thou, O Lord, hast done as it pleased thee. 15. So they took up Jonah, and cast him forth into the sea; and the sea ceased from her raging. 16. Then the men feared the Lord exceedingly, and offered a sacrifice unto the Lord, and made vows. 17. Now the Lord had prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah. And Jonah was in the belly of the fish three days and three nights.

It is plain that Jonah is the man for whose sake this evil is upon them, but the discovery of him to be so was not sufficient to answer the demands of this tempest; they had found him out, but something more was to be done, for still the sea was rough, and was tempestuous, (v. 11.) and again, (v. 13.) it grew more and more tempestuous, so the margin reads it; for if we discover sin to be the cause of our troubles, and do not forsake it, we do but make bad worse. Therefore they go on with the prosecution.

1. They inquire of Jonah himself what he thought the sea might be calm to us: we may perceive that Jonah is a prophet of the Lord, and therefore will not do any thing, no, not in his own case, without consulting him. He appears to be a delinquent, but he appears also to be a penitent, and therefore they would not insult over him, or offer him any rudeness. Note, We ought to act with great tenderness toward those that are overtaken in sin, and have been brought under the discovery of sin: they would not cast him into the sea, if he could think of any other expedient by which to save the ship. Or, perhaps, thus they would show how plain the case was, that there was no remedy but he must be thrown overboard; let him be his own judge, as he had been his own accuser, and he himself will say so. 2. Note, When sin has raised a storm, and laid it under the tokens of God’s displeasure, we are concerned to inquire what we shall do, that the sea may be calm; and what shall we do? We must pray and believe, when we are in a storm, and study to answer the end for which it was sent, and then the storm shall become a calm. But especially we must consider what is to be done to the sin that raised the storm; that must be discovered, and penitently confessed, that must be detested, disclaimed, and ut terly forsaken. What have I to do any more with it? Bevy ice it, bevy ice it, for this evil it has done.

2. Jonah reads his own dooms: (v. 12.) Take me up, and cast me forth into the sea, that thy hand may be cut off from me. He would not only himself leap into the sea, but he puts himself into their hands, to cast him into the sea, assures them that then the sea would be calm, and not otherwise. He proposed this, in tenderness to the mariners, that they might not suffer for his sake: "Let thy hand be upon me," (says David, 1 Chron. xxvi. 17.) "am I guilty, let me die in my own sin, but let not thy hand be upon me." They were the best judges of true penitents, who earnestly desire that none but themselves may ever smart, or fare the worse, for their sins and follies. He proposed it likewise in submission to the will of God, who sent this tempest in pursuit of him; and therefore judges himself to be cast into the sea, because to that he plainly saw God judging him, that he might not be judged of the Lord to eternal misery. Note, Those who are truly humbled for sin, will cheerfully submit to the will of God, even in a sentence of death itself. If Jonah sees this to be the punishment of his iniquity, he accepts it, he subjects himself to it, and justifies God in it. No matter though the flesh be destroyed, no matter how it is destroyed, so that the spirit be saved whole in the fire of the Lord. 2 Chron. 26. v. 3. The reason he gives, is, For I know that for my sake this great tempest is upon you. See how ready Jonah is to take all the guilt upon himself, and to look upon all the trouble as theirs; "It is purely for my sake, who have sinned, that this tempest is upon you; therefore cast me forth into the sea for," (1.) I deserve it; I have wickedly departed from my God, and it is upon my account that he is angry with you; surely I am unworthy to breathe in that air which for my sake has been hurried with winds, to live in that ship which for my sake has been thus tossed; cast me into the sea after the waves which for my sake you have thrown into it; drowning is too good for me, a single death is punishment too little for such a complicated offence. (2.) There is no other way of having the sea calm. If it is I that have raised the storm, it is not casting the waves into the sea, that will lay it again; no, you must cast me thither. When conscience is awakened, and a storm raised there, nothing will turn it into a calm but parting with the sin that occasioned the disturbance, and abandoning that. It is not parting with our money that makes us children; but Jonah must be thrown overboard. Jonah is herein a type of Christ, that he gives his life a ransom for many; but with this material difference, that the storm Jonah gave himself up to still, was of his own raising; that storm which Christ gave himself up to still, was of our raising. Yet as Jonah delivered himself up to be cast into a raging sea, that it might be calm, so did our Lord Jesus, when he died, that we might live.

3. The poor mariners did what they could to save themselves from the necessity of throwing Jonah into the sea, but all in vain; (v. 13.) They rowed hard to bring the ship to the land, that if they must part with Jonah, they might set him safe on shore; but they could not, all their pains were to no purpose, for the sea wrought harder than they could, and was tempestuous against them, so that they could by no means make the land; if they thought sometimes they had gained their point, they were quickly thrown off to sea again; still their ship was overladen, their lightening it of the wares made it never the lighter as long as Jonah was in it. And before it rowed against wind and tide, the wind of God's vengeance, the tide of his counsels; and it is in vain to contend with God, in vain to think of saving ourselves any other way than by destroying our sins. By this it appears that these mariners were very bait to execute Jonah's sentence upon himself, though they knew it was for his sake that this tempest was upon them. They thought it backward to it, partly from a dread of bringing upon themselves the guilt of blood, and partly from a compassion they could not but have for poor Jonah, as a good man, as a man in distress, and as a man of sincerity. Note, The more sinners humble and abase themselves, judge and condemn themselves, the more likely they are to find pity both with God and man, and may therefore move forward Jonah was to say, Cast me into the sea, the more backward they are to do it.

4. When they found it necessary to cast Jonah into the sea, they first prayed to God that the guilt of his blood might not lie upon them, or be laid to their charge, v. 14. When they found it in vain to row hard, they quitted their oars, and went to their prayers; Wherefore they cried unto the Lord, into Jehovah, the true and living God, and no more to the gods many, and lords many, that they cried to, v. 5. They prayed to the God of Israel, being now convinced, by the providence of God concerning Jonah, and the information he had given them, that he is God alone. Having determined to cast Jonah into the sea, they first enter a protestation in the name of the Lord, their God, the true Jehovah, that it be nothing but willingly, much less maliciously, or with any design to be revenged upon him, because it was for his sake that the tempest was upon them; no, His God forgive him, as they do! But they are forced to it be defending—not in self-defence, having no other way to save their own lives; and they do it as ministers of justice, both God and himself having sentenced him to so great a death. They therefore present a humble petition to the God whom Jonah feared, that they might not perish for his life. See, (1.) What a fear they had of contracting the guilt of blood, especially the blood of one that feared God, and worshipped him, and had fellowship with him, as they perceived Jonah had, though in a single instance he had been faulty. Natural conscience cannot but have a dread of blood-guiltiness, and make men very earnest in prayer, as David was, to be delivered from it, Ps. li. 14. So they were here; "We beseech thee, O Lord, we beseech thee, lay not upon us innocent blood. They are earnest in praying to be saved from the peril of the sin as they were before in praying to be saved from the peril of the storm. (2.) They appear to them to be no ordinary person, but a very noble man, a man of God, a worshipper of the great Creator of heaven and earth, upon which account even these rude mariners conceived a veneration for him, and trembled at the thought of taking away his life. Innocent blood is precious, but saint's blood, prophets' blood, is much more precious, and so they will find to their cost, that any way they bring themselves under the guilt of it. The mariners say, Jonah pursued by divine vengeance, and yet could not without horror think of being his executioners. Though his God has a controversy with him, yet, think them, Let not our hand be upon him. The Israelites were at this time killing the prophets for doing their duty, (witness Jezebel's late persecution,) and therefore prayed against gross guilt, but this was gravitated by the tenderness these heathens had for one whom they perceived to be a prophet, though he was now out of the way of his duty. (2.) What a fear they had of incurring the wrath of God; they were jealous lest he should be angry, if they should be at the death of Jonah, for he had said, Touch not mine anointing for no harm is at thy peril if you do. "Lord," says they, "let us not perish for this man's life. Let it not be such a fatal dilemma to us; we see we must perish if we spare his life, O let us not perish for taking away his life." And their plea is good; "For thou, O Lord, hast done as it pleased thee, thou hast had us under a necessity of doing it; the wind that pursued us. I tell that discovered with a depth under thy direction, which we are herein governed by; we are but the instruments of Providence, and it is sorely against our will that we do it; but we must say, The will of the Lord be done." Note, When we are manifestly led by Providence to do things contrary to our own inclinations, and quite beyond our own intentions, it will be our duty to be satisfied with it; Thou, O Lord, hast done as it pleased thee. And if God please himself, we ought to be satisfied, though he do not please us.

5. Having deprecated the guilt they dreaded, they proceeded to execution; (v. 13.) They took up Jonah, and cast him forth into the sea. They cast him out of their ship, out of their company, and cast him into the sea, a raging, stormy sea, that cried, Give, give; surrender the traitor, or expect no peace."

We may well think what confusion and amazement poor Jonah was in, when he saw himself ready to be hurried into the presence of that God as a Judge, whose presence as a Master he was now fleeing from. Note, Those know not what ruin they run upon, that run away from God. Woe unto them! for they have fled from me. When sin is the way of a man, he is sure of a fall. We are cut off from the sea; we must abandon it, and be the death of it, must drown that which otherwise will draw us in destruction and perdition. And if we thus by a thorough repentance and reformation cast our sins forth into the sea, never to recall them, or return to them again, God will by pardoning mercy subdue our iniquities, and cast them into the depths of the sea. (v. 18.)

6. The throwing of Jonah into the sea immediately put an end to the storm. The sea has what she came for, and therefore rests contented; she ceases from her raging. It is an instance of the sovereign power of God, that he can soon turn the storm into a calm; and of the equity of his government, that when the end of an affliction is answered and attained, the affliction shall immediately be removed. H. will not contend for ever, will not contend any longer than till we submit ourselves and give up the cause. If we turn from our sins, he will soon turn from his anger.

7. The mariners were hereby more confirmed in their belief that Jonah's God was the only true God; (v. 16.) Then the men feared the Lord with a great fear, and offered sacrifice one to his name, for the God of Israel, and came to a resolution that they would worship him only for the future; for there is no other God that can destroy, that can deliver after this sort. When they saw the power of God in raising and laying the tempest, when they saw his justice upon Jonah his own servant, and when they saw his goodness to them in saving them from the brink of ruin, then they feared the Lord. And when they feared the Lord, they offered sacrifice to him when they came ashore again in the land of Israel, and for the present made vows, that they would do so, in thankfulness for their deliverance, and to make atonement for their souls. Or, perhaps, they had something yet on board, which might be for a sacrifice to God immediately; or, it may be meant of the spiritual sacrifice they offered, forsaking sin, and forsaking the false god they had bowed down to, with which God is better pleased than with that of an ox or bullock that has horns and hoofs. See Ps. civ. 22, &c. We must make vows, not only when we are in the pursuit of mercy, but, which is much more generous, when we have received mercy, as those that are still studying what we shall render.

Lastly, Jonah's life, after all, is saved by a miracle, and we shall hear of him again for all this. In the midst of judgment God remembers mercy; Jonah shall be worse frightened than hurt, not so much punished for his sin as reduced to his duty. Though he flees from the presence of the Lord, yet he seems to fall into his avenging hands, yet God has more work for him to do, and therefore he prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah. (v. 17.) A whale, our Saviour calls it, (Matt. xii. 40.) one of the largest sorts of whales, that have wider throats than others; in the belly of which has sometimes been found the dead body of a man in armour. Particular notice is taken, in the history of the creation of God, creating great whales, (Gen. i. 21.) and the leviathan in the waters made to play therein, Ps. cv. 26. But God finds work for this leviathan, has prepared him, has numbered him, (so the word is,) has appointed him to be Jonah's receiver and deliverer. Note, God has command of all the creatures, and can make any of them serve his designs of mercy to his people; even the fishes of the sea, that are most from under man's cognizance, even the great whales, that are altogether from under man's government. This fish was prepared, lay ready under water close by the ship, that he might keep Jonah from sinking to the bottom, and save him alive, though he deserves to die. Let us all stand still, and see this salvation of the Lord, and admire his power, that he could thus save a disgraceful, and great, and cruel, and wicked man, and would thus save one that was running from him and had offended him. It was of the Lord's mercies, that Jonah was not now consumed. The fish swallowed up Jonah, not to devour him, but to protect him; Out of the eater comes forth meat; for Jonah was alive and well in the belly of the fish three days and three nights, not consumed by the heat of the belly, or by the work of the whale, but preserved, as it were, that nature this was impossible, but not to the God of nature, with whom all things are possible. Jonah by this miraculous preservation was designed to be made, (1.) A monument of divine mercy, for the encouragement of those that have sinned, and gone away from God, to return and repent. (2.) A successful preacher to Nineveh; and this miracle wrought for his deliverance, if the tiding of it reached Nineveh, would contribute to his success. (3.) An illustrious type of Christ, who was buried and rose again according to the scriptures, (1 Cor. xv. 4.) according to this scripture, for as Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so was the Son of man three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. Matt. xii. 40. Jonah's burial was a figure of Christ's burial, and Jonah's grave, so he did Christ's, when it was long before ordained that he should make his grave with the rich, Isai. lxi. 9. Was Jonah's grave a strange one, a new one? So was Christ's, one in which never man before was laid. Was Jonah there the best part of three days and three nights? So was Christ; but both in order to their rising again for the bringing of the dead from the grave, and for the Gentiles world. Cor. xiv, the place where the Lord lay.

CHAP. II.

We left Jonah in the belly of the fish, and had reason to think we should hear no more of him, that if he were not destroyed by the waters of the sea, he would be consumed in the bowels of that leviathan, out of whose bowels go burning lamps, and sparks of fire, and whose breath kindles coals, Jude xiv. 9. We are there, and therefore the whale's belly is fire and through water; (Ps. lxi. 12.) by and by his power, behold, Jonah the prophet is yet alive, and is heard of again. In this chapter, God hears from him, for we find him speaking the next verse, and therefore when we find him preaching. In his prayer, we have, I. The great distress and danger he was in, v. 2, 3, 5, 6. II. The despair he was thereby almost reduced to, v. 4, 11. The encouragement he took to himself, in this sepulch
I. THEN Jonah prayed unto the Lord his God out of the fish's belly. 2. And said, I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord, and he heard me; out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice. 3. For thou hadst cast me into the deep, in the midst of the seas; and the floods compassed me about: all the waters passed over me. 4. Then I said, I am cast out of thy sight; yet I will look again toward thy holy temple. 5. The waters compassed me about even to the soul: the depth closed me round about, the weeds were wrapped about my head. 6. I went down to the bottoms of the mountains; the earth with her bars was about me for ever: yet hast thou brought up my life from corruption, O Lord, my God. 7. When my soul fainted within me I remembered the Lord; and my prayer came in unto thee, into thy holy temple. 8. They that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy. 9. But I will sacrifice unto thee with the voice of thanksgiving; I will pay that that I have vowed. Salvation is of the Lord. God and his servant Jonah had parted in anger, and the quilt began on Jonah's side; he ran his country, that he might outrun his work; but we hope to see them both together again, and the reconciliation begins on God's side. In the close of the foregoing chapter, we found God returning to Jonah, in a way of mercy, delivering him from going down to the pit, having found a ransom; in this chapter, we find Jonah returning to God in a way of duty; he was called up in the former chapter to pray to his God, but we are not told that he did so; but at what hour he is brought to it. Now observe here,

1. When he prayed; (v. 1.) Then Jonah prayed; when he was in trouble, under the sense of sin, and the tokens of God's displeasure against him for sin; then he prayed. Note, When we are in affliction, we must pray; then we have occasion to pray, then we have errands at the throne of grace, and business there. Then, if ever, we shall have a disposition to pray, when the heart is humbled and softened, and made serious; then God expects it; In their affliction they will seek me early, seek me earnestly; and though we bring our afflictions upon ourselves by our sins, yet, if we pray in humility and godly sincerity, we shall be welcome to the throne of grace, as Jonah was. Then when he was in a baptizing of deliverance, being preserved alive by a miracle, a plain indication that he was reserved for further mercy, then he prayed. An apprehension of God's good will to us, notwithstanding our offenses, gives us boldness of access to him, and opens the lips in prayer, which were closed with the sense of guilt, and dread of wrath. It is in prayer; in the fish's belly. No place is amiss for prayer. I will that men pray everywhere; wherever God casts us, we may find a way open heavenward, if it be not our own fault; Undique ad Catos tantundem est via.—The heavens are equally accessible from every part of the earth. He that has Christ dwelling in his heart by faith, therefore he goes where he will, and is like a priest, that sanctifies the gifts, and is himself a living temple. Jonah was here in confinement; the belly of the fish was his prison, was a close and dark dungeon to him, yet there he had freedom of access to God, and walked at liberty in communion with him. Men may shut us out from communion with one another, but not from communion with God. Jonah was now shut up in the pit of the sea, where the depths he cries to God; as Paul and Silas prayed in the prison in the stocks.

III. To whom he prayed; to the Lord his God. He had been fleeing from God, but now he sees the folly of it, and returns to him; by prayer he draws near to that God whom he had gone aside from, and engages his heart to approach him. In prayer he has an eye to him, not only as the Lord, but as the God of salvation; a God in covenant with him, for, thanks be to God, every transgression in the covenant does not throw us out of covenant. This encourages even backsliding children to return, (Jer. iii. 22.) Behold, we come unto thee, for thou art the Lord our God. IV. What his prayer was; he afterward recollected the substance of it, and left it upon record. He reflects upon the workings of his heart toward God, when he was in distress and danger, and the conflict that was then in his breast between faith and sense, between hope and fear. 1. He reflects upon the earnestness of his prayer, and God's readiness to hear and answer; (v. 2.) He cried by reason of his affliction, unto the Lord. Note, Many that prayed not at all, or did but whisper prayer, when they were in prosperity, are brought to pray, nay, are brought to cry, by reason of their affliction; and it is for this end that afflictions are sent, and they are in vain if this end be not answered. These heep up wrath, who cry not when God binds them, Job xxxvi. 13. Out of the belly of hell, and the grave, cried I. This fish might well be called a grave, and as it was a prison to which Jonah was condemned for his disobedience, and in which he lay under the wrath of God, it might well he called the belly of hell. Thither this good man was cast, and yet thence he cried to God, and it was not in vain; God heard him, heard the voice of his affliction, the voice of his supplication. There is no place in God's presence, the design of which there is no crying to God with and hope of being heard; but whatever hell we may be in, in the belly of, in this world, we may from thence cry to God. When Christ lay, as Jonah, three days and three nights in the grave, though he prayed not, as Jonah did, yet his very lying there cried to God for poor sinners, and the cry was heard. 2. He reflects upon the very deplorable condition that he was in, when he was in the belly of hell; which, when he lay there, he was very sensible of, and made particular remarks upon. Note, If we would get good by our troubles, we must take notice of our troubles, and of the hand of God in them. Jonah observes here,

(1.) How long he was thrown; (v. 3.) Thou hast cast me into the deep. The mariners cast him there; but he looked above them, and saw the hand of God casting him there. Whatever depths we are cast into, it is God that casts us into them, and he it is, who, after he has killed, has power to cast into hell. He was cast into the midst of the seas, the heart of the seas, (so the word is,) and from thence cast board. Hebrew phrase, when he applies it to his own case: his Altar along with the heart of the earth. For he that is laid dead in the grave, though ever so ebb, is cut off as effectually from the land of the living as if he were laid in the heart of the earth.
(2.) How terribly he was beset; The floods compassed me about. The channels and springs of the waters of the sea, these surrounded him on every side; it was always high-water with him. God's dear saints and servants are sometimes compassed with the floods of affliction, with troubles that are very forcible and violent, that bear down all before them, and that run constantly upon them, as the waters of a river in a continual succession, one trouble upon the neck of another, as Job's messengers of evil tidings: these enclosed them on all sides, as the church complains, Lam. iii. 7. He has hedged me about, that I cannot get out, nor see which way I may go for safety. All thy billows and thy waves passed over me. Observe, He calls them God's billows and his waves, not only because he made them, The sea is his, and he made it; and because he rules them, for even the winds and the seas obey him; but because he had now commissioned them against Jonah, and limited them, had ordered them to afflict and terrify him, but not to destroy him. These words are plainly quoted by Jonah from Ps. xlii. 7. where, though the translations differ a little, in the original David's complaint is the same verbatim with this of Jonah's, All thy billows and thy waves passed over me. What David spoke figuratively and metaphorically, Jonah applies to himself as literally fulfilled. For the reconciling of ourselves to our afflictions, it is good to search precedents, that we may strengthen our faith in the present day, as is common to men. If ever any man's case was singular, and not to be paralleled, surely Jonah's was, and yet, to his great satisfaction, he finds even the man after God's own heart making the same complaint of God's waves and billows going over him, that he has now occasion to make. When God performs the thing that is appointed for us, we should be thankful, because it is not done for our good, but because it is not done for our good, but because it is for our good. Their track is not out of our path, but into our path, that God deals with us no otherwise than as he uses to deal with those that love his name. And therefore for our assistance in our addresses to God, when we are in trouble, it is good to make use of the complaints and prayers which the saints that have been before us, made use of in the like case. See how good it is to be ready in the scriptures, Jonah, when he could make no use of his bible, by the help of his memory furnished himself from the scripture with a very proper representation of his case; All thy billows and thy waves passed over me. To the same purport, v. 5. The waters compassed me about even to the soul; they threatened his life, which was hereby brought into imminent danger; or they made an impression upon his spirit; he saw them to be tokens of God's displeasure, and in them the terrors of the Almighty set themselves in array against him; this reached to his soul, and put that into confusion. And this also is borrowed from David's complaint, (Ps. lxix. 1.) The waters are come into unto my soul. When without are fightings, it is no marvel that within are fears. Jonah, in the fish's bowels, was not so secure as Paul, when he was cast into prison, that if he would get out of his prison, yet he must unavoidably perish in the waters. He feels the seaweed (which the fish sucked in with the water) wrapped about his head, so that he had no way to help himself, nor hope that any one else could help him. Thus are the people of God sometimes perplexed and entangled, that they may learn not to trust in the festivities, but in God that raises the dead, 2 Cor. i. 8, 9.

(3.) How fast he was held; (v. 6.) He went down to the bottom of the mountains, to the rocks in the sea, upon which the hills and promontories by the sea-side seem to be bottomed; he lay among them, nay, he lay under them; the earth with her bars was about him, so close about him, that it was likely to be about him for ever. The earth was so shut and locked, so barred and bolted, against him, that he was quite cut off from any hope of ever returning to it. Thus helpless, thus hopeless, did Jonah's case seem to be. Those whom God contends with, the whole creation is at war with.

3. He reflects upon the very black and melancholy conclusion he was then ready to make concerning himself, and the relief he obtained against it, v. 4, 7. (1.) He began to sink into despair, and to give up himself for gone and undone to all intents and purposes. When the waters compassed him about even to the soul, no marvel that his soul faints within him, as the waves within the sea, so that he had not any comfortable enjoyments or expectations; his spirits quite failed, and he looked upon himself as a dead man. Then I said, I am cast out of thy sight, and the apprehension of that was the thing that made his spirit faint within him. He thought God had quite forsaken him, would never return in mercy to him, nor show him any token for good again. He had no example before him of any that were brought alive out of a fish's belly; if he thought of Job upon the dunghill, Joseph in the pit, David in the cave, yet these did not come up to his case. Nor was there any visible way of escape open for him but by miracle; and what reason had he to expect that a miracle of mercy should be wrought for him, who was now made a monument of justice. His own hope was gone, his friends were cast down, he had no comfort in the presence of the Lord, and therefore he might justly cast him away from his presence, and, in token of that, take away his holy Spirit from him, never to visit him more. What hopes could he have of deliverance out of a telling which his own ways and doings had procured to himself? Observe, When Jonah would say the worst he could of his former case, he knew, how his case was, and those only, are miserable, whom God has cast out of his sight, whom he will no longer own and favour. What is the misery of the damned in hell but this, that they are cast out of God's sight? For what is the happiness of heaven but the vision and fruition of God? Sometimes the condition of God's people may be such in this world, that they may think themselves quite excluded from God's presence, so as no more to see him, or to be regarded by him. Jacob and Israel said, My way is hid from the Lord, and my judgments are passed over from my God, Isa. xl. 27. Zion said, The Lord has forsaken me, my God has forgotten me, Isa. xlix. 14. But it is only the sunshine of unbelief, for God has not cast away his people whom he has chosen. (2.) Yet he recovered himself from sinking into despair, with some comfortable prospects of deliverance. Faith corrected and controlled the surmises of fear and distrust. Here was a fierce struggle between sense and faith, but faith had the last word, and came off a conqueror. In trying times, the issue will be good at last, provided our faith do not fail; it was therefore the continuance of his faith, what in the church was called persevering in prayer, that he had, as he says, I have always prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not, Lk. xxii. 32. David had fainting if he had not believed, Ps. xxvii. 13. Jonah's faith said, Yet I will look again toward thy holy temple. Thus, though he was first perplexed, yet not in despair; in the depth of the sea he had this hope in him, as an anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast. That man is nearest to God's presence, he that shall yet look yet toward God's holy temple. [1.] That he shall live; he shall look again heavenward, shall again see the light of the sun, though now he seems to be cast into utter darkness; thus against hope he believed in hope. [2.] That he shall live, and praise God; and a good man does not desire to live for any other purpose, Ps. cxxix. 175. That he shall' enjoy communion with God again in holy ordinances, shall look toward, and go up to, the holy temple, to inquire, there to behold the beauty of the Lord.  Hezekiah desired that he might be assured of his recovery, he asked, What is the sign that I shall go up to the house of the Lord? (Isa. xxxviii. 22,) as if that were the only thing for the sake of which he wished for health: so Jonah here hopes he shall look again toward the temple; that way he had looked many a time with pleasure, rejoicing and praising himself; as one conscious to himself of guilt, and unworthiness, he dares not speak of dwelling in God's house, as David, knowing that he is no more worthy to be called a son, but he hopes he may be admitted to look towards it. He calls it the holy temple, for the holiness of it was, in his eye, the beauty of it, and that for the sake of which he loved and looked towards it. The temple has left him in his own heart, and his heart has left him so far; that being now a captive exile, he should never be loosened, but die in the pit, yet should he look towards the heavenly temple, and be brought safe thither; though he die in the fish's belly, in the bottom of the sea, yet from thence he hopes his soul shall be carried by angels into Abraham's bosom. Or, these words may be understood as Jonah's going to himself that, being now a captive exile, he should never be loosened, but die in the pit, yet he should look towards the heavenly temple, and be brought safe thither; though he die in the fish's belly, in the lowest part of the sea, yet from thence he hopes his soul shall be carried by angels into Abraham's bosom. Or, these words may be understood as Jonah's going to himself that, being now a captive exile, he should never be loosened, but die in the pit, yet he should look towards the heavenly temple, and be brought safe thither; though he die in the fish's belly, in the bottom of the sea, yet from thence he hopes his soul shall be carried by angels into Abraham's bosom.

JONAH, II.

11. He reflects upon the favour of God to him, when thus in his distress he sought to God and trusted in him. (1.) He graciously accepted his prayer, and gave admission and audience to it; (v. 7.) My prayer, being sent to him, came in unto him, even into his holy temple; it was heard in the highest heavens, though it was prayed in the lowest depths. (2.) He wonderfully wrought deliverance for him and, when he was delivered from his pain, gave him the earnest and assurance of it; (v. 6.) Yet last thou brought up my life from corruption, 0 Lord my God. Some think he said this when he was vomited up on dry ground; and then it is the language of his thankfulness, and he sets it over against the great difficulty of his case, that the power of God might be the more magnified in his deliverance: The earth with her bars was about me ever, and yet thou hast brought up my life from the pit, from the bars of the pit; or, rather, we may suppose it spoken while he was yet in the fish's belly, and then it is the language of his faith; "Thou hast kept me alive here, in the pit, and therefore thou canst, thou wilt, bring up my life, from the fish, and he speaks of it with as much assurance as if it were done already; That hast brought up my life. Though he has not an express promise of deliverance, he has an earnest of it, and on that he depends; he has life, and therefore believes his life shall be brought up from corruption; and this assurance he addresses to God; Thou hast done it, O Lord my God. Then art the Lord, and therefore must do it for me; my God, and therefore wilt do it. Note, If the Lord be our God, he will be to us the Resurrection and the Life, will redeem our lives from destruction, from the power of the grave.

5. He gives warning to others, and instructs them to keep close to God; (v. 8.) They that observe lying vanities, forsake their own mercy, that they may find in God, and may have such a covenant-right and title to it, as to be able to call it their own, if they would but keep close to God and their duty. They that think to go anywhere, to be from under the eye of God, as Jonah did, that think to mend themselves by deserting his service, as Jonah did, and that grudge his mercy to any poor sinners, and pretend to be wiser than he in judging who are fit to have prophets sent them, and who not, as Jonah did, they observe lying vanities, are led away by foolish, groundless fancies, and, like him, they will be brought to destruction, and are only brought against their interest and their mercy. Note, They that forsake their own duty, forsake their own mercy; they that run away from the work of their place and day, run away from the comfort of it.

6. He solemnly binds his seal with a bond, that if God work deliverance for him, the God of his mercies shall be the God of his praises, v. 9. He covenanteth with God, (1.) That he will honour him in his devotions with the sacrifice of thanksgiving; and God has said, for the encouragement of those that do so, that they that offer praise, glorify him. He will, according to the law of Moses, bring a sacrifice of thanksgiving; and will offer that according to the law of nature, with the voice of thanksgiving. The love and thankfulness of the heart is the life and soul of this duty; without it neither the sacrifice of thanksgiving, nor the voice of thanksgiving, will avail any thing; but it was then, by a divine appointment, to be expressed by a sacrifice, in which the offerer presented the beast slain to God, not in lieu of himself, but in token of himself; and it is now to be expressed by the voice of thanksgiving, the exclamation, It is the Lord liveth, (Heb. xiii. 15.) speaking forth, singing forth, the high praises of our God. This Jonah here promises, that with the sacrifice of thanksgiving he will mention the loving-kindness of the Lord, to his glory, and the encouragement of others. (2.) That he will honour him in his conversation by a punctual performance of his vows which he made in the fish's belly. Some think it was some work of charity that he vowed, or such a vow as Jacob's was, Of all that thou hast given me, I will give a tenth unto thee. More probably, his vow was, that if God would deliver him, he would return to Nineveh. It would be particularly, he should please to send him, though it were to Nineveh. When we smart for deserting our duty, it is time to promise that we will adhere to it, and abound in it. Or, perhaps, the sacrifice of thanksgiving is the thing he vowed, and that is it which he will pay, as David, Ps. cxvii. 17.—19.

7. He concludes with an acknowledgment of God as his Saviour: Jared, the Lord; it belongs to the Lord, Ps. iii. 8. He is the God of salvation, Ps. lxviii. 19, 20. He only can work salvation, and he can do it, be the danger and distress ever so great; he has promised salvation to his people that trust in him. All the salvations of his church in general, and of particular saints, were wrought by him; he is the Saviour of them that believe. Salvation is of the Lord; as has always been: from him alone it is to be expected, and on him we are to depend for it. Jonah's experience shall encourage others, in all ages, to trust in God, as the God of their salvation; all that read this story, shall say it with assurance, say it with admiration, that salvation is of the Lord, and is sure to all that belongs to him.

10. And the Lord spake unto the fish, and it vomited out Jonah upon the dry land.

We have here Jonah's discharge from his imprisonment, and his deliverance from that death which there he was threatened with; his return, though not to life, for he lived in the fish's belly, yet to the land of the living, for from that he seemed to be quite cut off; his resurrection, though not from death, yet from the grave, for surely never man was so buried alive as Jonah was in the fish's belly. His enlargement may be considered,

1. As an instance of God's power over all the creatures; God spake to the fish, gave him orders to return him, as before he had given him orders to receive him. God speaks to other creatures and it is done; they are all his ready, obedient servants; but to men he has not so far revealed himself as to be a judge over them, and exercise over them, as he exerciseth it, regards it not, but turns a deaf ear to what he says. Note, God has all creatures at his command, makes what use he pleases of them, and serves his own purposes by them.

2. As an instance of God's mercy to a poor penitent, that in his distress prays to him. Jonah had sinned, had done foolishly, very foolishly; his own backslidings did now correct him, and it appears by his after-conduct that his foolishness was not quite driven from him, no, not by the rod of this correction: and yet, upon his praying, and humbling himself before God, here is a miracle in nature wrought for his deliverance, to intiate what a miracle of grace, free grace, God's reception and entertainment of returning sinners are. When God had had him at the bottom, here he showed him mercy, and did not contend for ever.

3. As a type and figure of Christ's resurrection. He died and was buried, to lay the storm which our sin had raised, and lay in the grave, as Jonah did, three days and three nights, a prisoner for our debt; but the third day he came forth, as Jonah did, by his messengers to preach repentance, and remission of sins, even to the Gentiles. And this was another scripture fulfilled, After two days he will receive us, and the third day he will raise us up, Hos. vi. 2.

2. The earth trembled as if full of her burthen as the fish was of Jonah.

CHAP. III.

In this chapter we have, I. Jonah's mission renewed, and the command a second time given him to go and preach to Nineveh, v. 1, 2. II. Jonah's message to Nineveh faithfully delivered, by which its speedy overthrow was threatened, v. 3, 4. III. The repentance, humiliation, and return of Nineveh, v. 5, 6. IV. God's gracious revocation of the sentence passed upon them, and the preventing of the ruin threatened, v. 10.

1. AND the word of the Lord came unto Jonah the second time, saying, 2. Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee. 3. So Jonah arose, and went unto Nineveh, according to the word of the Lord. (Now Nineveh was an exceeding great city, of three days' journey.) 4. And Jonah began to enter into the city a day's journey; and he cried, and said, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.

We have here a further evidence of the reconciliation between God and Jonah, and that it was a thorough reconciliation, though the controversy between them had run high.

1. By this it appears that God was perfectly reconciled to Jonah, that he employed him again in his service; and the commission anew given him was an evidence of the remission of his former disobedience or no; and whether he have gotten the good designed him, both by his strange punishment and by his strange deliverance. He had deserted his work and duty, and had been under an arrest for it, had received a sentence of death within himself; but, upon his submission, God had released him, had given him his life, had given him his liberty; but it is upon his good behaviour that he is released, and he must again be put upon the trial whether he will follow the will of God or his own will. After he has been cast out of the land, then he was turned out of it again, God comes, and asks him, "Jonah, wilt thou go to Nineveh now?" For when God judges, he will over-come; he will gain his point, he will bring the disobedient, stubborn child to his foot at last. Note, When God has afflicted us, and delivered us out of affliction, we must hear his voice, saying to us, Now return to the duties which before you neglected, and which by these providences ye are called to. God now said, in effect, to Jonah, as Christ said to the impotent man, when he had healed him, "Now go, and sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee, (John v. 14.) a worse thing than lying three days and three nights in the whale's belly." God looks upon men, when he has afflicted them, and has delivered them out of their affliction, to see whether they mend their ways, and make it appear, for which they were corrected; and therefore in that thing we are concerned to see to it that we receive not the grace of God in vain, neither in the correction nor in the deliverance, for both are designed to be means of grace. (2.) Jonah shall be trusted, in token of God's favour to him. God might justly have said concerning Jonah, as was said concerning one that had cheated us, and dealt treacherously with us, that, though we would not proceed to the rigour of the law against him, nor ruin him, yet we would never again refuse a confidence in him; justly might the Spirit of prophecy, which Jonah had resisted and rebelled against, depart from him, with a resolution never to return to him any more. One would have expected that though his life was spared, yet he should be laid under a disability and incapacity ever to serve the government again in the character of a prophet. But be hold! the word of the Lord comes to him again, to show that when God forgives, he forgets, and whom he forgives he gives a new heart and a new spirit; he receives those into his family again, and restores them to their former estate, that had been prodigal children and disobedient servants. Note, God’s making use of us is the best evidence of his being at peace with us. Hence it will be observed that our sins are pardoned, and we have the good will of God towards us; does his good word come unto us, and do we experience his good work in us? If so, we have reason to admire the riches of free grace, and to own our obligations to the Lord Jesus, who received gifts for men, yea, even for the rebellious also, that the Lord God might dwell even among them, and employ them in his work, Ps. lixvii. 18.

2. By this it appears that Jonah was well reconciled to God, that he was not now, as he had been before, disobedient to the heavenly vision, did not flee from the presence of the Lord, as he had done; he neither endeavoured to avoid hearing the command, nor did he decline obeying it, he made no objections, as he had done, that the journey was long, and hard, and tedious. But, if it be true, as Jonah saith, that he was a man of true grace, and if the threatened judgment did not come, he should be reproached as a false prophet, and the impenitence of his own nation would be upbraided, which he had objected, ch. iv. 2. But now, without murmuring and disputing, Jonah arose, and went unto Nineveh, according to the word of the Lord, v. 3. See here, (1.) The nature of repentance; it is the present not past; the repentance did; a man that was ill, yet got up, got well, and, if the threatened judgment did not come, he should be reproached as a false prophet, and the impenitence of his own nation would be upbraided, which he had objected, ch. iv. 2. But now, without murmuring and disputing, Jonah arose, and went unto Nineveh, according to the word of the Lord, v. 3. See here, (1.) The nature of repentance; it is the present not past; the repentance did; a man that was ill, yet got up, got well, and

1. He was sent as a herald at arms, in the name of the God of heaven, to proclaim war with Nineveh; (v. 2.) Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, that metropolis, and preach unto it, preach against it; so the Chaldee. What is against us, is preached to us, that we may hear it, and take warning; and what is preached to us, if we do not give ear to it, and mix faith with it, will prove to be against us.

Jonah is sent to Nineveh, which was at this time the chief city of the Gentile world, as an indication of God’s gracious intentions in process of time to make the light of divine revelation to shine in those dark regions. God knew that if Sodom and Gomorrah, Tyre and Sidon, had had the means of grace, they would have repented, and yet he denied them those means, Matth. xii. 21, 23. He knew that if Nineveh, had now the means of grace, they would repent, and he gave them those means, sent Jonah, though not to preach repentance to them expressly, (for we find not that he had that in his commission,) yet he did preach repentance, and it was the happy effect of what he had in commission. If God thus in dispensing his favours, in giving the means of grace to some places and not to others, and the Spirit of grace to some persons and not to others, acts by prerogative and in a way of sovereignty, who may say unto him, What dost thou? May he not do what he will with his own? He is Debor to no man. Go, and preach (says God) the preaching that I bid thee. That is, 1. "The preaching that I did bid thee when I first ordered thee to go thither; (ch. i. 2.) go, and cry against it, denounce divine judgments against it, tell the men of Nineveh that their wickedness is come up to God, and God’s vengeance is coming down upon them.” This was the message Jonah was then very loath to deliver, and yet he did it; but when he is brought to it the second time, God does not at all alter the message, to gratify him, or make it the more passable with him, no, he must now preach the very same that he was then ordered to preach and would not. Note, The word of God is an unalterable thing, and will not be made to bend to the humours either of its preachers or of its hearers; and though it may be, by the grace of God, reveal itself to us in dreams and fancies, but they must comply with its truths and laws. See Jer. xv. 19. Let them return unto thee, but return not thou unto them. Or, 2. “The preaching that I shall bid thee, when thou comest thither.” This was an encouragement to him in his undertaking, that God would go along with him, that the Spirit of prophecy should abide upon him, and he would be enabled, when he went to Nineveh, to give him all the further instructions that were needful for him. This intimated that he should hear from him again, which would be his great support in this hazardous expedition; as when God sent Abraham to offer up Isaac, he gave him a like intimation, by telling him he must do it upon one of the mountains which he would afterward direct him to. The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord, he leads his people step by step, and so he expects they should follow him. Jonah must go with an implicit faith, though he knows whither he goes; he shall not know, till he comes thither, what message he must deliver, but, whatever it is, he must deliver it, be it pleasing or displeasing. Thus God will keep us in a continual dependence upon him, and he will work what he will, be it good or evil, whatever he does, and what he will have us to do, we know not now, but we shall know hereafter. Admirals, sometimes, when they are sent abroad, are not to open their commission till they are got so many leagues off at sea; so Jonah must go to Nineveh, and, when he comes there, shall be told what to do.

II. He faithfully and boldly delivered his errand. When he came to Nineveh, he found his diocese large, it was an exceeding great city of three days journey; (v. 3.) a city great to God, so the Hebrew phrase is, meaning no more than as we render it, exceeding great; this honour that language does to the great God, that great things derive their denomination from him. The greatness of Nineveh consisted Chiefly in the extent of it: it was much larger than Babylon: such a city, says Diodorus Si-culus, as no man ever after built; it was 150 furlongs long, and ninety broad, and 480 in compass; the walls 100 feet high, and so thick, that three chariots might go abreast upon them; on them were 1500 towers, each of them 200 feet high. It is here said to be of three days' journey; for the compass of the walls, as some relate, was 480 furlongs, which, allowing eight hours for a mile, may be the time in which may well be reckoned three days' journey for a footman, twenty miles a day. Or, walking slowly and gravely as Jonah must when he went about preaching, it would take him up at least three days, to go through all the principal streets and lanes of the city, to proclaim his message, that all might have notice of it. When he came thither, he loathen to look about him, but applied himself closely to his work; and when he began to enter into the city, he did not retire into an inn, to refresh himself after his journey, but opened his commission immediately, according to his instructions, and he cried, and said, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown. This, no doubt, he had particular warrant and direction to say; whether he enlarged upon this for any extent, or meant to take them in the controversy; God had with them, and how provoking their wicked-ess was, and what reason they had to expect destruction, and to give credit to this warning, or whether he only repeated these words again and again, is not certain, but this was the purport of his message. 1. He must tell them that this great city shall be overthrown; he meant, and they understood him, that it should be overthrown by war, but by some immediate stroke from heaven; either by an earthquake, or by fire and brimstone as Sodom was. The wickedness of cities ripens them for destruction, and their wealth and greatness cannot protect them from destruction, when the measure of their iniquity is full, and the day of vengeance is come. Great cities are easily overthrown when the great God comes to reckoning with them. 2. He must tell them that it shall shortly be overthrown; at the end of forty days. It has a reprieve granted; so long God will wait to see if, upon this alarm given, they will humble themselves, and amend their doings, and so prevent the ruin threatened. See how slow God is to wrath: though Nineveh's wickedness cried for vengeance, yet it should be spared for forty days, in grace to give them time to repent, and meet God in the way of his judgments. But he will wait no longer; if in that time they turn not, they shall know that he has wret his sword, and made it ready. Forty days is a long time for a righteous God to defer his judgments, yet it is but a little time for an unrighteous people to repent and reform in,
and so turn away the judgments coming. The retracing of the day thus, with all possible assurance, would help to convince them that it was a message from God, for no man durst be so positive in prescribing a time, however he might foregusticate the thing itself; it would also startle them into a preparation for it. It may justly awaken secure sin-ers by a sincere conversion to prevent their own ruin, when they see they have but a little time left for repentance; nor should it not awaken us to get ready for death, to consider that the thing itself is certain, and the time fixed in the counsel of God, but that we are therefore kept in the dark and at uncertainty about it, that we may be always ready?
We cannot be so sure that we shall live forty days as Nineveh now was that it should stand forty days;
ay, I say, we cannot; nor that we shall live with three or forty days than that we should live during our day of security we are apt to promise ourselves.

FLOTS, si scirem utinum sus tempera measur;
Rides, cum non saepe anibus una dies—
We should be alarmed if we were sure not to live a month, and yet we are careless, though we are not sure to live a day.

5. So the people of Nineveh believed God, and proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them. 6 For word came unto the king of Nineveh, and he arose from his throne, and he laid his robe from him, and covered him with sackcloth, and sat in ashes. 7 And he caused it to be proclaimed and published through Nineveh, (by the decree of the king and his nobles,) saying, Let neither man nor beast, herd nor flock, taste any thing; let them not feed, nor drink water. 8 But let man and beast be covered with sackcloth, and cry mightily unto God: yea, let them turn every one from his evil way, and from the violence that is in their hands. 9 Who can tell if God will turn and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger, that we perish not?
10. And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil that he had said that he would do unto them; and he did it not.

Here is,
1. A wonder of divine grace in the repentance and reformation of Nineveh, upon the warning given them of their destruction approaching.
Verily I say unto you, we have not found so great an instance of it, no, not in Israel; and it will rise up in judgment against the men of the gospel-generation, and condemn them; for the Ninevites repented at the preaching of Jonas, but, behold, a greater than Jonas is here, Matth. xii. 41. Nay, it did condemn the impenitence and obstinacy of Israel at that time.
God sent many prophets to Israel, and those well known among them to be mighty in word and deed;
but to Nineveh he sent only one, and him a stranger, whose aspect was mean, we may suppose, and yet, by his body, presence, and speech, he was the fatigene of so long a journey; and yet they repented, but Israel repented not. Jonah preached but one sermon, and we do not find that he gave them any sign or wonder, by the accomplishment of which his word might be confirmed; and yet they were wrought upon, while Israel continued obstinate, whose prophets chose out words whereby to reason with them, and confirmed them by signs following. Jonah only threatened wrath and ruin; we do not find that he gave them any calls to repentance, or directions how to repent, much less any encouragements to hope that they should find mercy if they did repent, and yet they repented; but Israel persisted in impenitence, though the prophets sent to them, drew them with cords of a man, and with chains of love, and little things, and confirmed them by signs which God would do for them if they did repent and reform.

Now let us see what was the method of Nineveh's repentance, what were the steps and particular instances of it.
1. They believed God; they gave credit to the word which Jonah spoke to them in the name of God; they believed that though they had called gods, yet there was but one living and true God; the sovereign Lord of all; that to him they were accountable; that they had sinned against him, and were become obnoxious to his justice; that this notice sent them of ruin approaching came from him, and, consequently, that the ruin itself would come from him at the time prefixed, if it were not prevented by a timely repentance; that he is a "merciful" God, and there might be some hopes of the turning away of the wrath threatened, if they did turn away from the sins for which it was threatened.

Note. They that come to God, that come back to him after they have revolted from him, must believe, must believe that he is, that he is reconcilable, that he will be theirs if they take the right course. And observe what great faith God can work by very weak and weakly means: he can bring even Ninevites by a few words of repentance to be obedient to the faith. Some think the Ninevites heard, from the mariners, or others, or from Jonah himself, of his being cast into the sea, and delivered thence by miracle, and that this served for a confirmation of his mission, and brought them the more readily to believe God speaking by him. But of this we have no certainty; however, Christ's resurrection, typified by that of Jonah's, served for the confirmation of his gospel, and contributed abundantly to their great success, who in his name preached repentance and remission of sins to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.

2. They brought word to the king of Nineveh, who, some think, was at this time Sardanapalus, others Ион. i. 1. that in this kind of business due to go to him first, in respect to his royal dignity; crowned heads, when guilty heads, are before God upon a level with common heads; and therefore Jonah is not sent to the court, but to the streets of Nineveh, to make his proclamation. Howe\'ever an account of his errand is brought to the king of Nineveh, not by way of information against Jonah, as a disturber of the peace, but an attempt by them to concurred and punished, which perhaps would have been done if he had cried thus in the streets of Jerusalem, who killed God's prophets, and stoned them that were sent unto her; no, the account was brought him of it, not as of a crime, but as a message from heaven, by some that were concerned for the public welfare, and whose hearts trembled for it. Note. Those kings are happy, who have such thoughts about them as will give them notice of the things that belong to the kingdom's peace, of the warnings both of the word and of the providence of God, and of the tokens of God's displeasure which they are under; and those people are happy, who have such kings over them as will take notice of those things.

3. The king set them a good example of humiliation; (xv. 6.) When he heard of the word of God sent to him, he rose from his throne; as Egeson king of Moab, who, when Ehud told him he had a message to him from God, rose up out of his seat. The king of Nineveh rose from his throne, not only in reverence to a word from God in general, but in fear of a word of wrath in particular, and in sorrow and shame for sin, by which he and his people were become obnoxious to his justice; and, as Expressions of his humility for sin, and his dread of divine vengeance. It well becomes the greatest of men to abase themselves before the great God.

4. The people conformed to the example of the king, they should, they led the way, for they first began to put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them, v. 5. The least of them, that had least to lose in the overthrow of the city, did not think themselves unconsidered in the alarm; and the greatest of them, that had used for to lie at ease, and live in safety, did not neglect it, nor allow them to put on the marks of humiliation. The wearing of sackcloth, especially to those who were used to fine linen, was a very unseemly thing, and they would not have done it, if they had not had a deep sense of their sin, and their danger by reason of sin, which hereby they designed to express. Note. Those that would not be bruised, must be bruised; and what would not destroy their souls, must afflict their souls; when God's judgments threaten us, we are concerned to humble ourselves under his mighty hand; and though bodily exercise alone profits nothing, and a man's spreading sackcloth and ashes under him, if that he all, is but a jest, (it is the heart that God looks at, Isai. lvi. 5.) yet on solemn days of humiliation, when God in his providences calls to mourning and groaning with sackcloth, we must by the outward expressions of inward sorrow, glorify God with our bodies; at least, by laying aside the ornaments.

5. A general fast was proclaimed and observed throughout that great city, v. 7. —9. It was ordered by the decree of the king and his nobles; the whole legislative power concurred in appointing it, and the whole body of the people were joined in observing it, and both these ways it became a national act, and it was necessary that it should be so when it was to prevent a national ruin. We have here the contents of this proclamation, and it is very observable. See here,

(1.) What it is that is required by it. [1.] That this fast (properly so called) be very strictly observed; on the consideration for this, that, 'neither man nor beast taste any thing; let them take no least refreshment, no, not so much as drink water; let them not please that they cannot fast so long without prejudice to their health, or that they cannot bear it, let them try for once. What if they do feel it an uneasiness, and feel from it for some time after? It is better to submit to than be subject to it; and, when they have so fasted, they will not repentance which is necessary to save a sinking city. Let them make themselves uneasy in body by putting on sackcloth, as well as by fasting, to show how uneasy they are in mind, through sorrow for sin, and the fear of divine wrath. Even the beasts must do penance as well as men; because they had been subject to vanity, as instruments of man's sin; and that, either by their complaints, or their silent hungering for want of meat, they might stir up their owners, and those that attended them, to the expressions of sorrow and humiliation. Those cattle that were kept within doors, must not be fed and watered as usual, because no meat must be stirring on that day. Things of that kind must be forgotten, not mingled with them, when they have been raised upon the praises of God, he called upon the inferior creatures to join with him therein, so when the Ninevites were full of sorrow for sin, and dread of God's judgments, they would have the inferior creatures concur with them in the expressions of it. The beasts that used to be covered with rich and fine trappings, which were the pride of their masters, and they were made to be without, that it was just with God to take it from him. Even the king himself disdained not to put on the garb of a penitent, for he covered himself with sackcloth, and sat in ashes, in token of his humiliation for sin, and his dread of divine vengeance. It well becomes the greatest of men to abase themselves before the great God.

[2.] With their fasting and mourning they must join prayer and supplication to God; for the fasting is designed to fit the body for the service of the soul in the duty of prayer, which is the main matter, and to which the other is but preparatory, or subservient. Let them cry mightily... to God; let even the brute creatures do it according to their capacity, let their cries and moans for want of food be graciously construed as cries to God, as the cries of the young ravens are, (Job xxxviii. 41.) and of the young lions, Ps. civ. 21. But especially let the men, women, and children, cry to God; let them cry mightily for the pardon of the sins which otherwise they have hurried on, and bring to God the sentences which were by Jonah cried against them.

It was time to cry to God, when there was but a step between them and ruin—high time to seek the Lord. In prayer we must cry mightily, with a fixness of thought, firmness of faith, and fervour of pious and devout affections. By crying mightily we wrestle with God, who take hold of him; and walk in, in the evil way of his heart, and the evil way of his conversation, and particularly from the violence that is in their hands; let them restore what they have unjustly taken, and make reparation for what wrong they have done, and let them not any more oppress those they have power over, or defraud those they have dealings with; let the men in authority, at the court end of the town, turn from the violence in their hands, and use no unjust weights or measures, nor impose upon the ignorance or necessity of those they trade with.

Note, It is not enough to fast for sin, but we must turn from sin, in their hearts, and not decree unrighteous decrees, or give wrong judgment upon appeals made to them. Let the men of business, at the trading end of the town, turn from the violence in their hands, and use no unjust weights or measures, nor impose upon the ignorance or necessity of those they trade with.

Note. Upon what inducement this fast is proclaimed and religiously observed; (v. 9.) 'What can tell if God will return and repent?' Observe, [1.] What it is that they hope for; that God will, upon their repenting and turning, change his way toward them, and revoke his sentence against them; that he will turn from his fierce anger, which they own they deserve, and yet humbly and earnestly deprecate; and that thus their ruin will be prevented, and they plaster.

They cannot object against the equity of the judgment, they pretend not to set it aside by appealing to a higher court, but hope in God himself, that he will repent, and that his own mercy (to which they fly) shallquake against judgment. They believe that God is justly angry with them, that their sin has been very heinous, his anger is very fierce, and that, if he proceed against them, there is no remedy, but they die, they perish, they all perish, and are undone; for who knows the power of his anger? It is not therefore the threatened overthrow that they pray for the prevention of, but the anger of God that they pray for the turning away of. As when we pray for the favour of God, we pray for all good, and the prevention of all evil; so when we pray against evil, we pray against all evil. [2.] What day of hope they had of it; 'Who can tell if God will turn to us?' Jonah had not told them, they had not among them any other prophets to tell them, so that they could not be so confident of finding mercy upon their repentance, as we may be, who have the promise and oath of God to depend upon, and especially the merit and mediation of Christ to trust to, for pardon upon repentance. Yet they had a general notion of the goodness of God's nature, his mercy to man, and his being pleased with the repentance and conversion of sinners; and from this they raised some hopes, and hoped that God would not be angry, but would spare them, as they did not yet desirous. Note, Hope of mercy is the great encouragement to repentance and reformation; and though there be but some glimmerings of hope mixed with great fears arising from a sense of our own sinfulness, and unworthiness, and long abuse of divine patience, yet they may serve to quicken and engage our serious repentance and reformation. Let us boldly cast ourselves at the footstool of free grace, resolving that, if we perish, we will perish there; yet who knows but God will look upon us with compassion?

II. Here is a wonder of divine mercy in the sparing of these Ninevites, upon their repentance; (v. 10.) 'God saw their words; he not only heard their good words, by which they professed repentance, but saw their good works, by which they brought forth fruit meet for repentance; he saw that they turned from their evil way, and that was the thing he looked for and required; if he had not seen that, their fasting and sackcloth would have been as nothing in his account; he saw there was among them a general conviction of their sins, and a general resolution not to return to them, and that for some days before they were lived in; they lived as if they had left things upon the city; and this he was well pleased with.

Note, God takes notice of every instance of the reformation of sinners, even those instances that fall not under the cognizance and observation of the world. He sees who turn from their evil way, and who do not, and meets those with favour, that meet him in a sincere conversion; when they repent of the evil of their committed sins, he.upons of all evil of judgment pronounced against them. Thus he spared Nineveh, and did not the evil which he said he would do against it. Here were no sacrifices offered to God, that we read of, to make atonement for sin, but the sacrifice of God is a broken spirit; a broken and a contrite heart, such as the Ninevites now had, in what he will not desist, it is what he will give countenance to, and put honour upon.

CHAP. IV.

We read, with a great deal of pleasure, in the close of the foregoing chapter, the account of the repentance of Nineveh; but in this chapter, we read, with a great deal of uneasiness, concerning the sin of Jonah; and as there is joy in heaven and earth for the conversion of sinners, so there is grief for the follies and infirmities of saints. In all the book of God we scarcely find a servant of the Lord (and such a one we are sure Jonah was, for the scripture calls him so) so very much out of temper as he is here, so peevish and proud, so carnal and worldly. In the first book he had had a blotting out of the face of God; but here we have him, in effect, flying in the face of God: and, which is more griefing to us, there we had an account of his repentance, and return to God; but here, though no doubt he did repent, yet as in Solomon's case, no account is left us of his recovering himself; but while we read with wonder of his perverseness, we read with no less wonder of God's forbearance toward him, by which his conscience was saved; not that he had cast him off. Here is, I. Jonah's repining at God's mercy to Nineveh, and the fret he was in about it, v. 1. 3. 11. The gentle reproof God gave him for it, v. 4. II. Jonah's discontent at the withering of his anger, and his justifying of himself in that discontent, v. 5. 8. 9. IV. God's improving of it for his conviction, that he ought not to be angry at the sparing of Nineveh, v. 10. 11. Man's badness and God's goodness serve here for a foil; every other of the former may appear the more exceeding sinful, and the latter the more exceeding gracious.
BUT it displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry. 2. And he prayed unto the Lord, and said, I pray thee, O Lord, was not this my saying when I was yet in my country? Therefore I fled before unto Tarshish: for I knew that thou art a gracious God, and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repentest thee of the evil. 3. Therefore now, O Lord, take, I beseech thee, my life from me: for it is better for me to die than to live. 4. Then said the Lord, Doest thou well to be angry?

See here,
1. How unjustly Jonah quarrelled with God for his mercy to Nineveh, upon their repentance. This gives us occasion to suspect that Jonah had only delivered the message of wrath against the Ninevites, and had not at all assisted or encouraged them in their repentance, as one would have thought he should have done; for, when they did repent, and found mercy,
2. Jonah grudged them the mercy they found: (v. 1.) It displeased Jonah exceedingly; and (v. 2.) he was very angry; he had no rule over his own spirit, and therefore, as a city broken down, lay exposed to temptations and snares. (2.) That he had so little reverence of God as to be displeased and angry at what he did; as David was when the Lord had made a breach upon Uzza; whatever pleases God, should please us, and though we cannot account for it, yet we must acquiesce in it. (3.) That he had so little affection to men as to be displeased and very angry at the conversion of the Ninevites, and their reception into the divine favour.

This was the sin of the scribes and Pharisees, who murmured at our Saviour because he entertained publicans and sinners; but is our eye evil, because his is good? But why was Jonah so uncasey at it, that the Ninevites repented, and were spared? It cannot be expected that we should give any good reason for a thing so very absurd and unreasonable; no, nor any thing that has the face or colour of reason; but we may suppose, his passion was, hot spirits are usually high spirits; only by pride comes contention both with God and man. It was a point of honour, that Jonah stood upon, and that made him angry. [1.] He was jealous for the honour of his country; the repentance and reformation of Nineveh shamed the obstinacy of Israel that repented not, but hated to be reformed, and the favour God showed to these Gentiles, upon their repentance, was an ill omen to the Jewish nation, as if they should be (as at length they were) rejected and cast out of the church, and the Gentiles substituted in their room.

When it was intimated to St. Peter himself, that he should make no difference between Jews and Gentiles, he started at the thing, and said, Not so, Lord; no marvel then that Jonah looked upon his with regret that Nineveh should become a favourite. Jonah herein had a zeal for God as the God of Israel in a particular manner, but not according to knowledge. Note, Many are displeased with God, under pretence of concern for his glory. [2.] He was jealous for his own honour; fearing lest, if Nineveh was not destroyed within forty days, he should be accounted a false prophet, and stigmatized accordingly; whereas he needed not be under any discontent about that, for in the threatening of ruin it was implied that, for the preventing of it, they should repent, and if they did it should be prevented. And no one will complain of being deceived by him who is better than his word, and he would rather gain honour among them, by being instrumental to save them, than fall under any disgrace. But melancholy men, (and such a one Jonah seems to have been,) are apt to make themselves uneasy, by fancying evils to themselves that are not, nor are ever likely to be. Most of our frets, as well as our frights, are the cause of the trouble; for affliction teaches us to pray submissively, as Jonah, which Jonah now forgot to do. Being in discontent, he applied himself to the duty of prayer, as he used to do in his troubles, but his corruptions got head of his graces, and when he should have been praying for benefit by the mercy of God himself, he was complaining of the benefit others had by that mercy.

Nothing could be spoken more unbecomingly. [3.] He then made this application of himself fleeing from the presence of the Lord when he was first ordered to go to Nineveh, for which he had before, with good reason, condemned himself: "Lord," said he, "was not this my saying when I was in my own country? Did I not foresee that if I went to preach at Nineveh, they would repent, and then wouldst forgive them, and then thy word would be not fulfilled, and repentest thee as before said." What a strange sort of man was Jonah, to dread the success of his ministry! Many have been tempted to withdraw from their work because they have despised of doing good by it, but Jonah declined preaching because he was afraid of doing good by it; and still he persists in the same corrupt notion, for it seems the whale's belly itself could not cure him of it. It was his saying when he was in his own country, but it was a bad saying; yet here he stands to it; and, very unlike the other prophets, desires the awful day which he had foretold, and grieves because it does not come. Even Christ's disciples know not what manner of spirit they are of; they did not, who wished for fire from heaven upon the city that did not receive them, much less did Jonah, who wished himself to be cast into the city that did receive him, Luke ix. 55. Jonah thinks he has reason to complain of that, when it is done, which he was before afraid of; so hard is it to get a root of bitterness plucked out of the mind, when once it is fastened there. And why did Jonah expect that God would spare Nineveh? Because I knew that thou wast a gracious God, indulging to them, and that thy word was very good, and thy power of doing good and of kind good, and repentest thee of the evil. All this is very true; and Jonah could not but know it by God's proclamation of his name, and the experiences of all ages; but it is strange and very unaccountable, that that which all the saints had made the matter of their joy and praise, Jonah should make the matter of rebellion and unbelief; as if he knew not that what was sufficient for the salvation of the divine nature, which is indeed the greatest glory of it—that God is gracious and merciful. The servant that said, I knew thee to be a hard man, said that which was false, and yet, had it been true, it was not the proper matter of a complaint; but Jonah, though he says what is true, yet, speaking it by way of reproach, speaks very absurdly. Those have a spirit of contention and contradiction indeed, that can find in their hearts to quarrel with the goodness of God, and his sparing, pardonable mercy, which is so much the more apt to give us a loathing of hell. This is making that to be us a savour of death unto death, which ought to be a savour of life unto life.

(3.) In a passion he wishes for death, v. 3. A strange expression of his causeless passion! "Now, O Lord, take, I beseech thee, my life from me. If Nineveh must live, let me die, rather than see thy wrath, which is so much the more justly terrible to Ninevites, as it is transferred to the Gentiles." As if there were not grace enough in God both for Jews and Gentiles, or as if his countrymen were the further off from mercy for the Ninevites being taken into favour. When the prophet Elijah had laboured in vain, he wished he might die, and it was his infirmity, 1 Kings xix. 4. But Jonah labours to good pur- pose, and is moved by much the stronger passion; and a great blessing his life had been to Nineveh; yet now, for that very reason, it is become a burden to himself, and he begs to be eased of it; pleading, It is better for me to die than to live. Such a word as this may be the language of grace, as it was in Paul, who desired to depart and be with Christ, which is far better; but here it was the language of folly and passion, and strong corruption; and so much the worse.

[1.] Jonah being now in the midst of his usefulness, and therefore fit to live; he was one whose ministry God wonderfully owned and prospered. The conversion of Nineveh might give him hopes of being instrumental to convert the whole kingdom of Assyria; it was therefore very absurd for him to wish he might die, when he had a prospect of living to so good a purpose, and could be so ill spared.

[2.] Jonah being now so much out of temper, and therefore unfit to die. How durst he think of dying, and going to appear before God's judgment-seat, when he was actually quarrelling with him? Was this a frame of spirit proper for a man to go out of the world in? But those who passionately desire death, commonly have least reason to do it, as being very much unprepared for it. Our business is to get ready to die by doing the work of life, and thereby to refer ourselves to God to take away our life when and how he pleases.

II. See how justly God reproved Jonah for this heat that he was in; (v. 4.) The Lord said, Doest thou well to be angry? Is doing well a displeasure to thee? So some read it. What! doest thou repent of thy good deeds? God might justly have rejected him, in which we laboured; for, as it is written, he justly have taken him at his word, and have struck him dead when he wished to die; but he vouchsafes to reason with him for his conviction, and to reduce him to a better temper. As the father of the prodigal reasoned with his elder son, when, as Jonah here, he murmured at the remission and reception of his brother. Doest thou well to be angry? See here our duty: be never angry, if we have not reason to be justly angry, nor indeed when we are justly angry. —to teach us to restore those that are fallen, with a spirit of meekness, and with soft answers to turn away wrath. God appeals to himself and to his own conscience, "Doest thou well? Thou knowest thou dost not."

We should often put this question to ourselves, Is it well to say thus, to do thus? Can I justify it? Must I not angry it, and undo it, again by repentance, or be undone for ever? Ask,

1. Do I well to be angry? When passion is up, let it meet in this check, "Do I well to be so soon angry, so often angry, so long angry, to put myself into such a heat, and to give others such ill language in my anger? Is this well, that I suffer these headstrong passions to get dominion over me?"

2. Do I well to be angry at the mercy of God to repenting sinners? That was Jonah's crime. Do we well to be angry at that which is so much for the glory of God, and the advancement of his kingdom among men? To be angry at that which angels rejoice in, and for which abundant thanksgivings will be rendered to God? We do ill to be angry at that grace which we ourselves need, and are undone without: if room were not left for repentance, and hope given of pardon, upon repentance, what would become of us? let the conversion of sinners, which is the joy of Heaven, be our joy, and never our grief.

5. So Jonah went out of the city, and sat on the east side of the city, and there made him a booth, and sat under it in the shadow, till he might see what would become of the city. 6. And the Lord God prepared a gourd; and made it to come up over Jonah, that it might be a shadow over his head, to deliver him from his grief. So Jonah was exceeding glad of the gourd. 7. But God prepared a worm, when the morning rose the next day, and it smote the gourd that it withered. 8. And it came to pass, when the sun did arise, that God prepared a vehement east wind; and the sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die, and said, It is better for me to die than to live. 9. And God said to Jonah, Doest thou well to be angry for the gourd? And he said, I do well to be angry, even unto death. 10. Then said the Lord, Thou hast had pity on the gourd, for which thou hast not laboured, neither madest it grow; which came up in a night, and perished in a night: 11. And should not I spare Nineveh, that great city, wherein are more than sixscore thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand; and also much cattle?

Jonah persists here in his discontent; for the beginning of strife both with God and man is as the letting forth of waters, the breach grows wider and wider, and, when passion gets head, bad is made worse; it should therefore be silenced and suppressed at first. We have here,

1. Jonah's sullen expectation of the fate of Nineveh. We may suppose that the Ninevites, giving credit to the message he brought, were ready to appear before God's judgment-seat, and to show him respect, that they would have bid him welcome to the best of their houses and tables; but Jonah was out of humour; would not accept their kindness, nor behave toward them with common civility; which one might have feared would have prejudiced them against him and his words; but when there is not only the treasure put into earthen vessels, but the trust lodged with men subject to like passions as we are, and yet the point gained, it just Nineveh, but the great heat which was to appear, he where all the world would become of Sodom, Gen. xix. 27. The forty days were now expiring, or expired, and Jonah hopes that if Nineveh be not overthrown, yet that some judgment or other shall come upon it, sufficient to save his credit; however, it is with great unceasing that he awaits the issue. He will not sojourn in a house, expecting its fall, but, as he looked on with Tembly the boughs of the fowrd trees, and sit in that, though there he would lie exposed to wind and weather. Note, It is common for those that have fretful, uneasy spirits, industriously to create inconveniences themselves, that, resolving to complain, they may still have something to complain of.

2. God's gracious provision for his shelter and refreshment, when he thus foolishly afflicted himself, and was still adding yet more and more to his own affliction, v. 6. Jonah was sitting in his booth, fretting at the cold of the night and the heat of the day, which were both grievous to him, and God might have said, It is his own choice, his own doing, a house of his own building, let him make the best of it; but he looked on him with compassion, as the tender mother does on the froward child, and relieved him against the grievances which he by his own wilfulness created to himself.

He prepared a gourd, a plant with broad leaves, and full of them, that suddenly grew up, and covered his hat or booth, so as to keep off much of the injury of the cold and heat. It was a shadow over his head, to deliver him from his grief, that, being refreshed in body, he might the better guard against the uneasiness of his mind, which outward crosses and troubles are often the occasion and increase of. See how tender God is of his people in their afflictions, yea, though they are foolish and froward, nor is he extreme to mark what they do amiss.

God had before prepared a great gird to secure Josue from the loss of his face in battle, and here a great gourd, to secure him from the injuries of the air, for he is the Protector of his people against evils of every kind, has the command of plants as well as animals, and can soon prepare them, to make them serve his purposes, can make their growth sudden, which, in a course of nature, is slow and gradual. A gourd, one would think, was but a slender fortification at the best, yet Jonah was exceeding glad of the gourd; for,

(1.) It was really at that time a great comfort to him. A thing in itself small and inconsiderable, yet, coming seasonably, may be to us a very valuable blessing. A gourd in the right place may do us more service than a cedar. The least creatures may be great plagues, (as flies and lice were to Pharaoh, Ex. x. 19.) and here the gourd to Jonah, according as God is pleased to make them. An bough of the gourd, if it be not uprooted, doth grow in the existing to serve aught than that it should wither. A small tree will serve sometimes to pacify a cross child, as the gourd did Jonah. But wisdom and grace would teach us both to weep for our troubles as though we wept not, and to rejoice in our comforts as though we rejoiced not. Creature-comforts we ought to enjoy and be thankful for, but we need not be exceeding glad of them, it is God only that must be our exceeding Joy, Ps. xlvii. 4.

3. The sudden loss of this provision which God had made for his refreshment, and the return of his trouble, v. 7, 8. God that had provided comfort for him, provided also an affliction for him in that very thing which was his comfort; the affliction did not come by chance, but by divine direction and appointment.

He that gave, took away, and Jonah ought to have blessed his name in both; but because, when he took the comfort of the gourd, he did not give God the praise of it, God deprived him of the benefit of it, and justly. See what all our creature-comforts are, and what we may expect them to be; they are gourds, have their root in the earth, are but a thin and slender defense compared with the rock of ages; they are withering things, they perish in the using, and we are soon deprived of the comfort of them. The gourd withered the next day after it sprang up; our comforts come forth like flowers, and are soon cut down; when we please ourselves most with them, and frame ourselves most from them, we are disapponted. A little thing withers them, a small worm at the root destroys a large gourd. Something unseen and undiscovered does it; our gourds wither, and we know not what to attribute it to. And perhaps those wither first that we have been exceeding glad of; that proves least safe that is most dear.

(2.) He prepared a wind to make Jonah feel the want of the gourd, v. 8. It was a vehement east-wind, which drove the heat of the rising sun violently upon the head of Jonah. This wind was not as a fan to abate the heat, but as bellows to make it more intense. Thus poor Jonah lay open to sun and wind.

4. The further fret that this put Jonah into; v. 9. He fasted, and vexed himself that he might die. "If the gourd be killed, if the gourd be dead, kill me too, let me die with the gourd." Foolish man, that thinks his life bound up in the life of a weed!

Note, It is just that those who love to complain, should never be left without something to complain of, that their folly may be manifested and corrected, and, if possible, cured. And see here what passions that run into an extreme one way, commonly run into an extreme the other way. Jonah, who was in transports of joy when the gourd flourished, is in pangs of grief when the gourd is withered. Inordinate affection lays a foundation for inordinate affection; what we are over-fond of when we have it, we are apt to over-grrieve for when we lose it, and we may see ourselves and our passions running from one extreme to another.

3. The rebuke God gave him for this; he again reasoned with him; Doest thou well to be angry for the gourd? v. 9. Note. The withering of a gourd is a thing which it does not become us to be angry at; when afflicting providences deprive us of our relations, possessions, and enjoyments, we must bear it patiently; must not be angry at God, must not be angry for the gourd; it is comparatively but a small loss, the loss of a shadow, that is the most we can make of it. It was a gourd, a withering thing, we could expect no other than that it should wither. Our being angry for the withering of it will not recover it; we ourselves shall shortly wither like it.

If one gourd be withered, another gourd may spring up in the room of it; but that which should especially silence our discontent is, that though our gourd be gone, our God is not gone, and there is enough in him to make up all our losses.

Let us therefore own that we do ill, that we do very ill, to be angry for the gourd; and let us understand that we are justly called from ourselves as a child that is weaned from his mother.

6. His justification of his passion and discontent; and it is very strange, v. 9. He said, I do well to be angry, even unto death. It is bad to speak amiss, yet if it be in haste, if what is said amiss be immediately recalled and unsaid again, it is the more excusable; but to speak amiss and stand to it, is bad and evil.

So therefore did he, though God himself rebuked him, and by appealing to his conscience expected he should have rebuked himself.

See what brutish things ungodly passions are, and how much it is our interest, and ought to be our endeavour, to chain up these roaring lions, and ranging bears. Sin and death are two very dreadful things, yet Jonah, in his heat, makes light of them both.

(1.) He has so little regard for God, as to fly in the face of his authority, and to say that he did well in that which, God said, was ill done. Passion often overrules conscience, and forces it, when it is appealed to, to give a false judgment, as Jonah here did.

(2.) He has no little regard to his own life, and to think it no harm to indulge his passion even to death, to kill himself with fretting. We read of wrath that kills the foolish man, and envy that slays the silly one; (Job v. 2.) and foolish, silly ones indeed they are, that cut their own throats with their own passions, that fret themselves into consumptions and other weaknesses, and put themselves into fevers with their own intemperate heat.

7. The improvement of it against him for his conviction, that he did ill to murmur at the sparing of Nineveh. Out of his own mouth God will judge him; and we have reason to think it overcame him; for he made no reply, but, we hope, returned to his right mind, and recovered his temper, though he could not keep it, and all was well.

Now let us see how God answers with him; (v. 10, 11.) Thou hast had pity on the gourd, hast spared it, (so the word is,) didst thou think least, what pity it is, that this gourd should ever wither? and should not I then spare Nineveh? Should not I have as much compassion upon that as thou hadst upon the gourd, and forbid the earthquake which would run that, as thou wouldest have forbidden the worm that withered the gourd? Consider,

(1.) The gourd thou hadst pity on, was but one; but the inhabitants of Nineveh, whom I have pity on, are numerous. It is a great city and very populous, as appears by the number of the infants, suppose from two years old and under; there are a hundred and twenty thousand such in Nineveh, that are not come to so much use of understanding, as to know their right hand from their left, for they are yet but babes.

These are taken notice of, because the age of infants is commonly looked upon as the age of innocence. So many there were in Nineveh, that had not been guilty of any actual transgression, and, consequently, had not themselves contributed to the common calamity, and yet, if Nineveh be overthrown, will all be involved in the common calamity, and shall not I spare Nineveh then, with an eye to them? God has a tender regard to little children, and is ready to pity and succour them, nay, here a whole city is spared for their sakes; which may encourage parents to present their children to God by faith and prayer, that though they are not capable of doing him any service, (for they cannot discern between their right hand and their left, between good and evil, sin and duty;) yet they are capable of participating of his favours, and of obtaining salvation.

The great kindness which God has shewed with a particular kindness for the children that were brought to him, when he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them. Nay, God took notice of the abundance of cattle too, that were in Nineveh, which he had more reason to pity and spare than Jonah had to pity and to spare the gourd, insomuch as the animal life is more excellent than the vegetable.
they shall find mercy with him, that he is so ready to justify himself in showing mercy, and to triumph in those whom he makes the monuments of it, against those whose eye is evil because his is good. Such murmurers shall be made to understand this doctrine, that, how narrow soever their souls, their principles, are, and how willing soever they are to engrace divine grace to themselves and those of their own way, there is one Lord over all, that is rich in mercy to all that call upon him, and in every nation, in Nineveh as well as in Israel, he that fears God, and works righteousness, is accepted of him; he that repents, and turns from his evil way, shall find mercy with him.
EXPOSITION,

WITH

OF THE PROPHECY OF

MICAH.

We shall have some account of this prophet, in the first verse of the book of his prophecy; and therefore shall here only observe, that being contemporary with the prophet Isaiah, (only that he began to prophesy a little after him,) there is a near resemblance between that prophet's prophecy and this; and there is a prediction of the advancement and establishment of the gospel-church, which both of them have, almost in the same words, that out of the mouth of two such witnesses so great a word might be established. Compare Isa. ii. 2, 3, with Mic. iv. 1, 2. Isaiah's prophecy is said to be concerning Judah and Jerusalem, but Micah's concerning Samaria and Jerusalem; for though his prophecy be dated only by the reigns of the kings of Judah, yet it refers to the kingdom of Israel, the approaching ruin of which, in the captivity of the ten tribes, he plainly foretells and sadly laments. What we find here in writing, was but an abstract of the sermons he preached during the reigns of three kings. The scope of the whole is,

I. To convince sinners of their sins, by setting them in order before them, charging both Israel and Judah with idolatry, covetousness, oppression, contempt of the word of God; and their rulers especially, both in church and state, with the abuse of their power; and also by showing them the judgments of God ready to break in upon them for their sins.

II. To comfort God's people with promises of mercy and deliverance, especially with an assurance of the coming of the Messiah, and of the grace of the gospel through him. It is remarkable concerning this prophecy; and confirms its authority, that we find two quotations out of it, made publicly upon very solemn occasions, and both referring to very great events. 1. One is, a prediction of the destruction of Jerusalem, (ch. iii. 12.) which we find quoted in the Old Testament, by the elders of the land, (Jer. xxi. 17, 18.) in justification of Jeremiah, when he foretold the judgments of God coming upon Jerusalem, and to stay the proceedings of the court against him. Micah (say they) foretold that Zion should be ploughed as a field, and Hezekiah did not put him to death; why then should we punish Jeremiah for saying the same? 2. Another is a chief prediction of the birth of Christ, (ch. v. 2.) which we find quoted in the New Testament, by the chief priests and scribes of the people, in answer to Herod's inquiry, where Christ should be born; (Matt. ii. 5, 6.) for still we find that to him bear all the prophets witness.

MICAH, I.

CHAP. I.

In this chapter we have, I. The title of the book, (v. 1.) and a preface demanding attention, v. 2. II. Warning given of desolating judgments, hastening upon the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, (v. 3, 4.) and all for sin, v. 5. III. The particulars of the destruction specified, v. 6, 7. IV. The greatness of the destruction illustrated, 1. By the prophet's sorrow for it, v. 8, 9, 2. By the general sorrow that should be for it, in the several places that must expect to share in it, v. 10, 16. These prophecies of Micah might well be called his lamentations.

1. THE word of the Lord that came to Micah the Morashite, in the days of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, which he saw concerning Samaria and Jerusalem. 2. Hear, all ye people; hearken, O earth, and all that therein is: and let the Lord God be witness against you, the Lord from his holy temple.
For, behold, the Lord cometh forth out of his place, and will come down, and tread upon the high places of the earth. 4. And the mountains shall be molten under him, and the valleys shall be cleft, as wax before the fire, and as the waters that are poured down a steep place. 5. For the transgression of Jacob is all this, and for the sins of the house of Israel. What is the transgression of Jacob? is it not Samaria? And what are the high places of Judah? are they not Jerusalem? 6. Therefore I will make Samaria as a heap of the field, and as plantings of a vineyard: and I will pour down the stones thereof into the valley, and I will discover the foundations thereof. 7. And all the graven images thereof shall be beaten to pieces, and all the hires thereof shall be burnt with fire, and all the idols thereof will I lay desolate: for she gathered it of the hire of a harlot, and they shall return to the hire of a harlot.

Here is, 1. A general account of this prophet and his prophecy, v. 1. This is prefixed for the satisfaction of all that read and hear the prophecy of this book, who will give the more credit to it, when they know the author and his authority. 1. The prophecy is the word of the Lord, it is a divine revelation. Note, What is written in the Bible, and what is the thing itself, will be made known; such things as what is written there, must be heard and received, not as the word of dying men, which we may be judged of; but as the word of the living God, which we must be judged by, for so it is. This word of the Lord came to the prophet, came openly, came powerfully, came in a prohibiting way, and he saw it, saw the vision in which it was conveyed to him, saw the things themselves which he foretold, as much clearness and certainty as if they had been already accomplished. 2. The prophet is Micah the Morasthite; his name Micah is a contraction of Micahah, the name of a prophet some ages before, in Ahab's time; (1 Kings xxii. 8.) his surname, the Morasthite, signifies that he was born or lived at Moresheth, which is mentioned here, v. 14. or Marreshah, which is mentioned, v. 15. and Josh. xv. 44. The place of his abode is mentioned, that any one might inquire in that place, at that time, and might find there was, or had been, such a one there, who was generally reputed to be a prophet. 3. The date of his prophecy is in the reigns of three kings of Judah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, Ahaz was one of the worst of Judah's kings. This is a surprising prediction, that so many times pass over God's ministers, times that frown and times that smile, to each of which they must study to accommodate themselves, and to arm themselves against the temptations of both. The promises and threatenings of this book are interwoven, by which it appears that even in the wicked reign he preached comfort, and said to the righteous then, that it should be well with them; and that in the future reign he preached conviction, and said to the wicked then, that it should be ill with them; for, however the times change, the word of the Lord is still the same. 4. The parties concerned in this prophecy; it is concerning Samaria and Jerusalem, the head-cities of the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah, under the influence of which the kingdoms themselves were. Though the ten tribes have deserted the houses both of David and Aaron, yet God is pleased to send prophets to them. 5. A very solemn introduction to the following prophecy, v. 2. In which, 1. The people are summoned to hear the word of the Lord, and to come to his presence, as upon a court of judicature; Hear, all ye people. Note, Where God has a mouth to speak, we must have an ear to hear; we all must, for we are all concerned in what is delivered. "Hear, ye people," (all of them, so the margin reads it,) "all ye that are now within hearing, and all others that hear it at second hand. It is an unusual construction; but those words with which Micah begins his prophecy, are the very same in the original with those wherewith Micaiah ended his, 1 Kings xxii. 28. 2. The earth is called upon, with all that therein is, to hear what the prophet has to say; Hearken, O earth. The earth shall be made to shake under the stroke and weight of the judgments coming; sooner will the earth hear, than this stupid, senseless people; but God will be heard when he pleads. If the church, and those in it, will not hear, the earth, and those in it, shall, and shame them. 3. God himself is appealed to, and his omniscience, power, and justice, are vouchèd in testimony against this people; "Let the Lord God be Witness against you; a Witness that you had fair warning given you, that your prophets did their duty faithfully as witnesses, but you would not take the warning; let the accomplishment of the prophecy be a witness against your contempt and disbelief of it, and prove, to your conviction and confusion, that it was the word of God, and that no word of his shall fall to the ground." Note, God himself will be a Witness, by the judgments of his hand, against those that would not receive his testimony; but the judgments of his hand will not take the witness, let the accomplishment of the prophecy be a witness against your contempt and disbelief of it, and prove, to your conviction and confusion, that it was the word of God, and that no word of his shall fall to the ground. 4. And the Lord, as he speaks by his prophet, speaks in due proportion to his people, and the judgment of the Lord is a speedy one; "I will come forth out of my place, and will come down. He had seemed to retire, as one regardless of what was done, but now he will show himself, he will rend the heavens, and will come down; not, as sometimes, in surprising occurrences, but as a witness against them, to their destruction, but against them, which they looked not for, Isa. lxiv. 1.—xxvi. 21. 2. That when the Creator appears against them, it shall be in vain for any creature to appear for them. He will tread with contempt and disdain upon the high places of the earth, upon all the powers that are advanced in competition with him, and he will tread down all the idols which so tread upon them, as to tread them down, and level them. High places, set up for the worship of idols, or for military fortifications, shall all be trodden down, and trampled into the dust. Do men trust to the height and strength of the mountains and rocks, as if they were sufficient to bear up their hopes, and bear off their fears. They shall be molten under him, melted down as wax before the

1. And one place shall be desolate, as the place of an harlot, and one shall be waste, as a city no more inhabited. For the Lord will reject and turn away the居民s of the north, and will deliver them to him that serveth him: for the day of the Lord is cometh, the day of the chieftains, for it is nigh.

2. For Jacob is not guilty of transgression, neither is Israel sin; for the Lord his Maker is with him, and the glory of Israel is his salvation. For in Jacob is our salvation, even the iniquity of it. Therefore will I save them, by this their iniquity, and will requite them for the iniquities of their fathers, saith the Lord: for Jacob is my servant, and Israel is my hired servant; and I will save them as a man saveth his hired servant. So saith the Lord GOD."

3. Therefore will I prophesy concerning Ephraim, and against Jerusalem; and I will turn again to the residue of Jacob; but I will not do so wholly: for, lo, the whole heart is corrupted; for they have not known me, saith the Lord."

4. So I will prophesy again concerning Ephraim, and against Benjamin; and I will satiate the house of Jacob with children, and the siege thereof shall be made void; and they shall seek the LORD, and shall find him, when they shall search for him with their whole heart.

5. Behold, as for these transgressions of yours which ye have not committed, when the fathers sinned, it goeth not back upon the sons of those transgressions; though the sons thereof come to know it, and plant iniquity therein, and bring forth iniquity thereto.

6. Return, ye transgressors, why transgress? and ye shall be broken down; and I will do with you as ye have done, saith the Lord."

7. Therefore will I prophesy concerning the house of Jacob, and against the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and they shall be all by themselves, and none shall be joined to them.

8. I also will utterly destroy the Philistines, the house of Cachidee, and I will turn mine hand against Ekron; and the remnant of Ashkelon shall perish, and I will cut off the rest of the Philistines from before the house of Jacob, saith the Lord."

9. And the sea shall give answer to the Lord; and the river shall answer to the Lord: thus shall all the rivers of Egypt answer. Sing and shout together, O ye rivers, O ye streams; O ye rivers of Egypt, and the fields thereof; for this is the city where the Philistines hate me.

10. And it shall come to pass, that the Assyrian shall cease from being a terror, throughout all land; and a man shall not lift up his sword against another, neither shall they take again land every man from another."

11. For the vision is yet for an appointed time; but at the end it shall speak, and it shall not lie; though it tarry, wait for it: for it shall certainly come, it shall not tarry. Behold, it is come: lo, it is come! return ye from the fasting, and go ye into the wine and milk; and I will cause an arrow of fire to go before you, and the glory of the Lord shall be before them, and the tumult of nations shall be at an end.

12. For the chieftains, and the king of Jacob, and the princes of the house of Israel, shall come together, and gather themselves together to the one that is righteous, that is in the land of light, But the wicked shall be forever opposed to the righteous, and at the end they shall be cut off.

13. And the Lord shall give up Israel to be consigned to his enemies, and he shall deliver him into their hand.

14. And he shall destroy Jacob, and have pity on Israel, and shall make them to be like a city that goeth not out of the plain, and like places that are looted of.

15. And the kings shall be confounded, and the princes, and the princes of the earth together; and the princes shall be confounded together, and the kings shall hide their countenances.

16. And the Lord shall be known to Jacob, and the remnant of Israel will be found in the midst of all the people."

17. And Ephraim shall say, What have I done? and Israel shall say, Are ye not ashamed? for ye have preserved your shepherds, but ye have destroyed Me.

18. For the chieftains of Ephraim are favourites, and the inhabitants of the city shall be reprobates, and all the house of Israel shall be turned away as leave.

19. And the house of Jacob shall be enlightened with light, and he shall be saved in the Lord, and he shall be delivered out of all his afflictions.

20. And the saying shall come to Jacob, and to the remnant of Israel; and it shall say, Behold, he shall come, and it shall be well with us: the Lord shall save us from every side.

21. And they shall be as the days of old, and as in the days when the earth brought forth, and out of it起身; and the mountains in the fields were in the wilderness. For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

22. And you shall know that I am in the midst of the earth, and that I am God, and there is none else.

23. Thus saith the Lord: 'In the place where it was said, You shall not pass, and the waters were divided; they shall pass over it; and that which was said, The waters shall cover you; they shall be dry land; they shall be a dry land.

24. It shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said, The waters are too deep for us, there the river shall go in a middle; and the waters which were too deep for us shall become dry land; and the fruitfulness thereof shall be increased, and her prouder men shall be exalted.

25. It shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said, The waters could not be passed, there the river shall go in the middle; and the waters which were too deep for us shall become dry land; and the fruitfulness thereof shall be increased, and her prouder men shall be exalted.'

26. And this is the place where the chieftains of the house of Jacob shall come, and the princes of the house of Israel; and they shall come and see the Lord, and they shall be in health among the nations.
daughter of Zion: for the transgressions of Israel were found in thee. 14. Therefore shall thou give presents to Moresheth-gath: the houses of Achzib shall be a lie to the kings of Israel. 15. Yet will I bring an heir unto thee, O inhabitant of Marreshah: he shall come unto Adullam the glory of Israel. 16. Make thee bale, and poll thee, for thy delicate children; enlarge thy baldness as the eagle; for they are gone into captivity from thee.

We have here a long train of mourners attending the funeral of a ruined kingdom.

1. The prophet is himself chief mourner; (v. 8, 9.) I will wail and howl, I will go stripped and naked, as a man distracted with grief. The prophets usually expressed their own grief for the public grievances, partly to mollify the predictions of them, and to make it appear it was not out of ill will that they denounced the judgments of God—so far were they from desiring the woful day, that they dreaded it more than anything; partly to show how very dreadful and mournful the calamities would be, and to stir up in the people a holy fear of them, yet appear to have no personal interest in it. Woe, Woe, Woe! are the representations of the judgments of God. Note, We ought to lament the punishment of sinners as well as the sufferings of saints in this world; the weeping prophet did so, (Jer. ix. 1.) so did this prophet, he makes a wailing like the dragons, or rather the jackals, ravenous beasts, that in those countries used to meet in the night, and howl, and make hideous noises; he mourns as the owls, the screech owls, as some render it. Two things the prophet here doth foemen laments. 1. That Israel's case is desperate: Her wound is incurable, it is ruin without remedy; man cannot help her, God will not, because she will not by repentance and reformation help herself. There is indeed balm in Gilead, and a Physician there; but they will not apply themselves to the Physician, nor apply the balm to themselves, and therefore the wound is incurable. 2. That Judah likewise is in danger. The cup is going round, and is now put into Judah's hand; The enemy is come to the gate of Jerusalem. Soon after the destruction of Samaria and the ten tribes, the Assyrian army, under Sennacherib had siege to Jerusalem, came to the gate, but could not force their way, finding obstacles in the way. There was great concern and trouble that the prophet foresees the fright, so dearly did he love the peace of Jerusalem.

2. Other places are here brought in mourning; and are called upon to mourn; but with this proviso, that they should not let the Philistines hear them; (v. 10.) Declare it not in Gath: this is borrowed from Deut. ii. 29. Let it alone to Marreshah and Jonathan; 2 Sam. i. 20. Tell it not in Gath, for the uncircumcised will triumph in Israel's tears. Note, One would not, if it could be helped, gratify those that make themselves and their companions merry with the sins or with the sorrows of God's Israel. David was silent, and stilled his griefs, when the wicked were before him, Ps. xxxix. 1. But though it may be prudent and safe for a man to lay the sins of Jerusalem to heart, it is dangerous and unwise to admit a silent one, when the church of God is in distress. Roll thyself in the dust, as great mourners used to do, and so let the house of Judah and every house in Jerusalem become a house of Ashra, a house of dust; covered with dust, crumpled into dust. When God makes the house dust, it becomes us to humble ourselves under his mighty hand, and to put our mouths in the dust. Thus accommodating ourselves to the providences that concern us. Dust we are; God brings us to the dust, that we may know it, and own it.

Divers other places are here named, that should be sharers in this universal mourning; the names of some are more remote from Jerusalem than others. Hence it is conjectured that they are names put up on them by the prophet, the signification of which might either indicate or aggravate the miseries coming upon them; thereby to awaken this secure and stupid people to a holy fear of divine wrath. We find Sennacherib's invasion thus described, in the prediction of it, by the impressions it was to make upon the several cities that fell in his way, Isa. x. 28, 29, &c. Let us observe the particulars here. 1. The inhabitants of Saphir, which signifies near and beautiful, (Thou that dwellest fairly, so the margin reads it,) shall pass away into captivity, or be forced to flee, stripped of all their ornaments, and having their shame naked. Note, Those whom appear ever so fine and delicate, know not what contempt they may be exposed to; and the more grievous will the shame be to those who have been inhabitants of Saphir. 2. The inhabitants of Zaanann, which signifies the country of flocks, a populous country, where the people are as numerous and thick as flocks of sheep, shall yet be so taken up with their own calamities, felt or feared, that they shall have no leisure to concern themselves with the suffering of Beth-rezel, which signifies a place near, shall not condescend with, or bring any succour to their next neighbours in distress; for he shall receive of you his standing; the enemy shall encamp among you. O inhabitants of Zaanann, shall take up a station there, shall find footing among you. They may well think themselves excused from helping their neighbour they are so concerned for themselves, they have enough to do to help themselves and to hold their own. 3. As for the inhabitants of Maroth, which, some think, is put for Ramoth; others, that it signifies the rough places; they waited carefully for good, and were grieved for the want of it, but were disappointed; for evil came from the Lord unto the gate of Jerusalem, when the Assyrian army besieged it, v. 12. The inhabitants of Maroth might well overlook their own particular grievances, when they saw the holy city itself in danger; and might well overlook the Assyrian, that was the instrument, when they saw the evil coming from the Lord. 4. Lachish was a city of Judah, which Sennacherib laid siege to, Isa. xxxvi. 1. 2. The inhabitant of that city is called to bind the chariot to the swift beast, to prepare for a day of punishment, and that day was coming, when all was left to secure themselves and their families; or, it is spoken ironically, You have had your chariots and your swift beasts, but where are they now? God's quarrel with Lachish is, that she is the beginning of the sin, probably the sin of idolatry, to the daughter of Zion; (v. 13.) they had learned it from the ten tribes, their near neighbours, and so had joined the two tribes with it. Note, Those that help to bring sin into a country, do but thereby prepare for the throwing of themselves out of it. They must expect to be first in the punishment, who have been ringleaders in sin. The transgressions of Israel were found in thee; when they came to be traced up to their original, they were found to take rise very much from that city. God knows at whose hands this starting spirit began, and whom to find guilty. Lachish, having been so much necessary to the sin of Israel, shall certainly be reckoned with; Thou shalt give presents to Moresheth-gath, a city of the Philistines, which perhaps had a dependence upon Gath, that famous Philistine city; thou shalt send to court those of that city to assist thee, but it shall be in vain; for, (v. 14.) the houses of Achzib (a city which joined to Moreshah, or Maresiah, and is mentioned with it, Josh. xv. 43.) shall be a lie to the kings of Israel; though they depend upon their strength, yet they shall fail them; here there is an allusion to the name Achzib signifies a lie, and so shall prove to those that trust in it. 5. Maresah, that could not, or would not, help Israel, shall herself be made a prey; (v. 15.) "I will make an heir an enemy, that shall take possession of thy lands, with as much assurance as if he were heir-at-law to them, and he shall come to Adullam, and to the glory of Israel, to Jerusalem the head city;" or, "The glory of Israel shall come to Adullam, a poor despicable place;" or, "The king of Assyria, whom Israel had gloried in, shall come to Adullam, in laying the country waste." 6. The whole land of Judah seems to be spoken to, (v. 16.) and called to weeping and mourning; "Make thee bald, by tearing thy hair and shaving thy head; pull thee for thy delicate children, that had been tenderly and nicely brought up; charge thy baldness as the eagle when she shall her feathers, and is all over bald, for they are gone into captivity from thee, and are not likely to return; and their captivity will be the more grievous to them, because they have been brought up delicately, and have not been instructed to hardship." Or this is directed particularly to the inhabitants of Maresah, as v. 15. That was the prophet's own city, and yet he denounces the judgments of God against it with a great aspersion of its sin, that it had such a prophet, and knew not the day of its visitation. Its being thus privileged, since it improved not the privilege, shall not procure favour for it either with God or with his prophet.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter, we have, 1. The sins with which the people of Israel are charged, carelessness and oppression, fraudulent and violent practices, (v. 1, 2,) dealing bar-barously, even with women and children, and other harmless people, v. 3. Opposition of God's prophets, and silencing them, (v. 6, 7,) and delighting in false prophets, v. 11. II. The judgments with which they are threatened for those sins, that they should be humbled and impoverished, (v. 3., 5.) and banished, v. 10. III. Gracius promises of comfort, reserved for the good people among them, in the Messiah, v. 12, 13. And this is the sum and scope of most of the chapters of this and other prophecies.

1. WO to them that devise iniquity, and work evil upon their beds! when the morning is light they practise it, because it is in the power of their hand. 2. And they covet fields, and take them by violence; and houses, and take them away: so they oppress a man and his house, even a man and his heritage. 3. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, against this family do I devise an evil, from which ye shall not remove your necks; neither shall ye go haughtily: for this time is evil. 4. In that day shall one take up a parable against you, and lament with a doleful lamentation, and say, We be utterly spoiled; he hath changed the portion of my people: how hath he removed it from me! turning away he hath divided our fields. 5. Therefore thou shalt have none that shall cast a cord by lot in the congregation of the Lord.

Here is, I. The injustice of man contriving the evil of sin, v. 1, 2. God was coming forth against this people to destroy them, and here he shows what was the ground of his controversy with them, it is that which is more commonly mentioned as a sin that hastens the ruin of nations and families as much as any other, the sin of oppression. Let us see the steps of it in this chapter: first, they eagerly desire that which is not their own—that is the root of bitterness, the root of all evil; (v. 2.) They cover fields and houses, as Ahahid Naboth's vineyard. "O that such a one's field and house were mine! It lies convenient for me, and I would manage it better than he does; it is fitter for me for him than for him." 2. They set their wits on work, to devise iniquity; and with a bent wits they devise iniquity with a great deal of cursed art and policy, they plot how to do it effectually, and yet so as not to expose themselves, or bring them- selves into danger, or under reproach by it. This is called working evil; they are working it in their heads, in their families, and are as intent upon it, and with as much pleasure, as if they were doing it, and are as confident of their success (so wisely do they think they have laid their scheme) as if it were assuredly done. Note, It is bad to do mischief upon a sudden thought, but much worse to devise it, to do it with design and deliberation; when the craft and subtilty of the old serpent appears with his poison and venom, it is wickedness in perfection. They devised it upon their beds, when they lay down; and they might have done it in an hour, had not the chievious design held their eyes waking; upon their beds, where they should have been remembering God, and meditating upon him, where they should have been communing with their own heart, and examining them, they were devising iniquity. It is of great consequence to improve and employ the hours of our retirement and solitude in a proper manner. 3. They employ their power in executing what they have designed and contrived, they practise the iniquity they have devised, because it is in the power of their hands; they find that they can compass it by the help of their wealth, and the authority and interest they have, and that none dare control them, or call them to an account for it; and this, they think, will justify them, and bear them out in it. Note, It is the mistake of many, to think that as they can do, they may do, whereas no power is given for destruction, but all for edification. 4. They are industrious and very expeditious in accomplishing the iniquity they have devised; when they have settled the matter in their thoughts, in their beds, they lose no time, but, as soon as the morning is light, they practise it; they are early up in the prosecution of their designs, and what ill their hand finds is fit to be done; with all their speed they hasten in their work, and to a certain degree, our slothfulness and dilatoriness in doing good, and should shame us out of it. In the service of God, and our generation, let it never be said that we left that to be done to-morrow, which we could do to-day. 5. They stick at nothing, to compass their designs; what they covet they take away, if they can, and (1.) They care not what wrong they do, as Deut. xxi. 19. "In a parable so far so near, they take away a man's fields by violence; not only by fraud, and underhand practices, and colour of law, but by force and with a high hand." (2.) They care not whom they do wrong to, nor how far the iniquity extends, which they devise; they oppress a man and his house, they rob and ruin those that have numerous families to maintain, and are not concerned, they oppress poorer and wretched families, and children a begging. They oppress a man and his heritage; they take away from men that which they have in unquestionable title to, having received it from their ancestors, and which they have but in trust to transmit it to their posterity; but those oppres- sorso care not how many they impoverish, so they may but enrich themselves. Note, If covet- ousness reigns in the heart, commonly all compa-son is banished from it; and if any man love this world, as the love of the Father, so the love of his neighbour, is not in him.

11. The justice of God contriving the evil of punishment this sin! 3.) Therefore thus saith the Lord, the righteous God, that judges between man and man, and is an Avenger on them that do wrong; Behold, against this family do I devise an evil, against the whole kingdom, the house of Israel, and particularly those families in it that were cruel and oppressive: they unjustly devise evil against their brethren, and God will justly devise evil against them so greatly as to separate the punishment of their sin, that it shall be very sure, and such as cannot be avoided, very severe, and such as they cannot hear, very signal and remarkable, and such as shall be universally observed to answer to the sin. The more there appears of a wicked wit in the sin, the more there shall appear of a holy wisdom and conduct in the punishment; for the Lord will be known by the judgments he executes, he will be owned by them. 1. He finds them very secure, and confident that they shall some way or other escape the judgment, or, though they fall under it, shall soon throw it off, and get clear of it, and therefore he tells them, It is an evil from which they shall not remove their neck. They were children of their sins, and did not enough satisfy God's righteous commands, but broke those bonds asunder, and cast away those cords from them; and therefore God will lay upon them the heavy yoke of his righteous judgments, and they shall not be able to withdraw their necks from that; those that will not be overruled shall be overcome. 2. He finds them very proud and sately, and therefore he tells them that they shall not go haughtily with stretched-forth necks and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they go; (Isa. iii. 16.) for this time is evil, and the events of it were very humbling and mortifying, and such as will bring down the stoutest spirit. 3. He found them very merry and jovial, and therefore tells them their note shall be changed, their laughter shall be turned into mourning, and their joy into heaviness; (v. 4.) In that day, when God comes to punish you for you oppression, shall one take up a parable against you, and lament with a doleful lamentation, with a lamentation of lamentations, (so the word is,) a most lamentable lamentation; as a song of songs is a most pleasing song. Their enemies shall insult over them, and make a jest of their griefs, for they shall take up a parable against them, and lay to their calamities, and this shall be the general cry, We be utterly spoiled, we are all undone. Note, That they were most haughty and secure in their prosperity, are commonly most dejected, and most ready to despair, in their adversity. 4. He found them very rich in houses and lands, which they had gained by oppression, and therefore tells them that they shall be stripped of all. (1.) They should, in their despair, give it all up; they shall say, We are utterly spoiled; he has changed the portion of my people, so that it is now no longer theirs, but it is in the possession and occupation of their enemies, How has he removed it from me! How suddenly, how powerfully. What is unjustly got by us, will not continue long, and therefore tells them that they shall be stripped of all. Turning away from us in wrath, he has divided our fields, and given them into the hands of strangers. Wo to those from whom God turns away. The margin reads it, Instead of restoring, he has divided our fields; instead of putting as again in the possession of our estates, he has confirmed them in the possession of the sons that have taken them from us. Note, It is just with God, that those who have dealt fraudulently and violently with others, should themselves be dealt fraudulently and violently with. (2.) God shall ratify what they say in their despair; (v. 5.) so it shall be: Thou shall have none to cast a rod by lot, in the congregation of the Lord, none to divide inheritances, unless there be no inheritances to divide, no courts to try titles to lands, or determine controversies about them, or cast lots upon them, as in Joshua's time, for all shall be in the enemy's hand. This land, which should be taken from them, had they not only an unquestionable title to, but a very considerable enjoyment of, for it was in the congregation of the Lord; or, rather, the congregation of the Lord was in it; it was God's land, it was a holy land, and therefore it was the more grievous to them to be turned out of it. Note, Those are to be reckoned the sorest calamities, which cut us off from the congregation of the Lord, or cut us short in the enjoyment of the privileges of it.

6. Prophecy ye not, say they to them that prophesy: they shall not prophecy to them that they shall not take shame. 7. O thou that art named The house of Jacob, is the Spirit of the Lord straitened? are these his doings? do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly? 8. Even of late my people is risen up as an enemy: ye pull off the robe with the garment from them that pass by securely as men averse from war. 9. The women of my people have ye cast out from their pleasant houses; from their children have ye taken away my glory for ever. 10. Arise ye, and depart; for this is not your rest: because it is polluted, it shall destroy you, even with a sore destruction. 11. If a man, walking in the spirit and falsehood do lie, saying, I will prophesy unto thee of wine, and of strong drink; he shall even be the prophet of this people.

Here are two sins charged upon the people of Israel, and judgments denounced against them for each, such judgments as exactly answer the in persecuting God's prophets, and oppressing God's people. 1. Persecuting God's prophets; suppressing and silencing them is a sin that provokes God as much as any other, for it not only spits in the face of his authority over us, but averts the bossels of his mercy to us; for his sending prophet to us is a sure and valuable token of his good will. Now observe here, (1.) What the obstruction and opposition were, which this people gave to God's prophets. They said to them that prophesy, Prophecy ye not, as Isa. xxx. 10. They said to the seer, See not; do not trouble us with accounts of what you have seen, nor bring us any such frightful messages. They must not prophecy at all, or they must prophecy only what they please. The word for prophesying, here, signifies dropping, for the words of the prophets dropped from heaven as the dew. Notice those that hate to be reformed, hate to be reproved, and do all they can to silence faithful ministers. Amos was forbidden to prophesy, Amos vii. 10, &c. Therefore persecutors stop their breath, because they have no other way to stop their mouths, (or if they please to prophesy, and torment them that dwell on the earth, as the two witnesses did, Rev. xi. 10. Some read it, Prophecy not, let these prophecies: Let not these prophecies, that tell us of our faults, and threaten us, but let these prophecies, that will flatter us in our sins, and cry peace to us. They will not say that they will have no ministers at all; but they will have such as, you, a prophet, that prophesy what they would have them, and go their way. This they are charged with, v. 11. that when they silenced and frowned upon the true prophets, they contemnenced and encouraged pretenders, and set them up, and made an interest for them, to confront God's faithful prophets; If a man walk in the spirit of falsehood, pretend to have the Spirit of God; if a man do such things as you, a prophet, have done in delusion, and he himself knows that he has no commission, no instruction, from God, yet, if he says, I will prophesy unto thee of wine and strong drink, if he will but assure them that they shall have wine and strong drink enough, that they need not fear the judgments of war and famine, which the other prophets threatened them with, that they should always have plenty of the delights of sense, and never know the want of them; and if he will but tell them that it is lawful for them to drink as much as they please of their wine and strong drink, and they need not scruple being drunken, and they shall have peace, though they go on, and add drunkenness to thisth, such a prophet as this is a man after their own heart, who will tell them that there is not one to have a mind in God, that is altogether such as they lead, he shall even be the prophet of this people; such a man they would have to be their prophet, that will not only associate himself with them in their rioting and revellings, but will pretend to consecrate it by his prophecies, and so harden them in their security and sensuality. Note, It is not strange if people that are vicious and debauched, come to have a mind in God, that are altogether such as themselves, for they are willing to believe: God is so too, Ps. l. 21. But how are sacred things profaned, when they are prostituted to such base purposes, when prophecy itself shall be pressed into the service of a lewd and profane crew! But thus that servant who said, My Lord delays his coming, by the spirit of falsehood, smote his fellow-servants, and ate and drank with the drunkard. 2. How are we here experimented with upon this matter; (v. 7.) O thou that art named the house of Jacob, does it become thee to say and do thus? Wilt thou silence them that prophesy, and forbid them to speak in God's name? Note, It is an honour and privilege to be named of the house of Jacob; Thou art called a Jew, Rom. ii. 17. But when those who are called by that worthy name degenerate, they commonly prove the worst of men themselves, and the worst enemies to God's prophets. The Jews who were named of the house of Jacob, were the most violent persecutors of the first preachers of the gospel. Upon this, the prophet here argues with the opposers of the word of God, and shows them, (1.) What an affront they hereby put upon God, the God of the holy prophets; Is the Lord God among such? As if God would say to his priests, you do what you can to silence his Spirit too; but do you think you can do it? Can you make the Spirit of God your Prisoner and your Servant? Will you prescribe to him what he shall say, and forbid him to say what is displeasing to you? If you silence the prophets, yet cannot the Spirit of the Lord find out other ways to reach your consciences? Can you find ways to make God's servants lie? (2.) What a scandal it was to their profession as Jews; You are named the house of Jacob, and it is your honour; but are these his doings? Are these the doings of your father Jacob? Do you herein tread in his steps? No; If you were indeed his children, you would do his works; but now you seek to kill and silence a man that tells you the truth, in God's name; This did not Abraham, John vii. 59, 40. This did not Jacob. Or, Are these God's doings? Are these the doings of his people? No, you know the Lord's ways are not as man's; they can never be so strangely blinded and bigoted as to kill God's ministers, and think that therein they do him service, John xvi. 2. (3.) Let them consider how unreasonable and absurd the thing was in itself; Do not my words do good to them that walk uprightly? Yes, certainly they do; it is an appeal to the experiences of the generation of the upright; Call now if there be any of them that repent, if there be any that seek me, and I will comfort them, declares the Lord. If there be any that seek me, and I will not comfort them in it, (Ps. cxxix. 68.) And will you hinder the great Benefactor from doing good? Will you put the light of the world under a bushel? You might as well say to the sun, Shine not, as say to the sower, See not. Herein you wrong the souls of men, and deprive them of the benefit designed them by the word of God. Note, Those are enemies not only to God, but to the world, they seek to oppose and hinder the means and methods by which God's ministers, and obtrude the means of knowledge and grace; for it is certainly for the public, common good of states and kingdoms, that religion should be encouraged. God's words do good to them that walk uprightly; it is the character of good people, that they walk uprightly, Ps. xv. 2. And it is their comfort, that the words of God are good, and do good to them; his own children shall be delivered; and God's words are good words to good people, and speak comfortably to them. But they that opposed the words of God, and prohibited the prophets, pleaded, in justification of themselves, that God's words were unprofitable and unpleasant to them, and did them no good, nor prophesied any good concerning them, but evil, as Ahah complained of Micahiah; in answer to which, the prophet here tells them that it was their own fault; they might think less of God's words; they might find it of good use to them, if they were but disposed to make a good use of it; if they would but walk uprightly, as they should, and so qualify themselves for comfort, the word of God would speak comfortably to them. Do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise for the same. 3. What they are threatened with for this sin; God also will choose their delusions, and, (1.) They will be deprived of the benefit of a faithful ministry. Since they say, Prophesy not, God will take them at their word, and they shall not prophesy to them, their sin shall be their punishment; if men will silence God's ministers, it is just with God to silence them, as he did Ezekiel, and to say, They shall no more be reprovers and monitors to them. Let the priests that prophesy be silenced, the word of God shall be healed, for he will not be ruled. They shall not prophesy to them, and then they will not take shame. As it is the work of magistrates, so it is also of ministers, to put men to shame when they do amiss, (Judg. xviii. 7.) that, being made ashamed of their folly, they may not return again to it; but when God gives men up to be impudent and shameless in sin, it is not for them to return to those which they have turned aside from them alone. (2.) They shall be given up to the blind guidance of an unfaithful ministry. We may understand v. 11. as a threatening; If a man be found walking in the spirit of falsehood, having such a lying spirit as was in the mouth of Ahah's prophets, that will strengthen their hands in their wicked ways, he shall be the prophet of this people, that is,
God will leave them to themselves to hearken to such; since they will be deceived, let them be deceived; since they will not admit the truth in the love of it, God will send them strong delusions, to believe a lie, 2 Thess. ii. 10, 11. They shall have prophets that will prophesy to them for wine and strong drink; (so some read it,) they shall give you a cast of their offices to your mind, for a bottle of wine, or a flagon of ale; will sooth the sinners in their sins, if they will but feed them with the gratification of their lusts; to have such prophets, and to be ridden by them, is as sad a judgment as any people can be under, and as bad a preface of ruin approaching as it is to a particular person to be under the influence of a debauched conscience.

II. Oppressing God's poor is another sin they are charged with, as before; (v. 1, 2,) for it is a sin doubly hateful and provoking to God. Observe,

1. How the sin is described; (v. 8, 9,) when they contemned God's prophets and opposed them, they broke out into all other wickedness; what bonds will hold those that have no reverence for God's word? They who formerly rose up against the enemies of the nation, in defence of their country, and therein behaved themselves bravely, now of late rose up as enemies of the nation, and, instead of defending it, destroyed it, and did it more mischief (as usually such vipers in the bowels of a state do) than a foreign enemy could do. They made a prey of men, women, and children. (1.) Of men, that were traitors; all the vagabonds, that were made as men averse from work that were far from any bad designs, but went peaceably about their lawful occupations; those they set upon, as if they had been dangerous, obnoxious people, and pulled off the robe with the garment from them, they stripped them both of the upper and the inner garment, took away their cloak, and would have their coat also; thus being provoked by the use they were made of their goods in the land, who, being harmless, were fearless, and so the more easily made a prey of. (2.) Of women, whose sex should have been their protection; (v. 9.) The women of my people have ye cast out from their pleasant houses; they devour widows' houses, (Mth. xxiii. 14.) and so turn them out of the possession of them, because they were pleasant houses, and they were not looking for their defence, and would not deal thus barbarously with women; but that which especially aggrieved it was, that they were the women of God's people, whom they knew to be under his protection. (3.) Of children, whose age entitles them to a tender usage; From their children have you taken away my glory for ever. It was the glory of the Israelites' children, that they were free, but they enslaved them; that they were born in God's house, and had a right to the privileges of it, but they sold them to strangers, sent them into idolatrous countries, where they were deprived for ever of that glory, at least, the oppressors designed their captivity should be perpetual. Note, The righteous God will certainly reckon for injuries done to the widows and fatherless, who, being helpless, had neither contentment nor continuance in it, because it is polluted by your wickedness. Sin is defiling to a land, and sinners cannot expect to rest in a land which they have polluted, but it will spue them out, as this land spued out the Canaanites of old, when they had polluted it with their abominations, Lev. xviii. 27, 28.

"Nay, you shall not only be obliged to depart out of this land, but it shall destroy you even with a sore destruction; you shall either be turned out of it, or (which is all one) you shall be ruined in it." We may apply this to our state in this present world; it is polluted, there is a great deal of corruption in the world, through lust, and therefore we should arise, and depart out of it, keep at a distance from the corruption that is in it, and keep ourselves unspotted from it; it is not our rest, it was never intended to be so; it was designed for our passage, but not for our portion, our inn, but not our home; here we have no continuing city; let us therefore arise and depart, let us sit loose to it, and live above it, and think of leaving it, and seek a continuing city above.

12. I will surely assemble, O Jacob, all of thee; I will surely gather the remnant of Israel; I will put them together as the sheep of Bozrah, as the flock in the midst of their fold: they shall make great noise by reason of the multitude of men. 13. The breaker is come up before them; they have broken up, and have passed through the gate, and are gone out by it: and their King shall pass before them, and the LORD on the head of them.

After the threatenings of wrath, the chapter here concludes, as is usual in the prophets, with promises of mercy, which were in part fulfilled when the Jews returned out of Babylon, and had their full accomplishment in the kingdom of the Messiah. Their grievances shall be all redressed.

1. Whereas they were dispersed, they shall be brought together and assembled; every one shall receive the tokens of God's favour to them, and shall have communion with each other, and comfort in each other; (v. 12,) I will surely assemble, O Jacob, all of thee, all that belong to thee, all that are named of the house of Jacob, (v. 7,) that are now expelled your country, v. 10. I will bring you together again, and not one of you shall be lost, nor one of you shall want, neither shall one man fail of another, neither shall the remnant of Israel, that remnant that is designed and reserved for salvation, they shall be brought to incorporate in one body; I will put them together as the sheep of Bozrah. Sheep are inoffensive and sociable creatures; they shall be as the flock in the midst of their fold, their own fold, where they are safe under the shepherd's eye and care; and they shall make great noise, as numerous flocks and herds do, in their bleeding and lowing, by reason of the multitude of men, (for the sheep are men, as the prophet explains this comparison, Ezek. xxxiv. 31.) not by reason of their stries and contentions, but by reason of their great numbers. This was accomplished, when Christ by his gospel gathered together in one all the children of God that were scattered abroad, and united both Jews and Gentiles in one fold, and under one Shepherd; when all the complaint was, that the place was too strait for them—that was the noise, by reason of their multitude; (Isa. xlix. 19, 20,) when there were some added to the church from all parts of the world, and all men were drawn to Christ by the attractive power of his cross; which shall be done yet more and more, and perfectly done, when he shall send forth his angels to gather in his elect from the four winds.

2. Whereas God had seemed to desert them, and cast them off, now he will own them, and head them, and help them through all the difficulties that are in the way of their return and deliverance;
(v. 12.) The breaker is come up before them, to break down all opposition, and clear the road for them; and under his guidance they have broken up, and have passed through the gate, the door of escape out of their captivity, and are gone out by it with courage and resolution, having Omnipotence for their Vanguard. Their King shall pass before them, to lead them the way, even Jehovah, he is their King, on the head of them, as he was on the head of the armies of Israel, when they followed the pillar of cloud and fire through the wilderness, and when he appeared to Joshua, as Captain of the Lord's host. Christ is the church's King; he is Jehovah; he heads them; passes before them; brings them out of the land of their captivity; brings them into the land of their inheritance, through the land of the Philistines, which broke in upon the powers of darkness, and broke through them; that rent the vail, and opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers. The learned Bishop Pearson applies it to the resurrection of Christ, by which he obtained the power and became the Pattern of our resurrection. The Breaker is gone up before us out of the grave, and has carried away its gates, as Samson did Gaza's, bar and all, and by that breach we go out. The learned Dr. Pocock mentions it as the sense which some of the ancient Jews give of it, that the breaker is Elias, and their King the Messiah, the Son of David; and he thinks we may apply it to Christ and his forerunner John the Baptist. John was the breaker, he broke the ice, prepared the way of the Lord by the baptism of repentance, in the which the gospel began, from his time the kingdom of heaven suffered violence; and so the Christian church is introduced, with Messiah the Prince before it, on the head of it, going forth conquering and to conquer.

CHAP. III.

What the apostle says of another of the prophets, is true of this, who was also his contemporary. Esaias is very bold, Rom. x. 20. So, in this chapter, Micah is very bold, in reproving and threatening the great men that were the ringleaders in sin; and he gives the reason, (v. 5.) why he was so bold, because he had commission and instruction from God to say what he said, and was carried out in it by a higher spirit and power than his own. Magnificacy and ministry are two great ordinances of God, for good or for evil; but the spirit and power are the intentions of them perverted; and upon those that abused them, and so abused the church with them, the prophet is very severe, and justly so. 1. He gives them the badge of hypocrisy, and the bill of health, threatening princes, (v. 1.-4.) and false and flattering prophets, v. 5.-7. 2. He gives them their lesson jointly, putting them together, as acting in conjunction for the ruin of the kingdom, which they should see the ruins of, v. 9.-12.

1. AND I said, Hear, I pray you, O heads of Jacob, and ye princes of the house of Israel; Is it not for you to know judgment? 2. Who hate the good, and love the evil; who pluck off their skin from off them, and their flesh from off their bones; 3. Who also eat the flesh of my people, and flay their skin from off them; and they break their bones, and chop them in pieces as for the pot, and as flesh within the caldron. 4. Then shall they cry unto the Lord, but he will not hear them; he will even hide his face from them at that time, as they have behaved themselves ill in their doings. 5. Thus saith the Lord concerning the prophets that make my people err, that bite with their teeth, and cry, Peace; and he that putteth not into their mouths, they even prepare war against him: 6. Therefore might shall be unto you, that ye shall not have a vision; and it shall be dark unto you, that ye shall not divine; and the sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark over them. 7. Then shall the seers be ashamed, and the diviners confounded; yea, they shall all cover their lips: for there is no answer of God.

Princes and prophets, when they faithfully discharge the duty of their office, are to be highly honoured above other men; but, when they betray their trust, and act contrary to it, they should hear of their faults as well as others, and shall be made to know that there is a God above them, to whom they are accountable at his bar, the prophet here, in his name, arraigns them.

Let the princes hear their charge and their doom. The heads of Jacob, and the princes of the house of Israel, are called upon to hear what the prophet has to say to them, v. 1. The word of God has reproofs for the greatest of men, which the ministers of that word ought to apply as there is occasion. The prophet here has comfort in the reflection upon it, that whatever the success was, he had not been faithfully discharged his office. And I say, Hear, the Princes. He had the testimony of his conscience for him, that he had not shrunk from his duty, for fear of the face of men. He tells them, 1. What was expected from them; Is it not for you to know judgment? He means, to do judgment, for otherwise the knowledge of it is of no avail. "Is it not your business to administer justice impartially, and not to know faces?" (as the Hebrew phrase is,) "but to know judgment, and the merits of every cause?" Or, it may be taken for granted, that the heads and rulers are well acquainted with the rules of justice, whatever others are; for they have these means of knowledge, and have not those excuses for ignorance, which some others have, that are poor and foolish; (v. 4.) And so, their duties, and the laws of justice is the more provoking to God, for those who sin against knowledge. "Is it not for you to know judgment? Yes, it is; therefore stand still, and hear your own judgment, and judge, if he it not right, whether any thing can be objected against it." 2. How wretchedly they had transgressed the rules of judgment, though they knew what they were. Their principle and disposition are bad, they hate the good, and love the evil; they hate good in others, and hate it should have any influence on themselves; they hate to do good, hate to have any good done, and hate those that are good, and do good; and they love the evil, delight in mischief, and in those that do mischief. This being their principle, their practice was accordingly; they are very cruel and severe toward those that are under their power; and whoever lies at their mercy, they have none. They barbarously devour those whom they should protect, and, as unfaithful shepherds, fleece the flock they should feed; nay, instead of feeding it, they feed upon it, Ezek. xxxiv. 2. It is fit indeed that he who feeds a flock, should eat of the milk of the flock, (1 Cor. ix. 7.) but that will not content them, They eat the flesh of my flocks; it is said that they would be satisfied with the wool, but that will not serve, They play the skin off them, (v. 3.) by imposing heavier taxes upon them than they can hear, and exacting them with rigour; by mullets and fines, and corporal punishments, for pretended crimes, they ruined the estates and families of their subjects, took away from some their lives, from others their livelihoods, and were to their subjects as beasts of prey, rather than shepherds. They break their bones to come to the marrow, and chop the flesh from off the bone. This shows them to be, (1.) Very ravenous and greedy for themselves, indulging themselves in luxury and sensuality. (2.) Very barbarous and cruel to those that were under them, not caring whom they beggared, so they could but enrich themselves; such evil is the love of money the root of. 3. How they might expect that God should deal with them, who had been so cruel to his subjects; the rule is, They shall have judgment without mercy, that have shown no mercy; (v. 4.) They shall cry to the Lord, but he will not hear them, in the day of their distress, as the poor cried to them in the day of their prosperity, and they would not hear them. There will come a time, when the most proud and scornful sinners will cry to the Lord, and sue for that mercy, which they once neither valued nor copied out; but it will then be in vain, God will even hide his face from them at that time, that time when they need his favour, and see themselves undone without it. At another time they would have turned their back upon him; but at that time he will turn his back upon them, as they have behaved themselves ill in their doings. Note, Men cannot expect to do ill, and live, and reign, and prosper, as Asa and Bezech did, that done to them, which they did to others, for he is righteous who takes vengeance; with the froward God will show himself froward, and he often gives up cruel and unmerciful men into the hands of those who are cruel and unmerciful to them, as themselves have formerly been to others. This agrees with Prov. xxi. 13. Whoso stoppeth his ear from the cry of the poor, he also shall cry, and shall not be heard; but the merciful have reason to hope that they shall obtain mercy.

III. Let the prophets hear their charge too, and their doom; they were such as prophesied falsely, and the princes bare rule by their means. Observe,

1. What was their sin. (1.) They made it all their business to flatter and deceive the people: They make my people err, lead them into mistakes, both concerning what they should do, and concerning what God would do with them; it is ill with a people, when their leaders cause them to err, and those drew them out of the way, that should guide them, and go before them, in it. They make them to err by crying peace, by telling them that they do well, and that all shall be well with them; whereas they are in the paths of sin, and within a step of ruin. They cry peace, but they bite with their teeth; which perhaps is meant of their biting their own lips, as we are apt to do, when we would suppress something which we are ready to speak; when they cried peace, their own hearts gave them the lie, and told them, that they should do and say, words, and to contradict themselves, but they bit with their teeth, and kept it in. They were not blind leaders of the blind, for they saw the ditch before them, and yet led their followers into it. (2.) They made it all their aim to glut themselves, and serve their own belly, as the seducers in St. Paul's time; (Rom. xvi. 13.) for their god is their belly, Phil. iii. 19. They bite every man's knees, and flatter, and compliment those that will feed them with good bits, will give them something to eat; but as for those that put not into their mouths, that are not continually cramming them, they look upon them as their enemies, to them they do not cry peace, as they do to them whom they look upon as their benefactors, but they even fire war against them; against them they denounce the judgments of God; they preach either comfort or terror to men, not according as they are to God, but as they are to them; as the crafty priests of the church of Rome, in some places, make their image either to smile or frown upon the offerer, according as his offering is. Justly is it insisted on as a necessary qualification of a minister, (1 Tim. iii. 3. and again, Tit. i. 7.) that he be not greedy of filthy lucre.

2. What is the sentence passed upon them for this sin, v. 6, 7. It is threatened, (1.) That they shall be involved in troubles and miseries with those to whom they had cried peace; Night shall be upon them, a dark, cold night of calamity, such as they, by their flattery, led the people to hope would never come; It shall be dark unto you, darker to you than to others; the sun shall go down over the prophets, shall go down at noon; all comfort shall depart from them, and they shall be deprived of all hope of it. The day shall be dark over them, in which they promised themselves light. Nor shall they only be surrounded with outward troubles, but their minds shall be full of confusion, and they shall be brought to their wits' ends; their heads shall be clouded, and their own thoughts shall trouble them; and that is trouble enough. They kept others in the dark; and now God will bring them into the dark. (2.) That thereby they shall be silenced, and all their pretensions to prophecy for ever shamed. They never had any true vision; and now, the event disproving the predictions of a false one, it shall be made apparent that they never had any, that there never was an answer of God to them, but it was all a sham, and they were cheats and impostors. Their reputation being thus quite sunk, their confidence would of course fail them. And their spirits being ruffled and confused, their invention would fail them too; and by reason of this darkness both within and without, they shall not find any so much as a counterfeit vision to produce, they shall be ashamed and confounded, and cover their lips, as men that are quite baffled, and have nothing to say for themselves. Note, Those who deceive others, are but preparing confusion for their own faces.

3. But truly I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord, and of judgment, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin. 9. Hear this, I pray you, ye heads of the house of Jacob, and princes of the house of Israel, that abhor judgment, and pervert all equity. 10. They build up Zion with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity. 11. The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divide for money: yet will they lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord among us! none evil can come upon us. 12. Therefore shall Zion for your sake be ploughed as a field; and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest.

1. The prophet experiences a divine power going along with him in his work, and he makes a solemn profession and protestation of it, as that which would justify him, and bear him out, in his plain dealing with the princes and rulers. He would not, he durst not, make thus bold with the great men, but that he was carried out to do it by a prophetical impulse and impression. It was not he that said it, but God by him, and he could not but speak the word that God put into his mouth. It comes in likewise by way of opposition to the false prophets, who were full of shame when they lived to see themselves proved liars, and who never had courage to deal faithfully with the people, but flattered them in their sins; they were sensual, not having the Spirit, but truly (v. 7) the word of the Lord, v. 8. Having in himself assurance of the truth of what he said, he said it with assurance. Compare him with those false prophets, and you will say, There is no comparison between them, What is the chaff to the wheat? Jer. xxviii. 28. What is painted fire to real fire? Observe here, 1. What the qualifications were, with which this prophet was endued; his power (v. 11) was "of the Spirit of the Lord," and his judgment (v. 13) was "of and of might: he had an ardent love to God and to the souls of men, a deep concern for his glory and their salvation, and a flaming zeal against sin. He had likewise courage to reprove it, and witness against it, not fearing the wrath either of great men or of great multitudes; whatever difficulties or discouragements he met with, they did not deter him or drive him from his work; none of these things moved him; and all this was guided by judgment and discretion; he was a man of conduct as well as courage; in all his preaching there was light, as well as heat, and a spirit of wisdom as well as of zeal; thus was this man of God thoroughly furnished for every good work. He had to say, and every good work he had to do. Those he preached to, could the Lord that was in him, and make by his power and judgment, for they found both their understandings opened, and their hearts made to burn within them; with such evidence and demonstration, and with such power, did the word come from him. 2. Whence he had these qualifications; not from and of himself, but he was full of power by the Spirit of the Lord. Knowing that it was indeed the Spirit of the Lord that was in him, and made by him, that it was a divine revelation that he delivered, he spake it boldly, and as one having authority, set his face as a flint, knowing he should be justly and borne out in what he said, Isa. I. 7. Note, Those who act honestly, may act boldly; and those who are sure that they have a commission from God, need not be afraid of opposition from men. Nay, he knew that the Lord that was in him, and made by him, had given him a ground of his boldness; that the Spirit of sanctification endued him with the boldness and wisdom which were requisite for him. It was not in any strength of his own that he was strong; for who is sufficient for these things? But in the Lord, and in the power of his might; for from him all our sufficiency is. Are we full of power at any time, for that which is good? It is purely by the Spirit of the Lord, for of ourselves we are weak as water; it is the God of Israel that gives strength and power both to his people and to his ministers. 3. What use he made of these qualifications—this judgment and this power; he declared to Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin. If transgression be found in Jacob and Israel, they must be told of it, and it is the business of God's prophets to tell them of it; to cry aloud, and denounce it. (1.) It was the Lord's will; those who spoke by the Spirit must hear the word of God, must be willing to be told of their faults, and must not only give their ministers leave to deal plainly and faithfully with them, but take it kindly, and be thankful; but because few have meekness enough to receive reproof, those have need of a great deal of boldness, who are to give reproofs, and must pray for a Spirit both of wisdom and of might. II. The prophet exerts this power in dealing with the heads of the house of Jacob, both the princes and the prophets, whom he had drawn up a high charge against, in the former part of the chapter, he repeats the summons of their attendance and attendance, (v. 9.) the same that he had, v. 1 direct himself to the princes of the house of Israel, yet he means those of Judah; for it appears (Jer. xxvi. 18, 19; where v. 12. is quoted) that this was spoken in Hezekiah's kingdom; but, the ten tribes being gone into captivity, Judah is all that is now left. And concerning the princes of the house of Jacob, we speak elsewhere as of heads and princes. Ministers must be faithful to great men in reproving them for their sins, but they must not be rude and uncivil to them. Now observe here, 1. The great wickedness that these heads of the house of Jacob were guilty of, princes, priests, and the priests. The word here employed signifies any prophet; the ten tribes abdorred all judgment; they would not be governed by any of its laws, either in their own practice or in passing sentence upon appeals made to them; they perverted all equity, and scorned to be under the direction or correction of justice, when it could not be made pliable to their secular interests. When, under pretence of doing right, they did the most palpable wrongs, then they abhorred equity, and made it serve a purpose contrary to the intention of the Founder of magistracy and foundation of power. It is laid to their charge, (v. 10.) that they build up Zion with blood. They pretend, in justification of their extortion and oppressions, that they build up Zion and Jerusalem, they add new widows and fatherless to the city; they build up Zion with blood and blood, and iniquity, and therefore it cannot prosper; nor will their intentions of good to the city of God justify their contradictions to the law of God. They mistake, who think that a burning, flaming sword, ready to consume the holy city, and the propagating of the faith, will serve to consecrate robberies and tyrannies, murders, massacres and depredations; no, Zion's walls owe those no thanks, that build them up with blood and iniquity. The sin of man works not the righteousness of God. The office of the princes is to judge upon appeals made to them; but they judge for reward, (v. 11.) they give judgment on their side, and give gifts. But the most righteous cause shall not be carried without a fee, and for a fee the most unrighteous cause shall be carried. Miserable is the people's case, when the judge's inquiry upon a cause, is not, What is to be done in it? but What is to be got by it? (2.) The priests' work was to teach the people, and for that the law had provided them a very honourable, comfortable maintenance; but that will not content them, they will reach for hire over and above, and will be hired to teach any thing, as an oracle of God, which they know will please, and gain them an interest. (3.) The prophets, it should seem, had honorary fees given them by way of gratuity, 1 Sam. ix. 7, 8. But these prophets govern themselves in their prophesying by the prospect of temporal advantage, and that was the main thing they had in their eye; They dealt for more, or, for more, our church, and they would either prophesy, or let it alone, according as they found it most for their advantage; and a man might have what oracle he would from them, if he would but pay them for it; the successors of Balaam, who loved the wages of unrighteousness. Note, Though that which is wicked can never be consecrated by a zeal for the church, yet some things may be, and often be, consecrated, by the love of the world. When men do that which in itself is good, but do it for filthy lucre, it loses its excellency, and becomes an abomination both to God and man. 2. Their vain presumption and carnal confidence, notwithstanding; They lean upon the Lord, and because they are, in profession, his people, they think there is neither harm nor danger in these their wicked practices. Faith builds upon the Lord, rests in him, and relies upon him, as the soul's Foundation; presumption only leans upon the Lord as a Prop, makes use of him to serve a turn, while still the world is the foundation that is built upon. They speak with a great deal of confidence, (1.) Of their honour: "Is not the Lord among us? Have we not tokens of his presence with us, his temple, his ark, his lively oracles? They are haughty because of the holy mountain, and its dignities, (Zeph. iii. 11.) as if their church-privileges would palliate the worst of practices; or as if God's presence with them were intended to make the priests and people rich with the sale of their performances. It was true that the Lord was among them by his ordinances, and this puffed them up with pride; but if they imagined that he was among them by his favour and love, they were mistaken; but it is a cheat the children of men often put upon themselves, to think they have God with them, when they have by their sin provoked him to depart from them. (2.) They are confident of their own safety; "No evil can come upon us. Many are rocked asleep in a fatal security by their church-privileges, as if those would protect them in sin, and shelter them from punishment, which are really, and will be, the greatest aggravations both of their sin and of their punishment. If not the strongest, it will not restrain them from doing evil, it can never secure them from suffering evil for so doing; and it is very absurd for sinners to think that their impiety will be their own security.

3. The doom passed upon them for their real wickedness, notwithstanding their imaginary protection; (v. 12.) "For yon shall be ploughed as a field." This is that passage which is quoted as a bold word spoken by Micah, (Jer. xxvi. 18.) which yet Hezekiah and his princes took well, though in another reign it might have gone near to cost him his head; nay, they repented and reformed, and so the execution of this threatening was prevented, and did not come in those days. (1.) It is in a figurative sense, implying that the places that had been highly honoured with the tokens of God's presence, and the performances of his worship; it is Zion that shall be ploughed as a field, the building burnt to the ground, and levelled with it. Some observe that this was literally fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, when the ground was ploughed up, on which the city stood, in token of its utter desolation, and that no city should be built upon that ground without the emperor's leave. Even Jerusalem, the holy city, shall become heaps of ruins, and the mountain of the house on which the temple is built, shall be overgrown with briers and thorns, as the high places of the forest. If sacred places be polluted by sin, they must expect to be wasted and ruined by the judgments of God. (2.) It is the wickedness of those who preside in them, that brings the ruin; "It is for your sake, that Zion shall be ploughed as a field; you pretend to build up Zion, but doing it by blood and iniquity, you pull it down." Note, The sin of priests and princes is often the ruin of states and churches. Delirant reges, plebentur Achivi—The kings are bemaddened, and the people suffer for it.

CHAP. IV.

Comparing this chapter with the close of the foregoing chapter, the comfortable promises there with the terrible threatenings here, make us, with the more reason, beheld that the goodness and severity of God; (Rom. xi. 21.) toward the Jewish church, which fell, severity, when Zion was ploughed as a field; but toward the Christian church, which was built upon the ruins of it, goodness, great goodness; for it is here promised, 1. That it shall be advanced and enlarged by the accession of the nations to it, v. 1, 2. 2. That it shall be protected in tranquillity and peace, v. 3, 4, 5. 3. That it shall be kept close, and constant, and faithful to God, v. 5. 4. That, under Christ's name, the same people shall be gathered, chap. ii. 11. 5. That it shall be adorned, v. 6, 7. V. That it shall have an ample and flourishing dominion, v. 3. VI. That its troubles should be brought to a happy issue at length, v. 9, 10, 11. VII. That its enemies should be disquieted, nay, that they should be destroyed in and by their attempts against it, v. 11, 12.

1. BUT in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it. 2. And many nations shall come and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. 3. And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plough-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. 4. But they shall sit every man under his vine, and under his fig-tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it. 5. For all people will walk every one in the name of his god, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever. 6. In that day, saith the Lord, will I assemble her that halteth, and I will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted; 7. And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation: and the Lord shall reign over them in mount Zion from henceforth, even for ever.

It is a very comfortable but with which this chapter begins, and very reviving to those who lay the interests of God's church near their heart, and are concerned for the welfare of it. When we sometimes see the corruptions of the church, especially of church-rulers, princes, priests, and prophets, seeking their own things, and not the things of God; and when we see after the desolations of the church, Zion, for their sakes, ploughed as a field, we are ready to fear that it shall one day perish between both, that the name of Israel shall be forgot in remembrance; we are ready to give up all for gone, and to conclude the church will have neither root nor branch upon earth: but let not our faith fail in this matter; out of the ashes of the church another phoenix shall arise. In the last words of the foregoing chapter, we left the mountain of the house as yet bare; and we saw the high places of the forest; and is it possible that such a wilderness should ever become a fruitful field again? Yes, the first words of this chapter bring in the mountain of the Lord's house as much dignified, by being frequented, as ever it had been disgraced by being deserted. Though Zion be ploughed as a field, yet
God, as not cast off his people, but by the fall of the Jews salvation is come to the Gentiles, so that it proves to be the riches of the world, Rom. xi. 11, 12. This is the mystery which God by the prophet here shows us, and he says the very same in the three prophecies from small beginnings: which another prophet said by the word of the Lord at the same time, (Isa. ii. 2—4.) that out of the mouth of these two witnesses these promises might be established; and very precious promises they are, relating to the gospel-church, which have been in part accomplished, and will be yet more and more, for he is faithful, and will accomplish.

1. That there shall be a church for God set up in the world, after the defection and destruction of the Jewish church, and this in the last days; that is, as some of the rabbins themselves acknowledge, in the days of the Messiah. The people of God shall be incorporated by a new charter, a new spiritual way of worship shall be enacted, and a new institution of offices to attend it; better privileges shall be granted by this new charter, and better provision made for enlarging and establishing the kingdom of God among men, than had been made by the Old Testament constitution; The mountain of the house of the Lord shall again appear firm ground for God's faithful worshippers to stand, and go, and build upon, in their attendance on him, v. 1. And it shall be a centre of unity to them; a church shall be established, not as one isolated mountain, but with the Lord will be daily adding such as shall be saved.

2. That this church shall be firmly founded and well built; It shall be established in the top of the mountains; Christ himself will build it upon a rock, it shall be an impregnable fort upon an immovable foundation, so that the gates of hell shall neither overthrew the one, nor undermine the other; (Matt. xvi. 18.) its foundations are still in the holy mountains, (Ps. lxxxvii. 1.) the everlasting mountains, which cannot, which shall not, be removed. It shall be established, not, as the temple, upon one mountain, but upon many; for the foundations of the church, as they are sure, so they are large.

3. That it shall be highly advanced, and become eminent and conspicuous; It shall be exalted above the hills, observed with wonder for its growing greatness, until Christ comes to make his advent, and Christ shall shine with greater lustre than ever any of the kingdoms of the earth did. It shall be as a city on a hill, which cannot be hid, Matth. xiv. 14. The glory of this latter house is greater than that of the former, Hag. ii. 9. See 2 Cor. iii. 7, 8, &c.

4. There shall be a great succession of converts to it, and succession of converts in it. People shall flow into it as the waters of a river are continually flowing; there shall be a constant stream of believers flowing in from all parts into the church, as the people of the Jews flowed into the temple, while it was standing, to worship there. Then many tribes came to the mountain of the house, to inquire of God's temple; but in gospel-times many nations shall flow into the church, shall for a while be as a cloud, and shall be as the dew which wind withers, for ministers shall be sent forth to disciple all nations, and they shall not labour in vain; for multitudes being wrought upon to believe the gospel and embrace the Christian religion, they shall exalt and encourage one another, and shall say, "Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of our God, and to the name of the Lord our strength, far to, for it is brought to our doors, and set up in the midst of us." Thus shall people be made willing in the day of his power, (Ps. cx. 3.) and shall do what they can to make others willing, as Andrew invited Peter, and Philip Nathanael, to be acquainted with Christ. They shall call the people to the mountain (Deut. xxxiii. 19.) for there is in Christ enough for all, enough for each. Now observe what it is, (1.) Which these converts expect to find in the house of the God of Jacob; they come thither for instruction; He will teach us of his ways, what is the way in which peace in the heart to walk with him, and in which we may depend upon him to meet us graciously," Note, Where we come to worship God, we come to be taught of him. (2.) Which they engage to do when they are thus taught of God; We will walk in his paths. Note, Those may comfortably expect that God will teach them, who are firmly resolved by his grace to do as they are taught.

5. That, in order to this, a new revelation shall be published to the world, on which the church should be founded, and by which multitudes should be brought into it: For the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. The gospel is here called the word of the Lord, for the Lord gave the word, and great was the company of them that published it, Ps. lxvii. 11. It was of a divine original, a divine authority, it began to be spoken by the Lord Christ himself, Heb. ii. 3. And it is a law, a law of faith, we are under the law to Christ; this was to go forth from Jerusalem, from Zion, the metropolis of the Old Testament dispensation, where the temple and altars and oracles were, and whither the Jews went to worship God in all parts; thence the gospel was to flow, to show the completeness between the Old Testament and the New, that the gospel is not set up in opposition to the law, but is an explication and illustration of it, and a branch growing out of its roots. It was in Jerusalem that Christ preached and wrought miracles, there he died, rose again, and ascended, there the Spirit was poured out, and those that were to preach repentance and remission of sins to nations, were ordained to begin at Jerusalem, so that thence flowed the streams that were to water the desert world.

6. That a convincing power should go along with the gospel of Christ, in all places where it should be preached; (v. 2.) He shall judge among many people. Messiah, the Lawgiver, (v. 3.) is here the Judge, for to him the Father committed all judgment, and wrote the word of his gospel, that was to go forth from Jerusalem, was the golden sceptre by which he shall rule and judge, when he sits as King on the holy hill of Zion, Ps. ii. 6. By it he shall rebuke strong nations afar off; for the Spirit working with the world, shall reprove the world, John xvi. 8. It is promised to the Son of David that he shall judge among the heathen, (Ps. cx. 6.) which he does when in the chariot of his everlasting gospel he goes forth, and goes on, conquering and to conquer.

7. That a disposition to mutual peace and love should be the happy effect of the setting up of the kingdom of the Messiah; They shall beat their swords into plough-shares; angry, passionate men, that have been fierce and furious, shall be wonderfully sweetened, and made mild and meek, (Isa. ii. 2, 3.) They who, before their conversion, did injuries, and would bear none, after their conversion, can bear injuries, but will do none. As far as the gospel prevails, it makes men peaceable, for such is the wisdom from above, it is gentle and easy to be entreated. And if nations were but beavened by it, there would be universal peace. When Christ was upon the earth, and was, and made mild and meek, (Mark xi. 5.) he did marvel at the hardenss of the people; those that were first brought into the gospel-church, were all of one heart and of one soul, Acts iv. 32. And it was observed of the primitive Christians, how well they loved one another; in heaven this will have its accomplishment. It is promised, (1.) That none shall quarrel some; the art of war, instead of being improved, (which some reckon the glory of a kingdom,) shall be forgot and hid aside as useless; they shall not learn war any more as they had done, for they shall have no need to defend themselves, nor any inclination to offend their neighbours; nation shall no longer lift up sword against nation; nor shall the gospel will make menowards, but it will make men peaceable. (2.) That all shall be quiet, both from evil and from the fear of evil; (v. 4.) They shall sit safely, and none shall disturb them; they shall sit securely, and shall not disturb themselves, every man under his vine, and under his fig-tree, enjoying the fruit of them, and needing no other shelter than the leaves of them.

One shall make them afraid; not only the gospel shall make his followers afraid of heaven, but it will follow, that they shall not be disposed to fear; under the dominion of Christ, as that of Solomon, there shall be abundance of peace. Though his followers have trouble in the world, in him they enjoy great tranquility.

If this scene unlikely, yet we may depend upon it, for the mouth of the Lord has spoken it, and no word of his shall fall to the ground; what he has spoken by his word, he will do by his providence and grace. He that is the Lord of hosts, will be the God of peace; and those may well be easy, whom the Lord of hosts, of all hosts, undertakes the protection of.

8. That the churches shall be constant in their duty, and so shall make a good use of their tranquility, and shall not provoke the Lord to deprive them of the worship of his bowels; yet if that church be constant, that church shall be edified, and confirmed, and comforted, and shall be resolved to be as firm to their God, as other nations are to theirs, though they be no gods. Where we find the foregoing promises, Isa. ii. 2, &c. it follows, (v. 5.) O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord, and here, we will walk in the name of the Lord our God. Note, Then peace is a blessing indeed, when it strengtheneth our resolution to cleave to the Lord. Observe, (1.) How constant other nations were to their gods; All people will walk every one in the name of his god, will own their god, and cleave to him, will worship their god, and serve him, will depend upon him, and put confidence in him. Whatever men make a god of they will make use of, and take his name along with them in all their arts and affairs. The heavens are in a storm, cried every man to his god, Jonah i. 5. And no instance could be found of a nation's changing their gods, Jer. ii. 11. If the hosts of heaven were their gods, they loved them, and served them, and walked after them, Jer. vii. 2. (2.) How constant God's people now resolve to be to him; We will walk in the name of the Lord our God, will acknowledge him in all our ways and govern ourselves by a continual regard to him, doing nothing but what we have warrant from him for, and openly professing our relation to him. Observe, Their resolution is teremtoriy; it is not a thing that needs be disputed; We will walk in the name of the Lord our God; it is just and reasonable; He is our God; and it is a resolution for a perpetuity: We will all it for ever, and will never leave him. He will be ours for ever, and therefore so will we be his, and never repeat our choice.

9. That, notwithstanding the dispensations, distress, and infirmities of the church, it shall be formed and established, and made very considerable, v. 6, 7. (1.) The state of the church had been low and weak, and poor and helpless, in the latter days of the Old Testament, partly through the corruptions of the Jewish nation, and partly through the oppressions under which they groaned. They were like a flock of sheep that were maimed, worried, and scattered, Ezek. xxxiv. 16. Jer. 1. 6, 17. The good people among them, and in other places, that were well inclined, were dispersed, were very in firm, and in a manner lost and cast far off. (2.) It is promised that all these grievances shall be redressed, and the disturber healed. Christ will come himself, (Matt. xv. 24.) and send his apostles to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, Matt. x. 6. From thence the gospel shall be taught, and shall prevail; for want of strength, could not go upright. God gathered a remnant, (v. 7.) that remnant according to the election of grace, which is spoken of in Rom. xi. 7. which embraced the gospel of Christ. And from among the Gentiles that were cast far off, (so the Gentiles are described to be, Eph. ii. 13. Acts ii. 39.) he raised a strong nation; greater numbers of the Jews were brought to the knowledge of the gospel, than the whole nation; Gal. iv. 27. And such a strong nation the gospel-church is, that the gates of hell shall never be able to prevail against it. The church of Christ is more numerous than any other nation, and strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might.

10. That the Messiah shall be the King of this kingdom, shall protect and govern it, and order all the affairs of it for the best, and this to the end of time. The Lord Jesus shall reign over them in mount Zion by his word and Spirit in his ordinances, and this from henceforth and for ever, of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end.

3. And thou, O tower of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem. 9. Now why dost thou cry out aloud? is there no king in thee? is thy counsellor perished? for pangs have taken thee as a woman in travail. 10. Be in pain, and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail; for now shalt thou go forth out of the city, and thou shalt dwell in the field, and thou shalt go even to Babylon; there shalt thou be delivered; there the Lord shall redeem thee from the hand of thine enemies. 11. Now also many nations are gathered against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion. 12. But they know not the thoughts of the Lord, neither understand they his counsel: for he shall gather them as the sheaves into the floor. 13. Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion; for I will make thy horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass; and thou shalt beat in pieces many people; and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their substance unto the Lord of the whole earth.

These verses concern Zion and Jerusalem, here called the tower of the flock, or the tower of Eder; we read of such a place, (Gen. xxxix. 21.) near Bethlehem; and some conjecture it is the same place where the shepherds were keeping their flocks when the angels brought them tidings of the birth of Christ, and some think Bethlehem itself is here spoken of, as ch. v. 2. Some think it is a tower at that gate of Jerusalem which is called the sheep-gate, (Neh. iii. 2.) and conjecture that through that gate Christ rode in triumph into Jerusalem. However, it seems to be put for Jerusalem itself, or for Zion the tower of David; all the sheep of Israel flocked thither three times a year; it was the strong... as a place polluted with sin, and be forsaken and abandoned both of God and man; let her holy places be profaned, and all her honours laid in the dust; let our eye look upon Zion, and please itself with the sight of its ruins, as it is said of Edom, (Obad. 12.) Thou shouldst not have looked upon the day of thy brethren; let our eyes see our desire upon Zion, the day we have long wished for. When they hear the solemn sound of the trumpet, they shall rise up against them, and insult over them, nor wonder that they shall come not only to cry aloud: Without are fightings, within are fears.

2. Jerusalem made easy by the promises of God, "Why dost thou cry out aloud? Let thy griefs and fears be silenced, indulge not thyself in them, for though things are bad with thee, they shall end well; thy pangs are great, but they are like those of a woman in travail (v. 9.) that labours to bring forth, (v. 10.) the issue of her travail belatedly at last." Jerusalem's pangs are not as dying agenies, but as travailing threes, which after awhile will be forgotten, for joy that a child is born into the world. Let the literal Jerusalem comfort herself with this, that, whatever straits she may be reduced to, she shall continue until the coming of the Messiah, for there his kingdom must be first set up; and she shall not only not perish but flourish in her enemies' midst, and when at length she is ploughed as a field, and become heaps, (as is threatened, ch. iii. 13.) yet her privileges shall be resigned to the spiritual Jerusalem, and in that the promises made to her shall be fulfilled. Let Jerusalem be easy then, for,

(1.) Her captivity in Babylon shall have an end, a happy end; (v. 10.) There shall thou be delivered, and shalt rest in the Lord and shall redeem thee from the hand of thine enemies there. This was done by Cyrus, who acted therein as God's servant; and that deliverance was typical of our redemption by Jesus Christ, and the release from our spiritual bondage, which is proclaimed in the everlasting gospel, that acceptable year of the Lord, in which Christ himself preached liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that were bound, Luke iv. 16, 18.

(2.) The designs of her enemies against her afterward shall be baffled, they shall turn upon themselves, v. 12, 13. They promise themselves a day of it, but it shall prove God's day. They are gathered against Zion, to destroy it, but it shall prove to their own destruction, which Israel and his God shall have the glory of. [1.] Their coming together against Zion shall be the occasion of their own destruction. They shall be put together, and girded themselves, that they may break Jerusalem in pieces, but it shall prove that they shall be broken in pieces, Isa. viii. 9. They know not the thoughts of the Lord. When they are gathering together, and Providence favours them in it, they little think what God is designing by it, nor do they understand his counsel, they know what they aim at, in coming together, but they know not what God aims at in bringing them together; they aim at Zion's ruin, but God aims at theirs. Note. When men are made use of as instruments of Providence in accomplishing its purposes, it is very common for them to intend one thing, and for God to intend quite the contrary. The king of Assyria is to be a rod in God's hand for the correction of his people, in order for their reformation, and not to be the introduction of destruction upon them, but that those who should have heart think so, Isa. x. 7. And thus it is here; the nations are gathered against Zion, as soldiers into the field, but God gathers them as sheaves into the floor, to be beaten to pieces; and they could not have been so easily, so effectually destroyed, if they had not gathered together against Zion. Note. The designs of enemies for the ruin of the church often prove ruin to themselves; and thereby they prepare themselves for destruction, and put themselves in the way of it; they are snared in the work of their own hands. [2.] Zion shall have the honour of being victorious over them, v. 13. When they are gathered as sheaves into the threshing-floor, then, as the case, when by the oxen, then "Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion; instead of fearing them, and fleeing from them, boldly set upon them, and take the opportunity Providence favours thee with of trampling upon them. Plead not thine own weakness, and that thou art not a match for so many confederated enemies, God will make thy harrow and thy threshing-floor. [3.] The glory of the victory shall redound to God. Zion shall thresh these sheaves in the floor, but the corn threshed out shall be a meat-offering at God's altar; I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord, (I will have it consecrated,) and their substance unto the Lord of the whole earth. The spoils gained by Zion's victory shall be brought into the sanctuary, and devoted to God, either in part, as those of Midian, Numb. xxxi. 28.) or in whole, as those of Jericho, Josh. vi. 17. God is Jehovah, the Fountain of being, he is the Lord of the whole earth, the Fountain of power; and therefore needs not any of our gain or substance, but may challenge and demand it all if he pleases; and with ourselves we must devote all we have to his honour, to be employed as he directs. Thus far all we have must have holiness to the Lord written upon it, all our gain and substance must be consecrated to the Lord of the whole earth, Isa. xxiii. 18. And extraordinary successes call for extraordinary acknowledgments, whether they be of spoils in war or gains in trade. It is God that gives us power to get wealth, which way soever it is laid, we give it to him, as we give him the vessels with which we get. Some make all this to point at the defeat of Sennacherib when he besieged Jerusalem, others to the destruction of Babylonia, others to the success of the Maccabees; but the learned Dr. Pocock and others think it had its full accomplishment in the spiritual victories obtained by the gospel of Christ over the powers of darkness that fought against it. The nations thought to have ruined Christianity in its infancy, but it was victorious over them; those that persisted in their enmity, were broken to pieces, (Matt. xxi. 44.) particularly the Jewish nation; but multitudes by divine grace were gained to the church, and they and their substance were consecrated to the Lord Jesus, the Lord of the whole earth.

CHAP. V.

In this chapter, we have, I. A prediction of the troubles and challenges which shall come to the Messiah and his kingdom, v. 1. A prophecy of the Messiah, and of his kingdom, to support the people of God in the day of these troubles. 1. Of the birth of the Messiah, v. 2. 3. Of his advancement, v. 4. 3. Of the perfection of his person. The glory of his kingdom, and their enjoyments in it. v. 6. 4. Of the great increase of the church, and the blessings that shall come to the world by it, v. 7. 5. Of the destruction of the enemies of the church, both those without, that attack it, and those within, that expose it, v. 8-15.

1. Now gather thyself in troops, O daughter of troops: he hath laid siege against us; they shall smite the Judge of Israel with a rod upon the cheek. 2. But thou, Beth-lehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting. 3. Therefore will he give them up, until the time that she which travaileth hath brought forth: then the remnant of his brethren shall return unto the children of Israel. 4. And he shall stand and feed in the strength of the Lord, in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God; and they shall abide: for now shall he be great unto the ends of the earth. 5. And this man shall be the peace, when the Assyrian shall come into our land; and, when he shall tread in our palaces, then shall we raise against him seven shepherds, and eight principal men. 6. And they shall waste the land of Assyria with the sword, and the land of Nimrod in the entrances thereof: thus shall he deliver us from the Assyrian, when he cometh into our land, and when he treadeth within our borders.

Here, as before, we have,

I. The abasement and distress of Zion, v. 1. The Jewish nation, for many years before the captivity, dwindled, and fell into disgrace; Now gather thyself in troops, O daughter of troops. It is either a summons to Zion's enemies, that had troops at their service, to come, and do their worst against her, God will suffer them to do it; or a challenge to Zion's friends, that had troops too at command, to come, and do their best for her, let them gather in troops, yet it should be to no purpose; for, says the prophet, in the name of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, He has laid siege against us; the king of Assyria has, the king of Babylon has, and we know not which way to defend ourselves; so that the enemies have the gain of the right, and prevail so far as to sit in judgment as the judge of Israel, the king, the chief justice, and the other inferior judges, with a rod upon the cheek, in contempt of them and their dignity; having made them prisoners, they shall use them as shamefully as any of the common captives. Complaint had been made of the judges of Israel, (ch. iii. 11.) that they were corrupt, and took bribes, and this disgrace came justly upon them for abusing their power; yet it was a great calamity to Israel, to have their judges treated thus ignominiously. Some make this the reason why the troops shall lay siege to Jerusalem, that is, the Roman army, because the Jews shall smite the judge of Israel upon the cheek, because of the indignities they shall do to the Messiah, the Judge of Israel, whom they smite on the cheek, saying, prophesy was trodden down; and the former sense seems more probable, and that it is meant of the besieging of Jerusalem, not by the Romans, but the Chaldeans, and was fulfilled in the indignities done to king Zedekiah and the princes of the house of David.

II. The advancement of Zion's King; having showed how low the house of David should be brought, and how vilely the shield of that mighty man should be cast away, as though it had not been anointed with oil; to encourage the faith of God's people, who might be tempted now to think that his covenant with David and his house was abrogated, (after what is said in Ps. lxix. 39. xxiii. 39.) he adds an illustrious prediction of the Messiah and his kingdom, in whom that covenant should be established, and the honours of that house should be revived, advanced, and perpetuated. Now let us see,

1. How the Messiah is here described; it is he that is to be Ruler in Israel, whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting, from the days of eternity, &c. (Deut. xxxii. 8.)

(1.) His existence from eternity, as God; His goings forth, or emanations, as the going forth of the beams from the sun were, or have been, of old, from everlasting; which (says Dr. Pocock) is so signal a description of Christ's eternal generation, or his going forth as the Son of God, begotten of his Father before all worlds, that this prophecy must belong only to him, and could never be verified of any other. It certainly speaks of a going forth that was now past, when the prophet spake, and cannot but be read as we read it, his outgoings have been; and the putting of both these words together, which severally are used to denote eternity, plainly shows that they must here be taken in the strictest sense, the same with Ps. xc. 2. From everlasting to everlasting thou art GOD, and established in the beginning of the earth, and art from everlasting, &c. Luke i. 32, 33.

The Jews object, that our Lord Jesus could not be the Messiah, for he was so far from being Ruler in Israel, that Israel ruled over him, and put him to death, and would not have him to reign over them; but he answered that himself, when he said, My kingdom is not of this world, John xviii. 36. And it is a spiritual Israel that he reigns over, the children of promise, all the followers of believing Abraham and praying Jacob; in the hearts of these he reigns by his Spirit and grace; and in the society of these by his word and ordinances. And was not he Ruler in Israel, whom winds and seas obeyed, and legions of devils were forced to truckle to, and who commanded away diseases from the sick, and called the dead out of their graves? None, except him whose goings forth were from of old, from everlasting, was fit to be Ruler in Israel, to be Head of the church, and Head over all things to the church.

(2.) That in the fulness of time he should be born of a woman; (v. 2.) Therefore will he give them up, he will give up his people Israel to distress and trouble, and will deliver their salvation, which has been so long promised, and is now at the set time, that she who travails has brought forth, or, as it should be read, that she who should bring forth, shall have brought forth; that the blessed virgin, who was to be the mother of the Messiah, shall have brought him forth at Bethlehem, the place appointed. This Dr. Pocock thinks to be the most genuine sense of the words. Though the outgoings of the Messiah were from everlasting, yet the redemption in Jerusalem, the consolation of Israel, must be waited for, (Luke ii. 25, 38.) until the time that she who should bring forth, (so the Virgin Mary is called, as Christ is himself called, He that shall come,) shall bring forth; and in the mean time he will give them up. Divine salvations must be waited for until the time fixed for the bringing of them forth.

(3.) That the remnant of his brethren shall return to the children of Israel. The remnant of the Jewish nation shall return to the spirit of the true, genuine children of Israel, a people in covenant with God; the hearts of the children shall be turned to the fathers, Mal. iv. 6. Some understand it of all believers, Gentiles as well as Jews, they shall all be incorporated into the commonwealth of Israel; and our Lord Jesus is called the Remnant shall be incorporated (Zech. ii. 12.) "he is not ashamed to call them brethren," Heb. ii. 11.

(4.) That he shall be a glorious prince, and his subjects shall be happy under his government; (v. 5.) Thus saith the Lord, but Christ spake, not as a Servant, but as a Son: Verily, verily, I say unto you, This was feeding in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God, all power was given him in heaven and in earth, a power over all flesh, by the work he has done, the rules in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God, a name above every name. Christ's government shall be,

1. Very happy for his subjects, for they shall abide; they shall be safe and easy, and continue so for ever; because he lives, they shall live also. They shall lie down in green pastures to which he shall lead them; shall abide in God's tabernacle for ever, Ps. lxxi. 5. His church shall abide, and live in it, and with it, always, even to the end of the world.

2. It shall be very glorious to himself; Now shall he be great to the ends of the earth. Now that he stands, and feeds his flock, now shall he be great. For Christ reckons it his greatness to do good. Now he shall be great to the ends of the earth, for the uttermost parts of the earth shall be would give honour to the place of his birth, and not derive honour from it; Though thou be little, yet shalt thou be greater than he. Micah vi. 12.

(5.) That he shall secure the peace and welfare of his church and people against the attempts of his and their enemies; (v. 5, 6.) That man, as King and ruler, shall be the Priest when the Assyrian shall come into our land. This refers to the deliverance of Hezekiah and his kingdom from the power of Sennacherib, who invaded them, in the type; but, under the shadow of that, is a promise of the safety of the gospel-church and of all believers from the designs and attempts of the powers of darkness, Satan and his agents, the dragon and his angels, that seek to devour the church of the first-born, and all that belong to it. Observe, [1.] The peril and danger which Christ's subjects are supposed to be in; The Assyrian, a potent enemy, comes into their land, (v. 5, 6.) treads within their borders, may, prevails so far as to tread in their palaces; it was a time of treading down and of perplexity, when Sennacherib made a descent upon Judah, took all the defended cities, and laid siege to Jerusalem, Isa. xxxvi. 1.—xxxvii. 3. This represented the gates of hell fighting against the kingdom of Christ, compassing the camp of the saints and of the holy city, and threatening to bear down all before them. When the terrors of the law set themselves in array against a convinced soul, when the temptations and allurements of Satan are upon him, and the troubles of the world threaten to rob them of all their comforts, then the Assyrian comes into their land, and treads in their palaces; without are fightings, within are fears. [2.] The protection and defence which his subjects are then sure to be under; First, Christ will himself be their Peace. When the Assyrian comes with such a force into a land, I can there be any other peace than a tame submission and an unresisted desolation? Yes, even then the church's King will be the Conservator of the church's peace, will be for a hiding-place, Isa. xxxiii. 1, 2. Christ is our Peace as a Priest, making atonement for sin, and reconciling us to God; and he is our Peace as a King, conquering our enemies, and commanding down disputing fears and passions; he creates the fruit of the lips, peace. Even when the Assyrian comes into the land, when we are in the greatest distress and danger, and have received a sentence of death within ourselves, yet this man may be the Peace. In me, says Christ, you shall have peace, when in the world you have tribulation; at such a time our souls may dwell at ease in him. Secondly, He will find out proper means to enable him for his peace, for his deliverance, and the defeat of their enemies; Then, shall we raise against him seven shepherds and eight principal men, a competent number of persons, proper to oppose the enemy, and make head against him, and protect the church of God in peace; men that shall have the care and tenderness of shepherds, and the courage and authority of principal men, or spiritual leaders among them. God's church, deliverance, and the peace. Thirdly, The opposition given to the church shall be got over, and the opposers brought down. This is represented by the laying of Assyria and Chaldea waste, which two nations were the most formidable enemies to the Israel of God, of any other; and the destruction of them signifies the making of Christ's enemies his footstool; They shall waste the land of Assyria with the sword, and the land of Nimrod in the entrance thereof, they shall make inroads upon the land, and put to the sword all that they find in arms. Note, These that threaten ruin to the church of God, may turn to themselves. And their destruction is the church's salvation; Thus shall he deliver us from the Assyrian. When Satan fell as lightning from heaven before the preaching of the gospel, and Christ's enemies, that would not have him to reign over them, were slain before him, then this was fulfilled.

7. And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people as a dew from the Lord, as the showers upon the grass, that arrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men. 8. And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people, as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep; who, if he goeth through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver. 9. Thy hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off. 10. And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord, that I will cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee, and I will destroy thy chariots; 11. And I will cut off the cities of thy land, and throw down all thy strong holds; 12. And I will cut off witchcrafts out of thy hand; and thou shalt have no more soothsayers; 13. Thy graven images also will I cut off, and thy standing images, out of the midst of thee; and thou shalt have no more work the work of thy hands. 14. And I will pluck up thy groves out of the midst of thee: so will I destroy thy cities. 15. And I will execute vengeance in anger and fury upon the heathen, such as they have not heard.

Glorious things are here spoken of the remnant of Jacob; that remnant which was raised of her that hated, ch. iv. 7. And it seems to be that remnant which the Lord or God shall call, (Isa. lii. 32.) on whom he will pour out the spirit of grace and supplications; and the remnant that shall be saved, Rom. ix. 27. Note, God's people are but a remnant, a small number, in comparison with the many that are left to perish; a little flock; but they are the remnant of Jacob, a people in covenant with God, and in his favour.

Now concerning this remnant it is here promised, 1. That they shall be as dew in the midst of the nations; God's church is dispersed all the world over; it is in the midst of many people, as gold in the ore, wheat in the heap. Israel, according to the flesh, dwelt alone, and was not numbered among the nations; but the spiritual Israel lies scattered in the midst of many people, as salt of the earth, or as seed sown in the ground, here a grain and there a grain, Hos. ii. 23. Now this remnant shall be as dew from the Lord. (1.) They shall be of a heavenly extraction, as dew from the Lord, who is the Father of the rain, and has begotten the drops of the dew, Job xxxviii. 28. They are born from above, and are not of the earth, favouring the things of the earth. (2.) They shall be numerous as the drops of dew in a summer's morning; (Ps. cx. 3.) Thou hast the dew of thy youth. (3.) They shall be pure and clear, not muddy and corrupt but These and competition confidence him, reprover, able good. Their speech shall distil as the dew, (Deut. xxxii. 2.) and all about them shall wait for them as for the rain, Job xxxix. 23. The people among whom they live shall be as the grass, which flourishes only by the blessing of God, and not by the art and care of man: they shall be beneficial to those about them, by drawing down God's blessings on them, as Jacob on Laban's house, and by cooling and mitigating God's wrath, which otherwise would burn them up, as the dew preserves the grass from being scorched by the sun; so Dr. Pocock. They shall be mild and gentle in their behaviour, like their Master, who comes down like rain upon the new-born grass, Ps. lxxiii. 6.

Their joy shall be as a lion among the haunts of the forest, that treads down, and tears in pieces, v. 8. As they shall be silent, and gentle, and communicative of all good to those that receive the truth in the love of it, so they shall be bold as a lion in witnessing against the corruptions of the times and places they live in, and strong as a lion in the strength of God, to resist and overcome their spiritual enemies. The meekness of their warfare are mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strong holds, 2 Cor. x. 4, 5. They shall have courage, which all their adversaries shall not be able to resist; (Luke xxi. 15.) as when the lion tears, none can deliver. When infidelity is silenced, and all iniquity made to stop her mouth, when sinners are convinced and converted by the power of the gospel, in the doctrine of its salvation, and the convincing nature of the effects, then the reign of the world is like a lion. This is explained, v. 9. Thine hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries; the church shall have the upper hand at last of all that oppose her. Her enemies shall be cut off, they shall cease to be enemies, their enmity shall be cut off. Christ's arrows of conviction shall be sharp in their hearts, so that they shall fall under him, they shall yield themselves subjects to him, (Ps. xlix. 5.) and be happily conquered and subdued, Ps. cx. 2.

3. That they shall be brought off from all carnal confidences, which they had relied on; that by the providence of God they should enjoy such a security, that they should not need them; and by the grace of God they should be brought to see the folly of them, and come off from them. It was the sin of Israel, that they furnished themselves extravagantly with horses and chariots, and were soothsayers and idolaters; see Isa. ii. 6.—8. But here it is promised that they shall not regard them any more. The tranquility of the kingdom of Christ is intended in that promise, which explains this, Zech. ix. 10. I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the horse from Jerusalem. Note, It is a great mercy to be deprived of those things which we have reposed our confidence in, in competition with God; which we have made our arm, and after which we have gone a whoring from God. Let us observe the particulars. (1.) They had trusted in chariots and horses, and multiplied them; (Ps. xx. 7.) but now God will cut off their horses, and destroy their chariots, (v. 10.) as David houghed the chariot-horse 2 Sam. viii. 4. They shall not have them, lest they should be tempted to trust in them. (2.) They depended upon their strong holds, and fortified cities, for their security; but God will take care that they be demolished; (v. 11.) I will cut off the cities of thy hand, I will throw down thy strong holds. They shall have them for habitations, but not for garrisons, for God will be their only Place of defence, their high Tower, and their Deliverer. (3.) Many of them depended much upon the conduct and advice of their conjurers, diviners, and fortune-tellers; find those God will not only as sweat rags, and insufficient to relieve them, but as wicked things, and sufficient to ruin them; (v. 12.) "I will cut off witchcrafts out of thine hand, that thou shalt no more take hold of them, and stay thyself upon them, and thou shalt have no more soothsayers, for thou shalt be convinced that all their pretensions are a cheat." The justice of the nation shall cut them off according to the law, Lev. xx. 27. The preaching of the gospel brought men off from using curious arts, Acts xix. 19. (4.) Many of them had said to the work of their hands, Ye are our gods; but now idolatry shall be abolished and abandoned; (v. 13.) "Thy graven images will I cut off, and thy standing images, both those that were moveable, and those that were fixed; they shall be destroyed by the power of the hand of God, and destroyed by the mouth of God. That thou shalt no more worship the work of thy hands, but be ashamed that ever thou hast been so deceived. Among other monuments of idolatry, I will pluck up thy graven ones out of the midst of thee," v. 14. These were planted and preserved in honour of their idols, and used in the worship of them; these they were ordered to burn, (Deut. xii. 3.) and if they do not, God will, so that they shall have them to trust to. And so will I destroy thy cities, meaning the cities that were dedicated to the idols, to some dung-hill-deity or other, which they confided in for their protection.

4. That those who stand it out against the gospel of Christ, and continue in league with their idolatries and witchcrafts, shall fall under the wrath of God, and cut off as that branch of Israel which is prepared in anger and fury upon the heathen, (upon heathenism,) such as they have not heard; idolatries shall be done away, and idolaters put to shame. I will execute vengeance upon the heathen which have not heard, (so some read it,) or which would not hear and receive the doctrine of Christ. God will give his Son either the hearts or the necks of his enemies, and make them either his friends or his footstool.

CHAP. VI.

After the precious promises, in the two foregoing chapters, relating to the Messiah's kingdom, the prophet is here directed to Israel by the word of the Lord, to consider his sins of idolatry and idolatry, for their conviction and humiliation, as necessary to make way for the comfort of gospel-grace. Christ's forerunner was a reprover, and preached repentance, and so prepared his way. Here, 1. God enters an action against his people for their base ingratitude, and the bad returns they had made him for his favours, v. 1. 5. If. He shows them the wrong course they took, when they went a-whoring from him, and the way they were made, in answer to his charge, and what course they should have taken, v. 6. 8. He calls upon them to hear the voice of his judgments, and sets the sins in order before them, for which he only brought the controversy with them, (v. 2.) their injustice, (v. 10. 15.) and their idolatry, (v. 16.) for both which ruin was coming upon them.

1. H E A R ye now that the Lord saith: Arise, contend thou before the mountains, and let the hills hear thy voice. 2. Hear ye, O mountains, the Lord's controversy, and ye strong foundations of the earth: for the Lord hath a controversy with his people, and he will plead with Israel. 3. O my people, what have I done unto thee? and wherein have I wearied thee? testify against me. 4. For I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed thee out of the house of servants; and I sent before thee Moses, Aaron, and Miriam. 5. O my people, remember now what Balak the king of Moab consulted, and what Balaam the son of Beor answered him from Shittim unto Gilgal; that ye may know the righteousness of the Lord.

Here, I. The prefaces to the message are very solemn, and such as may engage our most serious attention. 1. The people are commanded to give audience; Hear ye now what the Lord saith. What the prophet speaks, he speaks from God, and in his name; they are therefore bound to hear it, not as the word of a sinful, dying man, but of the holy, living God. Hear now what he saith, for, first or last, he will be heard. 2. The prophet is commanded to speak in earnest, and to put an emphasis upon what he said; Arise, contend thou before the mountains, or with the mountains, and let the hills hear thy voice, if it were possible; contend with the mountains and hills of Judea, with the inhabitants of these mountains and hills; and, some think, reference is had to these mountains and hills on which they worshipped idols, and which were the object of their idolatrous practices. But it is rather to be taken more generally, as appears by his call, not only to the mountains, but to the strong foundations of the earth, pursuant to the instructions given him. This is designed, (1.) To excite the earnestness of the prophet; he must speak as vehemently as if he designed to make even the hills and mountains hear him, must cry aloud, and not in a low voice alone; he must proclaim publicly before the mountains, as one that was neither ashamed nor afraid to own his message; he must speak as one concerned, as one that desired to speak to the heart, and therefore appeared to speak from the heart. (2.) To expose the stupidity of the people; "Let the hills hear thy voice, for this senseless, careless people will not hear it, will not heed it. Let the rocks, the foundations of the earth, that have no ears, hear, since Israel, that has ears, will not hear." It is an appeal to the mountains and hills; let them hear witness that Israel has fair warning given them, and good counsel, if they would but take it. Thus Isaiah begins with, Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth. Let them judge between God and his vineyard.

And the message itself was very striking; he is to let all the world know that God has a quarrel with his people, good ground for an action against them. Their offences are public, and therefore so are the articles of imprecation exhibited against them. Take notice, the Lord has a controversy with his people, and he will plead with Israel, will plead in his prophets, pleaded by his providences, to make good his charge. Note, 1. Sin begets a controversy between God and man. The righteous God has an action against every sinner, an action of debt, an action of trespass, an action of slander. 2. If Israel, God's own professing people, provoke him in sin, he will let them know that he has a controversy with them; he sees sin in them, and is displeased with it, may, their sins are more displeasing to him than the sins of others, as they are a greater grief to his Spirit, and dishonour to his name. 3. God will plead with those whom he has a controversy with, will plead with his people Israel, that they may be convinced, and that he may be justified. In the close of the foregoing chapter he pleaded with the heathen in anger and fury, to bring them to ruin; but he now pleads with his own, to have a lecture of tenderness, to bring them to repentance. Come now and let us reason together. God reasons with us, to teach us to reason with ourselves. See the equity of God's cause; it will bear to be pleaded, and sinners themselves will be forced to confess judgment, and to own that God's ways are just, but they will pretend as the ten tribes did, when they revolted from Rechoboam, that his yoke is too heavy for them; but can you pretend any such thing? What have I done to you, that is unjust or unkind? Wherein have I wearied you, with the impositions of service, or the exactions of tribute? Have I made you to serve with an offering? Isa. xiii. 23. "What iniquity have your fathers found in me?" Jer. xxxiv. 22. "He never deceived us, or caused us to point our expectations from him; never did us wrong, or put disgrace upon us; why then do we wrong and dishonour him, and frustrate his expectations from us?" Here is a challenge to all that ever were in God's service, to testify against him, if they have found him, in any thing, a hard Master, and his commands unreasonable.

(2.) Since God has not shown any thing that he has done against them, he will show them a great deal that he had done for them, which should have engaged them for ever to his service, v. 4, 5. They are directed, and we in them, to look a great way back in their reviews of divine favour; let them remember their former days, their first days, when they were formed into a people, and the great things God did for them.

[1.] When he brought them out of Egypt, the land of their bondage, v. 4. They were content with their slavery, and almost in love with their chains, for the sake of the garlic and onions they had plenty of; but God brought them up, inspired them with an ambition of liberty, and animated them with a resolution and a bold effort to shake off their fetters. The Egyptians held them fast, and would not let the people go; but God redeemed them, not by price, but by force; out of the house of servants, or, rather, the house of bondage, for it is the same word that is used in the preface of the ten commandments; which insinuates that the considerations which are arguments for duty, if they be not improved by us, will be improved against us as aggravations of sin. When he brought them out of Egypt into a vast bowling wilderness, as he left not himself without witness, so he left not them without guides, for he sent before them Moses, Aaron, and Miriam, three prophets, says the Chaldee Paraphrase; Moses the great prophet of the Old Testament, Aaron his prophet, (Exod. vii. 1.) and Miriam a prophetess, Exod. xv. 20. Note, When we are calling to mind God's former mercies to us, we must not forget the mercy of good teachers and governors when we were young, let those be made mention of, to the glory of God who went before us, saying, This is the way, walk in it; it was God that sent them before us, to prepare the way of the Lord, and to prepare a people for him.

2. When he brought them into Canaan. God no less glorified himself, and honoured them, in what he did for them when he brought them into the land of their rest, than in what he did for them when he brought them out of the land of Egypt. Note, The providence and method of God's dealing with his people, when they were brought into the land of their rest, was far more remarkable and glorious than when they were brought out of the land of their slavery. When Moses and Miriam were dead, yet they found God the same. Let them remember now what God did for them. First, In baffling and defeating the designs of Balak and Balaam against them, which he did by the power he has over the hearts and tongues of men, v. 5. Let them remember what Balak the king of Moab consulted, what mischief he devised, and, as he supposed, his design was to impair the entire power and authority of the God of Israel, which he so much venerated in the plains of Moab, that which he consulted was, to curse Israel, to divide between them and their God, and to disengage him from the protection of them. Among the heathen, when they made war upon any people, they endeavoured by magic charms or otherwise to get from them their tutelar gods, as to rob Troy of its Palladium. Macrobius has a chapter, de ritu evocaendi Deorum, concerning the solemnity of calling out the Gods. Balak would try this against Israel; but remember what Balaam the son of Beor answered him, how contrary to his own intention and inclination; instead of cursing Israel, he blessed them, to the extreme confusion and vexation of Balak. Let them remember the miracle of the heathen against them, and for that reason never learn to envy the heathen, or associate with them; let them remember the kindness of God to them, how he turned the curse into a blessing; (because the Lord thy God loved thee, as it is, Deut. xxiii. 5.) and for that reason never forsake him. Note, The disappointing of the devices of the church's enemies ought always to be remembered to the glory of the church's Protector, who can make the answer of the tongue directly to contradict the preparation and consumation of the heart, Prov. xvi. 1. Secondly, In bringing them from Shittim, their last lodgement, out of Canaan, unto Gilgal, their first lodgement in Canaan. There it was, between Shittim and Gilgal, that, upon the death of Moses, Joshua, a type of Christ, was raised up to put Israel in possession of the land of promise, and to fight their battles, and guide them through the divided waters, and renew the covenant of circumcision; these mercies of God to their fathers they must now remember, that they may know the righteousness of the Lord, his righteousness, so the word is; his justice in destroying the Canaanites, his goodness in giving rest to his people Israel, and his faithfulness to his promise made unto the fathers. The remembrance of what God had done to them might convince them of all this, and engage them for ever to his service. Or, they may refer to the controversy now pleaded between God and Israel; let them remember God's many favours to them and their fathers, and compare with them their unworthy, ungrateful conduct toward him, that they may know the righteousness of the Lord in contemning them, and may appear that in this controversy he has right on his side; his ways are equal, for he will be justified when he speaks, and clear when he judges.

6. Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and bow myself before the high God? shall I come before him with burnt-offerings, with calves of a year old? Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? shall I give my first-born for my transgressions, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? 8. He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?

Here is the proposal for accommodation between God and Israel, the parties that were at variance in the beginning of the chapter. Upon the trial, judgment is given against Israel; they are convicted of injustice and ingratitude toward God, the crimes with which they stood charged; it is too plain to be denied, too bad to be excused, and therefore, 1. They apply themselves to a proper person, with this inquiry, to the prophet, the Lord's messenger, by whose ministry they had been convinced; who so fit to show them their way as he that had made them sensible of their having missed it? And it is observable that each one speaks for himself; Wherewith shall I come before the Lord?

Being made sensible of the justice of God's controversy with them, and dreading the consequences of it, they were inquisitive what they might do to be reconciled to God, and to make him their Friend. They apply themselves to a proper person, with this inquiry, to the prophet, the Lord's messenger, by whose ministry they had been convinced; who so fit to show them their way as he that had made them sensible of their having missed it? And it is observable that each one speaks for himself; Wherewith shall I come before the Lord?

1. We know what we must come before God; he is the God with whom we have to do; we must come as subjects, to pay our homage to him, as beggars, to ask alms from him, may, we must come before him as criminals, to receive our doom from him, must come before him as our Judge. 2. When we come before him, we must bow before him, it is our duty to be reverent and reverent in our approaches to him and when we come before him, there is no remedy but we must submit; it is to no purpose to contend with him. 3. When we come, and bow before him, it is our great concern to find favour with him, and to be accepted of him; their inquiry is, What will the Lord be pleased with? Note, All that rightly understand themselves and their own interest, cannot but be solicitous what they must do to please God, to avoid his displeasure, and to obtain his good will. 4. In order to God's being pleased with us, our care must be, that the sin by which we have displeased him, may be taken away, and an atonement made for it. The inquiry here is, What shall I give for my transgression, for the sin of my soul? Note, The transgression we are guilty of, it is sin; for we are made one with it; without the soul's act it is not sin; and the soul suffers by it, it is the disorder, disease, and defilement of the soul, and threatens to be the death of it; What shall I give for my transgressions? What will be accepted as a satisfaction to his justice, reparation of his honour? And what will avail to shelter me from his wrath? 5. We must therefore ask, When shall I come before him? We must not appear before the Lord empty. What shall we bring with us? In what manner must we come? In whose name must we come? We have not that in ourselves which will recommend us to him, but must have it from another. What righteousness then shall we appear before him in?
II. They make proposals, such as they are, in order to it; their inquiry was very good and right, and what we are all concerned to make; but their proposals betray their ignorance, though they show their zeal; let us examine them:

1. They bid high. They offer, (1.) That which is very rich and costly, thousands of rams. God required one ram for a sin-offering, they profess flocks of them, their whole stock, will be content to make themselves beggars, so that they may be at peace with God. They will bring the best they have, the rams, and the most of them, till it come to thousands. (2.) That which is very dear to them, and which they would most loath to part with. They could be content to part with their first-born for their transgressions, if that would be accepted and forgiven; but they are not content to part with their sin of their soul. To them that were become vain in their imaginations this seemed a probable expedient of making satisfaction for sin, because our children are pieces of ourselves; and therefore the heathen sacrificed their children to appease their offended deities. Note, Those that are thoroughly convinced of sin, of the malignity of it, and of their need of a mediator, will part with all, and give all the world, if they had it, for peace and pardon.

2. Yet they do bid right. It is true, some of these things were instituted by the ceremonial law, as the bringing of burnt-offerings to God's altar, and calves of a year old, rams for sin-offerings, and oil for the meat-offerings; but these alone would not make atonement for sin. (1.) Some of them are unpracticable things, as rivers of oil, which nature has not provided, to feed men's luxury, but rivers of water, to supply men's necessity. All the proposals of peace but those that are according to the gospel, are absurd. One stream of the blood of Christ is worth ten thousand rivers of oil. (2.) Some of them are wicked things, as to give our first-born and our best; and the first-born, as a pledge of the firstborn, would but add to the transgression, and the sin of the soul. He that hates robbery for burnt-offerings, much more hates murder, such murder; what right have we to our first-born, and the fruit of our body? Do they not belong to God? Are they not his already, and born to him? Are they not sinners by nature, and their lives forfeited upon their own account? How then can they be a ransom for ours? (3.) They are all external things, parts of the bodily exercise which professeth little, and which could not make the comers thereunto perfect. (4.) They are all insignificant, and insufficient to attain the end proposed; they could not answer the demands of divine justice, nor satisfy the wrong done to God in his honour by their transgressions. They serve in lieu of the satisfaction of the heart, but a sinner's faith is the foundation of the life. Men will part with any thing rather than their sins, but they part with nothing to God's acceptance, unless they part with them.

III. God tells them plainly what he demands, and insists upon, from those that would be accepted of him, v. 8. Let their money perish with them, that think the pardon of sin and the favour of God may be so purchased; no, God has showed it, O man, what is good. Here we are told,

1. That God has made a discovery of his mind and will to us, for the rectifying of our mistakes, and the directing of our practice. (1.) It is God himself that has showed us what we must do. We need not trouble ourselves to make proposals, the terms are already settled and laid down. He whom we have offended, and to whom we are accountable, has told us upon what conditions he will be reconciled to us. (2.) It is to man that he has showed it; not only to thee, O Israel, but to thee, O man, Gentiles as well as Jews. To men, who are rational creatures, and capable of receiving the discovery, and not to brutes; to men, for whom a remedy is provided, not to devils, whose case is desperate. What is spoken to all men every where in general, must by faith be applied to ourselves in particular, as if it were spoken to thee, O man, by name, and to no other. (3.) It is a discovery of that which is good, and which the Lord requires of us. He has showed us our end, which we should aim at, in showing us, what our happiness does consist; he has showed us our way in which we must walk toward that end, in showing us what he requires of us. There is something which God requires we should do for him, and devote to him; and it is good; it is good in itself.

There is an innate goodness in moral duties, antecedent to the command; they are not, as ceremonial duties, commanded by God to be done, and therefore there is not so much a respect due to the duty itself, as to the command. But there is a great respect due to the command, because they are good, consonant to the eternal rule and reason of good and evil, which are unalterable. It has likewise a direct tendency to our good; our conformity to it is not only the condition of our future happiness, but it is a great expedient of our present happiness; in keeping God's command, but there is a great reward, as well as after keeping them, (4.) It is showed us. God has not only made it known, but made it plain; he has discovered it to us with such convincing evidence as amounts to a demonstration. Lo, this, we have searched it, so it is.

2. What that discovery is. The good which God requires of us is, the making satisfaction for sin and acceptance with God, by the duty, which is the condition of our interest in the pardon purchased. (1.) We must do justly, must render to all their due, according as our relation and obligation to them are; we must do wrong to none, but do right to all, in their bodies, goods, and name. (2.) We must love mercy, not only be just to all we deal with, but kind to all that need our kindness, and that can have benefit by it, and that can be benefited by it; Nor must we only show mercy, but we must love mercy, we must delight in it, as our God does, must be glad of an opportunity to do good, and do it cheerfully. Justice is put before mercy, for we must not give that in alms, which is wrongfully got, or with which our debts should be paid. God hates robbery for a burnt-offering, (3.) We must walk humbly with our God; this includes all the duties of the first table. We must take the Lord for our God in covenant, must attend on him, and adhere to him, as ours, and must make it our constant care and business to please him. Enoch's walking with God is interpreted, (Heb. xi. 5.) his pleasing God; we must, in the whole course of our conversation, conform ourselves to the will of God, keep up our communion with God, and study to all the duties of the first table. We must walk humbly with our God; this includes all the duties of the first table. We must take the Lord for our God in covenant, must attend on him, and adhere to him, as ours, and must make it our constant care and business to please him. Enoch's walking with God is interpreted, (Heb. xi. 5.) his pleasing God; we must, in the whole course of our conversation, conform ourselves to the will of God, keep up our communion with God, and study to all the duties of the first table. We must walk humbly with our God; this includes all the duties of the first table.

3. The Lord's very crieth into the sky, and the man of wisdom shall see thy name.

Vol. IV.—6 Q
hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it.

10. Are there yet the treasures of wickedness in the house of the wicked, and the scant measure that is abominable? 11. Shall I count them pure with the wicked balances, and with the bag of deceitful weights? 12. For the rich men thereof are full of violence, and the inhabitants thereof have spoken lies, and their tongue is deceitful in their mouth. 13. Therefore also will I make thee sick in smiting thee, in making thee desolate because of thy sins. 14. Thou shalt eat, but not be satisfied; and thy casting down shall be in the midst of thee; and thou shalt take hold, but shalt not deliver; and that which thou deliverest wilt I give up to the sword. 15. Thou shalt sow, but thou shalt not reap; thou shalt tread the olives, but thou shalt not anoint thee with oil; and sweet wine, but shalt not drink wine. 16. For the statutes of Omri are kept, and all the works of the house of Ahab, and ye walk in their counsels; that I should make thee a desolation, and the inhabitants thereof a hissing: therefore ye shall hear the reproach of my people.

God having showed them how necessary it was that they should do justly, here shows them how plain it was that they had done unjustly; and since they submitted not to his controversy, nor went the right way to have it taken up, here he proceeds in it.

Observe,

1. How the action is entered against them, v. 9. God speaks to the city, to Jerusalem, to Samaria; his voice cries to it by his servants the prophets, who were to cry aloud, and not spare. Note, The voice of the prophets is the Lord's voice, and that cries to the city, cries to the country; Doth not Wisdom cry? Prov. vii. 1. When the sin of a city cries to God, his voice cries against the city; and when the judgments of God are coming upon a city, his voice first cries unto it; he warns before he wounds, because he is not willing that any should perish. Now observe, 1. How the voice of God in the word of his grace is used by some; The man of wisdom will see thy name. When the voice of God cries to us, we may by it see his name, may discern and perceive that by which he makes himself known. Yet many see it not, are not aware of it, because they do not regard it. God speaks once, yea, twice, and they perceive it not; (Job xxxiii. 14.) but they that are men of wisdom, who see the voice of the Lord and perceive it, and make a good use of it. Note, It is a point of true wisdom to discover the name of God in the voice of God, and to learn what he is, from what he says; Wisdom shall see thy name, for the knowledge of the holy is understanding.

2. What this voice of God says to all; "Hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it. Hear the rod when it is coming, hear it at a distance before ye meet with it;" and, Ahab, go forth to meet the Lord in the way of his judgments. Hear the rod when it is come, and is actually upon you, and you are sensible of the smart of it; hear what it says to you, what convictions, what counsels, what cautions, it speaks to you." Note, Every rod has a voice, and it is the voice of God that is to be heard in the rod of God; and it is well for them that understand the language of it; which if we would do, we must have an eye to him that appointed it. Note, Every rod is appointed, of what kind it shall be, where it shall light, and how long it shall lie. God has very often terrified and depressed his people by various visitations, as the rod, the fire, the hail, and the scorpion, foretold and employed for us, (Job xxviii. 14.) and to him therefore we must have an eye, to him we must have an ear; we must hear what he says to us by the affliction, hear it, and know it for thy good, Job v. 6. The work of ministers is to explain the providences of God, and to quicken and direct men to learn the lessons that are taught by them.

17. We must observe the ground of the action, and what are the things that are laid to their charge.

1. They are charged with injustices, a sin against the second table. Are there yet to be found among them the marks and means of fraudulent dealing? What, after all the methods that God has taken to teach them to do justly, will they yet deal unjustly? It seems they will, v. 10. And shall I count them here? v. 11. Is it only a sin, and a sin to be charged with, or are the means consist with a profession of purity. Those that are dishonest in their dealings, have not the spots of God's children, and shall never be reckoned pure, whatever shows of devotion they may make. Be not deceived, God is not mocked. When a man is suspected of theft, or fraud, the justice of peace will send a warrant to search his house. God has done the same; and, having searched the house of the inhabitants, there he finds, (1.) Treasures of wickedness; abundance of wealth, but it is ill got, and not likely to prosper; for treasures of wickedness profit nothing. (2.) A scant measure, by which, they sold to the poor, and so exacted upon them, and cheated them. (3.) They had wicked balances and a bag of false weights, by which, under a pretence of weighing what they sold, and giving the buyer what was right, they did him the greatest wrong, v. 11. (4.) Those that had wealth and power in their hands, abused it to oppression and extortion; The rich men thereof are full of violence; for they that have much, would have more, and are in a capacity of making it more, by the power which their abundance of wealth gives them. They are full of violence, they have their houses full of that which is got by violence. (5.) Those that had not advantage of doing wrong by their wealth, yet found means of defrauding those they dealt with; The inhabitants thereof have spoken lies; if they are not able to use force and violence, they use fraud and deceit; the inhabitants have spoken lies, and their tongue is deceitful in their mouths; they do not stick at a deliberate lie, to make a good bargain. So all this is but a humbugging falsely concerning God, saying, The Lord seeth not, he hath forsaken the earth, Ezek. viii. 12.

2. They are charged with idolatry; (v. 6.) The statutes of Omri are kept, and all the work of the house of Ahab; both these kings were wicked, and did evil in the sight of the Lord; but the wickedness which they established by a law, concerning which they made a great noise, and put a great work of that house, was idolatry. Omri walked in the way of Jeroboam, and in his sin of provoking God to anger with their vanities, 1 Kings xvi. 26. and v. 31. Ahab introduced the worship of Baal. These reigns were some ages before the time when this prophet lived, and yet the wickedness which they established by their laws and examples, remained the same; God was as ready to go forth and make all take, and that work was still done; and the princes and people still walked in their counsels, took the same measures, and governed themselves and the people by the same politics. Observe, (1.) The same wickedness continued from one generation to another. Sin is a root of bitterness soon planted, but not so soon flucked up again. The iniquity of former ages was not transmitted to, and engendered upon, the succeeding ones. Those that make corrupt laws, and bring in corrupt usages, are doing that which perhaps may prove the ruin of the child unborn. (2.) It was nevertheless evil in itself, provoking to God, and dangerous to the sinners, for its having been established and confirmed by the laws of princes, the examples of great men, and a long prescription. Though the worship of idols is enacted by the statutes of Omni, recommended by the practice of the house of Ahab, and pleads that it was not to be opposed by the very ground on which it stood, now disapproving of, and still disapproving to God, and destructive to Israel; for no laws or customs are of force against the divine command.
III. What is the judgment given upon this. Being found guilty of these crimes, the sentence is, that that which God had given them warning of, (v. 9.) shall be the answer and effect of God's dealings with themselves, yet not a complete or final answer, will I make thee sick, in smiting thee. As they had smitten the poor with the rod of their oppressions, so would God in like manner smite them, so as to make them sick, sick of the gains they had unjustly given, so that though they had swallowed down riches, they should vomit them up again, Job xxv.
13. Their doom is,
1. That what they have, they shall not have any comfortable enjoyment of, it shall do them no good; they grasped at more than enough, but when they have it, it shall not be enough to make them easy and happy; what is got by fraud and oppression cannot be kept or enjoyed with any satisfaction. (1.) Their food shall not nourish them; Thou shalt eat but be not satisfied, and other returns: The food not digest, for want of God's blessing going along with it, or because the appetite shall by disease be made insatiable and still craving, the just punishment of those who were greedy of gain, and enlarged their desires as hell. Men may be satisfied with the good things of this world, and yet not satisfied, Eccl. v. 10. Isa. lv. 2. (2.) Their country shall not be happy: and other returns: The district shall be in the midst of thee, thou shalt be broken and ruined by intestine troubles, mischiefs at home enough to cast thee down, though thou shouldst not be invaded by a foreign force. God can cast a nation down by that which is in the midst of them, can consume them by a fire in their own bowels. (3.) They shall eat of their own sons, as they have from a foreign force, or to recover what they have lost; Thou shalt take hold of what is about to be taken from thee, but thou shalt not hold it fast, shall catch at it, but thou shalt not deliver it, shall not retrieve it. It is meant of their wives and children, that were dear to them, which they took hold of, as resolved not to part with them, but there is no remedy, they must go into captivity.
Note, What we hold closest we commonly lose soonest, and that proves least safe which is most dear. (4.) What they save for a time, shall be reserved for a future and sorrier stroke; That which thou deliverest out of the hand of one enemy, will I give up to the sword of another enemy; for God has many arrows in his quiver, if one miss the sinner, the next shall not. (5.) What they have laboured for, they shall not enjoy; (v. 15.) Thou shalt sow, but thou shall not reap; either it shall be blasted and withered, and there shall be nothing to reap, or an enemy shall come, and reap it for himself, or thou shalt be carried into captivity, and leave it to be reaped by thou knowest not whom; thou shalt tread the olives, but thou shalt not anoint thee with oil; having no heart to make use of ornaments and refreshments, when all is going to ruin. Thou shalt tread out the sweet wine, but shalt not drink wine, for many things may fall between the cup and the lip. Note, It is very grievous to be disappointed of our expectations, and not to have the pleasure of the thing that we have taken pains for; and this will be the just punishment of those that frustrate God's expectations from them, and answer not the cost he has been at upon them. See this threatened in the law; (Lev. xxvi. 16. Deut. xxii. 30, 38, &c.) and compare Isa. lxxii. 8, 9.
2. That all they have, shall at length be taken from them; (v. 13.) Thou shalt be made desolate because of thy sins; and v. 16, a desolation and a kissing. Sin makes a nation desolate; and when a people that have been famous and flourishing, are made desolate, it is the astonishment of some and the triumph of others; some lament it, and others hiss at it. Thus ye shall bear the reproach of my people.
Their being the people of God, in name and profession, while they kept close to their duty, and kept themselves in his love, was an honour to them, and all the nation's household for them. But now they have corrupted and ruined themselves, now that their sins and God's judgments have made their land desolate, their having been once the people of God does but turn so much the more to their reproach; their enemies will say, These are the people of the Lord. Ezek. xxxvi. 20. Note, If professors of religion ruin themselves, their ruin will be the best reproach to all another; and they in a special manner will rise at the last day to everlasting shame and contempt.

CHAP. VII.
In this chapter, I. The prophet, in the name of the church, badly laments the woful decay of religion in the age wherein he lived, and the desolation of Israel; conclusively recommending God's laws, as the only alilty which overwhelmed the nation, which levelled the differences, and bore down the fences, of all that is just and secured, v. 1. 6. II. The prophet, for the sake of the church, prescribes comforts, which may be of use at such a time, and gives counsel what to do. 1. They must have an eye to God, v. 7. 2. They must courageously bear up against the insolencies of the enemy, v.
9. 10. They must be patient in their misfortunes, and persevere in their prayers, v. 9. 10. 3. They must expect no other than that the trouble would continue long, and must endeavour to make the best of it, v. 11. 13. 5. They must encourage themselves with God's promises, in answer to the prophet's prayers, v. 14. 15. 6. They must foresee the fall of their enemies, that now triumph over them,
v. 16. 17. 7. They must themselves triumph in the mercy and praise of God, and his faithfulness to his covenant; (v. 18. 20.) and with that comfortable word the prophecy concludes.

1. W:o is me! for I am as when they have gathered the summer-fruits, as the grape-gleanings of the vintage: there is no cluster to eat: my soul desired the first-ripe fruit. 2. The good man is perished out of the earth; and there is none upright among men: they all lie in wait for blood;
they hunt every man his brother with a net.
3. That they may do evil with both hands earnestly, the prince asketh, and the judge asketh for a reward; and the great man uttereth his mischievous desire: so they wrap it up. 4. The best of them is as a brier; the most upright is sharper than a thorn-edge: the day of the watchmen and thy visition cometh; now shall they be perplexity.
5. Trust ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a guide; keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom.
6. For the son dishonoureth the father, the daughter riseth up against her mother, the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law,
A man's enemies are the men of his own house.

This is such a description of bad times, as some think, could scarcely agree to the times of Hezekiah, when this prophet prophesied; but, though they are not the as they were in the reign of Manasseh. But we may rather suppose it to be in the reign of Ahaz, (and in that reign he prophesied, ch. i. 1,) or in the beginning of Hezekiah's time, before the reformation he was instrumental in; nay, in the best of his days, and when he had done his best to purge out corruptions, still the prophet cries out, (Isa. xii. 1.) Is me! He bemoans himself that his lot was cast in such a degenerate age, and thinks it his great unhappiness that he lived among a people that were ripening apace for a ruin which many a good man would unavoidably be involved in. Thus David cries out, Wo is me, that I sojourn in Mesec! He laments it.

1. That there was so few good people to be found, even among those that were called God's people, and this was their reproach. The good man is perished out of the earth, or out of the land, the land of Canaan, it was a good land, and a land of uprightness. (Isa. xxvi. 10.) but there were few good men in it, none upright among them. v. 2. The good man is a godly man, and a merciful man; the word signifies both. Those are completely good, who are both erect in the fear of God, and passionate and benevolent toward men; that love mercy and walk with God. These are perished; those few honest men that some time ago enriched and adorned our country, are now dead and gone, and there are none risen up in their stead, that tread in their steps; honesty is banished, and there is no such thing as a good man to be met with. Those that were honest men, and whose lives were an example of purity and godliness, are now degenerate, and have become as bad as the worst; the godly man ceases, Ps. xii. 1. This is illustrated by a comparison; (v. 1.) They were as when they have gathered the summer-fruits; it was as hard a thing to find a good man as to find any of the summer-fruits, (which were the choicest and best, and therefore must carefully be gathered in,) when the harvest is over, Is. xxvi. 10. Then the prophet is ready to say, as Elijah in his time, (1. Kings xix. 16.) I, even I only, am left. Good men, who used to hang in clusters, are now as the grape-gleanings of the vintage, here and there a berry, Is. xxvi. 6. You can find no societies of them as bunches of grapes, but those that are, are single persons, there is no cluster to eat; and the best and fullest grapes are those that grow in large clusters. Some think that this intimates not only that good people were few, but that those few who remained, who went for good people, were good for little; like the small withered grapes, the refuse that were left behind, not only by the gatherer, but by the gleaner. When the prophet observed this universal degeneracy, it made him desire the first-ripe fruits he wished to see worthy, good men as types of those who should appear in the primitive times, and as far excelled the best of all the present age as the first and full-ripe fruits do those of the latter growth, that never come to maturity. When we read and hear of the wisdom and zeal, the strictness and conscientiousness, the devotion and charity, of the professors of religion in former ages, and see the reverse of this in those of the present, we are provoked, but sit down and think with a sigh, O for primitive Christianity again! Where are the plainness and integrity of those that went before us? Where are the Israelites indeed, without guile? Our souls desire them; but in vain. The golden age is gone, and past recall; we must make the best of what is, for we are not likely to see such times as have been.

2. That there were so many wicked, mischievous people among them; not only none that did any good, but multitudes that did all the hurt they could; They all lie in wait for blood, and hunt every man his brother. To get wealth to themselves, they are not without wrong; they did to their neighbours and near-neighbours as we are. As if mankind were in a state of war, and force were the only right. They are as beasts of prey to their neighbours, for they all lie in wait for blood as lions for their prey, they thirst after it, make nothing of taking away any man's life or livelihood to serve a turn for themselves, and lie in wait for an opportunity to do it. Their nearest and relations are as such as are the beasts of prey to them, for they hunt every man his brother with a net, they persecute them as noxious creatures, fit to be taken and destroyed, though they are but, as it were, lawful game. We say of him that is outlawed, Cajart gerit lupinum—He is to be hunted as a wolf. Or, they hunt them as men do the game, to feast upon it; they have a thousand cursed arts of cunning men to their ruin, so that they may but get by it. Thus they do mischief with both hands earnestly; their hearts desire it, their heads contrive it, and then both hands are ready to put it in execution. Note, The more eager and intent men are upon any sinful pursuit, and the more pains they take in it, the more provoking it is.

3. That the magistrates, who by their office ought to have been benefactors to the poor, we have heard of them, as generally corrupt, and generous, passionate and benevolent toward men; that love mercy and walk with God. These are perished; those few honest men that some time ago enriched and adorned our country, are now dead and gone, and there are none risen up in their stead, that tread in their steps; honesty is banished, and there is no such thing as a good man to be met with. Those that were honest men, and whose lives were an example of purity and godliness, are now degenerate, and have become as bad as the worst; the godly man ceases, Ps. xii. 1. The golden age is gone, and past recall; we must make the best of what is, for we are not likely to see such times as have been.

4. That there was no faith in man, people were grown so universally treacherous, that one knew not whom to repose any confidence in, v. 5. "Those that have any sense of honour, or sparks of virtue, remaining in them, have a firm regard to the laws of friendship, they would not discover what passed in private conversation, nor divulge secrets, to the prejudice of a friend; but those things are now made a jest of, you will not meet with a friend that you dare trust, whose word you dare take, or who will have any tenderness or concern for you; so that wise men shall give it and take it for a rule, Trust ye not in a friend, for you will find him false, you can trust him no further than you can see him; and even him that passes for an honest man you will find to be so only with regards to a part of his character. Hence, from the undertakes to be your guide, to lead you into any business which he professes to understand better than you, you cannot put a confidence in him, for he will be sure to mislead you if he can get any thing by it."

Some by a guide understand a husband, who is called the guide of thy youth; and that agrees well enough with what follows, "Keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom, from thy own wife; take heed what thou sayest before her, lest she betray thee, as Delilah did Samson; lest she be the bird of the air, that carrieth the voice of that which thou sayest in thy bed-chamber;" Ex. x. 20. It is an evil time indeed, when the prudent are obliged even thus far to keep silence. V. 11. Those children were abusive to their parents; and men do not sometimes consider whether their own children are as much their dependants, as they are in their own families, and their nearest relations, v. 6. The times are bad indeed, when the son dishonours the father, gives him bad language, exposes him, threatens him, and studies to do him a mischief, when the daughter rises up in rebellion against her own mother, having no sense of duty, or natural affection; and he that学科. Thus the dohers-in-law quarrel with her mother-in-law, and are vexatious to her. Either they cannot agree about their property and interest, or their humours and passions clash, or, from a spirit of bigotry and persecution, the brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child, Matt. x. 4. Luke xxxi. 16. It is said when a man's betrayers and worst enemies are the men of his own house, his own children and servants, that should be his guard and his best friends. Note, The contempt and violation of the laws of domestic duties are a sad symptom of universal corruption of manners. These are never likely to come to good, that are unfaithful to their parents, and study to be provoking to them, and cross them.

7. Therefore I will look unto the Lord; I will wait for the God of my salvation; my God will hear me. 8. Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me. 9. I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him, until he plead my cause, and execute judgment for me: he will bring me forth to the light, and I shall behold his righteousness. 10. Then she that is mine enemy shall see it, and shame shall cover her which said unto me, Where is the Lord thy God? mine eyes shall behold her: now, shall she be trodden down as the mire of the streets. 11. In the day that thy walls are to be built, in that day shall the decree be far removed. 12. In that day also he shall come even to thee from Assyria, and from the fortified cities, and from the fortress even to the river, and from sea to sea, and from mountain to mountain. 13. Notwithstanding, the land shall be desolate, because of them that dwell therein, for the fruit of their doings.

The prophet, having sadly complained of the wickedness of the times he lived in, here fastens upon some considerations for the comfort of himself and his friends, in reference thereunto. The case is bad, but it is not desperate; yet now there is hope in Israel concerning this thing. I. Though God be now displeased, he shall be reconciled to us, and then all will be well, v. 7, 9. We are now under the indignation of the Lord, God is angry with us, and justly, because we have sinned against him. Note, It is our sin against God that provokes his indignation against us; and we must see it, and own it, whenever we are under divine rebukes, that we may justify God, and may study to answer his end in afflicting us, by repenting of sin, and breaking off from it. Now, at such a time.

1. We must have recourse to God under our troubles; (v. 7.) Therefore I will look unto the Lord. When a child of God has ever so much occasion to cry, Ho will be our God, the prophet here, v. 1.) yet it may be a comfort to him, that he has a God to look to, a God to come to, to fly to, in whom he may rejoice, and have satisfaction. All may look bright above him, when all looks black and dark about him. The prophet had been complaining that there was no comfort to be had, no confidence to be put, in friends and relations on earth, and this drives him still farther to God. The less reason have we to delight in any creature, the more reason we have to delight in God. If princes are not to be trusted, we may say, Happy is the man that has the God of Jacob for his Help, and happy am I, even in the midst of my present woes, if he be my Help. If men be false, this is our comfort, that God is faithful; if relations be unkind, he is and will be gracious. Let us therefore look above and beyond them, and overlook our disappointment in them, and look unto the Lord. 2. We must submit to the will of God in our troubles; (v. 11.) I will bear the indignation of the Lord, will bear it patiently, without murmuring and repining, because I have sinned against him. Note, Those that are truly penitent for sin, will see a great deal of reason to bear patiently under the discipline of God. Wherefore should a man complain, for the punishment of his sin? When we complain to God of the badness of the times, we ought to complain against ourselves for the badness of our own hearts.

3. We must depend upon God to work deliverance for us, and put a good issue to our troubles in due time; we must not only look to him, but look for him; "I will wait for the God of my salvation, and for his gracious returns to me." In our greatest distresses, we shall see no reason to despair of salvation, if by faith we eye God as the God of our salvation, who is able to save the weakest, upon their humble petition, and willing to save the worst, upon their true repentance. And if we depend on God for his salvation, we must not only look to him, but look for him, and for his salvation, in his own way and his own time. Let us now see, what the church is here taught to expect and promise herself from God, even then when things are brought to the last extremity. (1.) My God will hear me; if the Lord be our God, he will hear our prayers, and grant an answer of peace to them. (2.) When I fall, and in danger of being dashed in pieces by the waves, yet I shall arise, and recover myself again. I fall, but am not utterly cast down," Ps. xxxvii. 24. (3.)
"When I sit in darkness, desolate and disconsolate, melancholy and perplexed, and not knowing what to do, or which way to look for relief, yet then the Lord shall be a Light to me, to comfort and revive me, to instruct and teach me, to direct and guide me, as a Light to mine eyes, a Light to my feet, a Light in a dark place." (4.) He will plead my cause, and execute judgment for me, v. 9. If we heed the cause of religion and virtue, and make it our cause, we may hope he will own our cause, and plead it. The church's cause, though it seem for a time to go against her, will at length be pleaded with jealousy, and judgment not only given against, but executed upon, the enemies of it. (5.) "He will bring me forth to the light, make me shine eminent out of obscurity, and become conspicuous; will make my righteousness shine evidently from under the dark cloud of calumny, Ps. xxxvii. 6. Isa. lviii. 10. The morning of comfort shall shine forth, out of the long and dark night of trouble." (6.) "I shall behold his righteousness; I shall see the equity of his proceedings concerning me, and the performance of his promises to me." III. Though enemies triumph and insult, they shall be silenced and put to shame, v. 9, 10. Observe here,

1. How proudly the enemies of God's people trampled upon them in their distress: they said, Where is the Lord their God? As if because they were afflicted, God had forsaken them, and they knew not where to find him with their prayers, and he knew not how to help them with his favours. This was David's enemies said to him, and it was a sword in his bones; (Ps. xiii. 10.) and see Ps. cxv. 2. Thus, in reproaching Israel as an abandoned people, they reflected on the God of Israel, as an unkind, unfaithful God.

2. How comfortably the people of God by faith heir up themselves under these insults; (v. 8.) Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy; I am now down, but shall not be always so, and when my God appears for me, then she that is mine enemy shall see it, and be ashamed." (not only being disappointed in her expectations of the church's utter ruin, but having the same piece of trembling put into her hand,) then mine eyes shall behold her in the same deplorable condition that I am now in; now shall she be trodden down. Note, The deliverance of the church will be the confusion of her enemies; as it is impossible, who shall be more than handle, who shall trample upon God's people, so they shall themselves be trampled upon.

III. Though the land continue a great while desolate, yet it shall at length be replenished again, when the time, even the set time, of its deliverance comes. 1. Its salvation shall not come till after it has been desolate; so the margin reads it, v. 13. In controversy with the land, and it must lie long under his rebukes, because of them that dwell therein; it is their iniquity that makes their land desolate; (Ps. cvii. 34.) it is for the fruit of their doings, evil doings which they have been themselves guilty of, and the evil fruit of them, the sins of others, which they have been accessory to by their bad influence and example. For this they must expect to smart a great while, for the world shall not be at an end, nor shall wars cease in the world, people. 2. When it does come, it shall be a complete salvation; and it seems to refer to their deliverance out of Babylon by Cyrus, which Isaiah about this time prophesied of, as a type of our redemption by Christ. (1.) The decree shall be far removed. God's decree concerning their captivity, and Nebuchadnezzar's decree concerning the perpetuity of it, his resolution never to release them; these shall be set aside and revoked, and you shall hear no more of them; they shall no more lie as a yoke upon thy neck. (2.) Jerusalem and the cities of Judah shall be again reared; Then thy walls shall be built; walls for habitation, walls for defence, house-walls, town-walls, temple-walls: it is in order to these, that the decree is repealed, Isa. xlv. 28. Though Zion's walls may lie long in ruins, there will come a day when they shall be repaired. (3.) All that belong to the land of Israel, whither they have wandered out, howsoever distressed, far and wide over the face of the whole earth, shall come flocking to it again; (v. 12.) He shall come even to thee, having liberty to return, and a heart to return, from Assyria, whither the ten tribes were carried away, though it lay remote; and from the fortified cities, and from the fortress, those strong holds in which they thought they could long continue them fast and secure, though Pharaoh will not let the people go, God will fetch them out with a high hand. They shall come from all the remote parts, from sea to sea, and from mountain to mountain, not turning back for fear of your discouragements, but they shall go from strength to strength till they come to Zion. Thus in the great day of redemption, God will gather his elect from the four winds.

14. Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thy heritage, which dwell solitarily in the wood, in the midst of Carmel: let them feed in Bashan and Gilead, as in the days of old. 15. According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt will I shew unto him marvellous things. 16. The nations shall see, and be confounded at all their might: they shall lay their hand upon their mouth, their ears shall be deaf. 17. They shall lick the dust like a serpent, they shall move out of their holes like worms of the earth: they shall be afraid of the Lord our God, and shall fear because of thee. 18. Who is a God like unto thee, that pardons iniquity, and passes by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? he retains not his anger for ever, because he delighteth in mercy. 19. He will turn again, he will have compassion upon us; he will subdue our iniquities: and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea. 20. Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham, which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from the days of old.

1. The prophet's prayer to God, to take care of his own people, and of their cause and interest, v. 14. When God is about to deliver his people, he stirs up their friends to pray for them, and pours out a spirit of grace and supplication, Zech. xii. 10. And when we see God coming towards us in signs of mercy, we must never forget his prayer. It is a prophetic prayer, which amounts to a promise of the good prayed for: what God directed his prophet to ask, no doubt he designed to give. Now, 1. The people of Israel are here called the flock of God's heritage, for they are the sheep of his hand, the sheep of his pasture, his little flock, in the world; and they are his heritage, his portion in the world; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance. 2. This flock dwells solitarily in the wood, or forest, in the midst of Carmel, a high mountain; Israel was a peculiar people that dwelt alone, and was not reckoned among the nations, like a flock of sheep in a wood. They were now a desolate people, (v. 13.) were in the land of their captivity, their strength was broken, and made a prey to the beasts of the forest. They are scattered upon the mountains as sheep having no shepherd. 3. He prays that God would feed them there with his rod, that he would take care of them in their captivity, would protect them, and provide for them, and do the part of a good Shepherd to them; Let thy rod and staff comfort them, even in that darksome valley; and even there let them want nothing that is good for them. Let them be governed by thy rod, not the rod of their enemies, for they are thy people." 4. He prays that God would in due time bring them back to feed in the plains of Bashan and Gilead, no longer to be fed in the woods and mountains. Let them feed in their own country again, as in the days of old. Some apply this spiritually, and make it either the prophet's prayer to Christ, or his Father's charge to him, to take care of his church, as the great Shepherd of the sheep, and to go in and out before them while they are here in this world as in a wood, that they may find pasture as in Carmel, as in Bashan and Gilead.

II. God's promises in answer to this prayer; and we may well take God's promises as real answers to the prayers of faith, and embrace them accordingly, for with him saying and doing are not two things. The prophet prayed that God would feed them, and do kind things for them; but God answers that he will show them marvellous things, (v. 15.) will do for them more than they are able to ask or think, will out-do their hopes and expectations; he will show them his marvellous loving-kindness, Ps. xlvii. 1.

1. He will do that for them, which shall be the repetition of the wonders and miracles of former ages; according to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt. Their deliverance out of Babylon shall be a work of wonder and grace, not inferior to their deliverance out of Egypt, nay, it should eclipse the lustre of that, (Jer. xvi. 14, 15.) much more should the work of redemption by Christ be so. Note, God's former favours to his church are patterns of future favours, and shall again be copied cut as there is occasion.

2. He will do that for them, which shall be matter of wonder and amazement to the present age, v. 16, 17. The nations about shall take notice of it, and wonder at it, (v. 16.) shall be astonished; The nations shall stand and wonder, and shall lay great hands to do great things for them, Ps. cxxvi. 2. The impression which the deliverance of the Jews out of Babylon shall make upon the neighbouring nations, shall be very much for the honour both of God and his church. (1.) Those that had insulted over the people of God in their distress, and gloried that when they had them down, they would keep them down shall be confounded, when they see them thus surprisingly rising up; they shall be confounded at all the might with which the captives shall now exert themselves, whom they thought for ever disabled. They shall now lay their hand upon their mouths, as being ashamed of what they have said, and not able to say any more, by way of triumph over Israel. Nay, their ears shall be deaf to the songs of triumph that are sung over them. (2.) Those that have done good things for them, Ps. cxxvi. 2. The impression which the deliverance of the Jews out of Babylon shall make upon the neighbouring nations, shall be very much for the honour both of God and his church. (1.) Those that had insulted over the people of God in their distress, and gloried that when they had them down, they would keep them down shall be confounded, when they see them thus surprisingly rising up; they shall be confounded at all the might with which the captives shall now exert themselves, whom they thought for ever disabled. They shall now lay their hand upon their mouths, as being ashamed of what they have said, and not able to say any more, by way of triumph over Israel. God's people here, as they look back with thankfulness upon God's pardoning their sins, so they look forward with assurance upon what he would yet further do for them. His mercy endures for ever, and therefore as he has showed mercy, so he will, v. 19, 20. (1.) He will renew his favours to us, he will turn again, he will have compassion, he will again have compassion upon us, as formerly he had; his compassions shall be new every morning; he seemed to be departing from us in anger, but he will turn again, and pity us. He will turn us to himself, and then will turn to us, and have mercy upon us. (2.) He will renew us, to prepare and qualify us for his favour; He will subdue our iniquities; when he takes away the guilt of sin, that it may not damn us, he will break the power of sin, that it may not have dominion over us; that we may not fear sin, or be led captive by it. Sin is an enemy that fights against us, a tyrant that oppresses us; nothing less than almighty grace can subdue it, so great is its power in fallen man, and so long has it kept possession. But if God forgive the sin that has been committed by us, he will subdue the sin that dwells in us, and in that, there is none like him in forgiving; and all those whose sins are pardoned, earnestly desire and hope to have their corruptions mortified, and their iniquities subdued, and please themselves with the hopes of it. If we be left to ourselves, our iniquities will be too hard for us; but God's grace, we trust, shall be sufficient for us to subdue them, so that they shall not rule us, and then they shall not ruin us. (3.) He will confirm this good work, and effectually provide that his act of grace shall never be repealed; Thou wilt cast all their sins into the depth of the sea; as when he brought them out of Egypt, (to which he has an eye in the promises here, v. 15.) he subdued Pharaoh and the Egyptians, and cast them into the depth of the sea. It intimates that when God forgives sin, he remembers it no more, and takes care that it never be remembered more against the sinner; (Ezek. xviii. 22.) His transgressions shall not be mentioned unto him, they are blotted out as a cloud which never appears more. He casts them into the sea, not near the shore-side, where they may appear again next low water, but into the depth of the sea, never to rise again. All their sins shall be cast there without exception, for when God forgives sin, he forgives all. (4.) He will perfect that which concerns us, and with this good work will do all that for us, which our case requires, and which he has promised; (v. 20.) Then will thou perform thy truth to Jacob, and thy mercy to Abraham. It is in pursuance of the covenant, that our sins are pardoned, and our lusts mortified; from that spring all these streams flow, and with these he shall freely give us all things. The promise is said to be mercy to Abraham, because, as made to him first, it was mere mercy, preventing mercy, considering what state it found him in. But it was truth to Jacob, because the faithfulness of God was engaged to make good to him and his seed, as heirs to Abraham, all that was graciously promised to Abraham. See here, [1.] With what solemnity the covenant of grace is ratified to us; it was not only spoken, written, and sealed, but, which is the highest confirmation, it was sworn to our fathers; nor is it a modern project, but is confirmed by antiquity too, it was sworn from the days of old; it is an ancient charter. [2.] With what satisfaction it may be applied and relied upon by us; we may say with the highest assurance, Thou wilt perform the truth and mercy, not one iota or tittle of it shall fall to the ground; faithful is he that has promised, who also will do it.
The name of this prophet signifies a comforter; for it was a charge given to all the prophets, Comfort ye, comfort ye my people; and even this prophet, though wholly taken up in foretelling the destruction of Nineveh, which speaks terror to the Assyrians, is, even in that, comforter to the ten tribes of Israel, who, it is probable, were now lately carried captives into Assyria. It is very uncertain at what time he lived and prophesied, but it is most probable that he lived in the time of Hezekiah, and prophesied against Nineveh, after the captivity of Israel by the king of Assyria, which was in the ninth year of Hezekiah, and before Sennacherib's invading Judah, which was in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah, for to that attempt, and the defeat of it, it is supposed, the first chapter has reference; and it is probable that it was delivered a little before it, for the encouragement of God's people in that day of treading down and perplexity. It is the conjecture of the learned Huculus, that the two other chapters of this book were delivered by Nahum some years after, perhaps in the reign of Manasseh, and in that reign the Jewish chronologies generally place him; somewhat nearer to the time when Nineveh was conquered, and the Assyrian monarchy reduced, by Cyaxares and Nebuchadnezzar, some time before the first captivity of Judah. It is probable that Nahum did by word of mouth prophesy many things concerning Israel and Judah, as it is certain that Jonah did, (2 Kings xiv. 25.) though we have nothing of either of them in writing, but what related to Nineveh, of which, though a great and ancient city, yet, probably, we should never have heard in sacred writ, if the Israel of God had not had some concern in it.

NAHUM, I.

CHAP. 1.

In this chapter we have, I. The inscription of the book, v. 1. II. A magnificent display of the glory of God, in a mixture of wrath and justice against the wicked, and mercy and grace toward his people, and the discovery of his majesty and power in both, v. 2. 3. 4. III. A particular application of this (as most interpreters think) to the destruction of Sennacherib and the Assyrian army, when they besieged Jerusalem, which was a very memorable and illustrious instance of the power both of God's justice and of his mercy, and spared abundance of terror to his enemies, and encouragement to his faithful servants, v. 9. 10.

1. THE burden of Nineveh. The book of the vision of Nahum the Elkoshite.

This title directs us to consider, 1. The great city against which the word of the Lord is here delivered; it is the burden of Nineveh; not only a prophecy, and a weighty one, but a burdenome prophecy, a dead weight to Nineveh, a mill-stone hanged about its neck. Nineveh was the place concerned, and the Assyrian monarchy, which was the royal seat of. About a hundred years before this, Jonah had, in God's name, foretold the speedy overthrow of this great city; but then the Ninevites repented, and were spared, and that decree did not bring forth; the Ninevites then saw clearly how much it was to their advantage, to turn from their evil way, it was the saving of their city; and yet, soon after, they returned to it again; it became worse than ever, a bloody city, and full of lies and robbery; they repented of their repentance, returned with the dog to his vomit, and at length grew worse than ever they had been; then God sent them not this prophet, as Jonah, but this prophecy, to read them their doom, which was now irreversible. Note, The reprobate will not be continued; if the repentance be not continued in. If men turn from the good they began to do, they can expect no other than that God should turn from the favour he began to show, Jer. xviii. 10.

2. The poor prophet by whom the word of the Lord is here delivered; it is the book of the vision of Nahum in the Eltershiite. The burden of Nineveh was what the prophet plainly foresaw, for it was his vision, and what he left upon record; it is the book of the vision, that, when he was gone, the event might be compared with the prediction, and might confirm it. All the account we have of the prophet himself, is, that he was an Eltershiite, of the town called El'kesor, or Ele'sor, which, St. Jerome says, was in Galilee. Some observe, that the scripture ordinarily says little of the prophets themselves, that our faith might not stand upon their authority, but upon that of the blessed Spirit by whom their prophecies were ended.

2. God is jealous, and the Lord revengeth; he is jealous for his own honour in the matters of his worship, and will not endure a rival; he is jealous for the comfort of his worshippers, jealous for his land, (Joel ii. 18.) and will not have that injured. He is a Revenger, and he is furious; he has fury, (so the word is) upon men. Fury is often Lord over us, as theirs that have no rule over their own spirits, but God is always Lord of his anger, and weighs a faith to it, Ps. lxxvii. 50. 2. He resolved to reckon with those that put those affronts upon him. We are told here, not only that it is a Revenger, but that he will take vengeance; he has said he will, he has sworn it, Deut. xxxii. 40, 41. Whatever are his adversaries and enemies among men, he will make them feel his resentments, and though the sentence against his enemies is not executed speedily, yet he reserves wrath for them, and reserves them for it in the day of wrath. Against his own people, who repent, and humble themselves before him, he keeps not his anger for ever, but against his enemies he will for ever let out his anger. He will not at all acquit the wicked that sin, and stand to it, and do not. Their wickedly depart from their God, that depart, and never return; (Ps. xviii. 21.) and these he will not acquit. Humble suppliants will find him gracious, but scornful beggars will not find him easy, or that the door of mercy will be opened to a loud, but late, Lord, Lord. This revelation of the wrath of God against his enemies is applied to Nineveh, (v. 8.) and should be applied by all those to themselves who go on still in their trespasses; With an over-running flood he will make an utter end of the place thereof. The army of the Chaldeans shall overrun the country of the Assyrians, and lay it all waste. God's judgments, when they come with commission, are like a deluge to any people, which they cannot keep off, or make head against. Darkness shall pursue his enemies, terror of the night shall follow them, whithersoever they go, shall pursue them to utter darkness; if they think to flee from the darkness that pursues them, they will but fall into that which is before them.

II. He is a God of irresistible power, and is able to deal with his enemies, be they ever so many, ever so mighty, ever so hardly. He is great in power, (v. 3.) and therefore it is good having him our Friend, and bad having him our Enemy. Now here,

1. The power of God is asserted and proved by divers instances of it in the kingdom of nature, where we always find its visible effects in the ordinary course of nature, and sometimes in the surprising alterations of that course. (1.) If we look up into the regions of the air, there we shall find proofs of his power, for he has his ways in the whirlwind and the storm; which way soever God goes, he carries a whirlwind and a storm along with him, for the terror of his enemies, Ps. xviii. 9, 8c. And wherever there is a whirlwind and a storm, God has the command of it, the control of it, makes his way through it, goes on his way in it, and serves his own purposes by it. He spake to Job out of the whirlwind, and the stormy winds fulfilled his word. He has his way in the whirlwind, he goes on undis- cerned, and the methods of his providence are to us unaccountable; as it is said, His way is in the sea. The clouds are the dust of his feet, he treads on them, walks on them, raises them when he pleases, as a man with his feet raises a cloud of dust. It is but by permission, or usurpation rather, that the devil is the prince of the power of the air, for that power is in God's hand. (2.) If we cast our eye upon the great deeps, there we find that the sea is his, for he made it; for when he pleases, he rebukes the sea, and makes it dry, by lifting up all the rivers which he has divided. He gave those proofs of his power when he divided the Red sea and Jordan, and can do the same again whenever he pleases. (3.) If we look round us on this earth, we find proofs of his power, when either by the extreme heat and drought of summer, or the cold and frost of winter, Bashan languishes, and Carmel, and the flower thereof, is burnt, and there is an extreme winter, the cherry, and rose, flower languishes. His power is often seen in earthquakes, which shake the mountains, (v. 5.) melt the hills and melt them down, and level them with the plains. When he pleases, the earth is burst at his presence by the scorching heat of the sun, and he could burn it with fire from heaven, as he did Sodom, and at the end of time he will burn the world and all that dwell therein. The earth and all the works that are therein shall be burnt up. Thus great is the Lord, and of great power.

2. This is particularly applied to his anger. If God be an almighty God, we may thence infer, (v. 6.) Who can stand before his indignation? The Ninevites had often found God slow to anger, (as he says, v. 3.) and perhaps presumed upon the mercy and goodness of his anger. (1.) See God of, and thought they might make bold with him; but they will find he is just and jealous as well as merciful and gracious, and, having showed the justice of his wrath, in the next he shows the power of it, and the utter insufficiency of his enemies to contend with him. It is in vain for the stoutest and strongest of sinners to think to make their part good again, the power of God. (2.) See God here, as a consuming fire, terrible and mighty. Here is his indignation against sin, and the fierceness of his anger, his fury poured out, not like water, but like fire; like the fire and brimstone rained on Sodom, Ps. xi. 6. Hell is the fierceness of God's anger, Rev. xvii. 19. God's anger is so fierce, that it beats down all before it; the rocks are thrown down by him, which seemed unmovable. Rocks have sometimes been rent by the eruption of subterraneous fires, which is a faint resemblance of the fierceness of God's anger against sinners whose hearts are rocky, for none ever hardened their hearts against him and prospered. (2.) See sinners here, as stubble before the fire, weak and impotent, and a very unequal match for the wrath of God. [1.] They are utterly unable to bear up against it, so as to resist it, and put by the strokes of it; Who can stand before his indignation? Not the poorest and most daring sinner; not the world of the ungodly, no, not the angels that sinned. [2.] They are utterly unable to bear up against it, so as to keep up their spirits, and preserve any enjoyment of themselves; Who can abide in the fierceness of his anger? As it is irresistible, so it is intolerable. Some of the effects of God's displeasure in this world a man may bear up under, but the fierceness of his anger, when it fastens immediately upon the soul, who can bear it? Let us therefore fear before him, let us stand in awe, and not sin.

III. He is a God of infinite mercy; and in the midst of all the wrath men are remembereth the sinners in Zion be afraid, that go on still in their transgressions, but let not those that trust in God, tremble before him. For, 1. He is slow to anger, (v. 3.) not easily provoked, but ready to show mercy to those who have offended him, and to receive them into favour upon their repentance. 2. When the tokens of his rage against the wicked are abroad, he takes care for the safety and comfort of his own people; (v. 7.) The Lord is good to those that are good, and to them he will be a strong hold in the day of trouble. Note, The same almighty power that is exerted for the terror and destruction of the wicked is engaged, and shall be employed, for the protection and satisfaction of his own people; he is able both to save and to destroy. In the day of public trouble, when God's judgments are in the earth, laying all waste, he will be a Place of defence to those that by faith put themselves under his protection, those that trust in him in the way of their duty, that live a life of dependence upon him, and that in faith do good, looking to him for his support and protection, he takes care of them for his, he takes knowledge of their case, knows what is best for them, and what course to take most effectually for their relief. They are perhaps obscure and little regarded in the world, but the Lord knows them, Ps. i. 6.

9. What do ye imagine against the Lord? he will make an utter end: affliction shall not rise up the second time. 10. For while they be folded together as thorns, and while they are drunken as drunkards, they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry. 11. There is one come out of thee that imagineth evil against the Lord, a wicked counsellor. 12. Thus saith the Lord, Though they be quiet, and likewise many, yet thus shall they be cut down, when he shall pass through. Though I have afflicted thee, I will afflict thee no more. 13. For now will I break his yoke from off thee, and will burst thy bonds in sunder. 14. And the Lord hath given a commandment concerning thee, that no more of thy name be sown: out of the house of thy gods will I cut off the graven image, and the molten image; I will make thy grave; for thou art vile. Behold upon the mountains the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace! O Judah, keep thy solemn feasts, perform thy vows: for the wicked shall no more pass through thee; he is utterly cut off.

These verses seem to point at the destruction of the army of the Assyrians under Sennacherib, which may well be reckoned a part of the barthron of Nineve, the head city of the Assyrian empire, and a pledge of the destruction of Nineve, the whole about an hundred years after; and this was an event which Isaiah, with whom, probably, this prophet was contemporary, spake much of. Now observe here,

1. The great provocation which the Assyrians gave to God, the just and jealous God, for which, though slow to anger, he would take vengeance; (v. 11.) There is one come out of thee, and imagines evil against the Lord—Sennacherib and his spokesman Rabshakeh; they framed an evil letter and an evil speech, not only against Hezekiah and his people, but against God himself; reflecting upon him as level with the gods of the heathen, and unable to protect his worshippers, despising his people, putting confidence in him, and urging them rather to put themselves under the protection of the great king, the king of Assyria; they contrived to alter the property of Jerusalem, that it should be no longer the city of the Lord, the holy city. This one, this mighty one, so he thinks himself, that comes out of Nineveh, evi. against the Lord, brings upon Nineveh this burden; never was the Almighty Majesty of his power more daringly, more blasphemously affronted than by Sennacherib at that time: he was a wicked counselor, who counselled them to despair of God's protection, and surrender themselves to the king of Assyria, and endeavoured to put them out of conceit with Hezekiah's reformation; (Isa. xxxvi. 7.) with this wicked counsellor he here expostulates, (v. 9.) This counsel is vain, my foolish, wicked thing is it for you to plot against God, as if you could outwit divine wisdom, and overpower Omnipotence itself!" Note, There is a great deal imagined against the Lord by the gates of hell, and against the interests of his kingdom in the world; but it will prove a vain thing, Ps. ii. 1. 2. He that sits in heaven, laughs at the imaginations of the pretens and shall up against him, and will turn their counsels headlong.

2. The great destruction which God will bring upon them for it; not immediately upon the whole monarchy, (the ruin of that was deferred till the measure of their iniquity was full,) but, (1.) Upon the army; God will make an utter end of it; it shall be totally cut off and ruined at one blow; one fatal stroke of the destroying angel shall lay desolation, and make it a howling wilderness, the whole second time, for it shall not need. With some sinners God makes a quick despatch, does their business at once; divine vengeance goes not by one certain rule, nor in one constant track; but, one way or other, by acute diseases or chronic diseases, by slow deaths or lingering ones, he will make an utter end of all his enemies, who persist in their imaginations against him; they have laid one another's hands on, the Assyrian army were mostly of the same spirit, and spake the same language, with their general, and now God would take them to task, though they did but say as they were taught; and it shall appear that they have laid themselves open to divine wrath by their own act and deed, v. 10. [1.] They are as thorns that entangle one another, and are folded together; they make one another worse, and more indiscipline and disunited, and one another's hearts, and strengthen one another's hands, in their impiety; and therefore God will do with them as the husbandman does with a bush of thorns, when he cannot bear them, he puts them all into the fire together. [2.] They are as drunken men, intoxicated with pride and rage; and such as they shall be irrecoverably overthrown and destroyed. They shall be as drunkards, besotted to their own ruin, and shall stumble and fall, and make thenselves a reproach, and be justly laughed at. [3.] They shall be devoured as stubble fully dry, which is irresistibly and irrecoverably consumed by the flame. The judgments of God are as devouring fire to those that make themselves as stubble to them. It is again threatened concerning this great army, (v. 12.) that though they be quiet and likewise made secure by the setting of one, yet shall it be seized upon them, because they are numerous, yet thus shall they be cut down, or certainly shall they be cut down, as grass and corn are cut down, with as little ado, when he shall pass through, even the destroying angel that is commissioned to cut them down. Note, The security of sinners, and their confidence in their own strength, are often presages of ruin approaching. [2.] The destruction comes upon the king: be imag'd against the Lord, and shall he escape? No, (v. 14.) "The Lord has given a commandment concerning thee, the decree is gone forth, that thy name be no more sown, that thy memory perish, that thou be no more talked of as thou hast been, and that the report of thy mighty actions be dispersed upon the wings of fame, and celebrated with her trumpet." Because Sennacherib's son reigned in his stead, and the building of the city was not finished, the Assyrian empire not long after. Note, They that imagine evil against the Lord, hasten evil upon themselves and their own families and interests, and ruin their own names by dishonouring his name. It is further threatened, [1.] That the images he worshipped should be cut off from their temple; the graven image and the molten image out of the house of his fathers, which he thought would be preserved when Sennacherib was slain by his two sons, as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch his god; by which barbarous parricide we may suppose the temple was looked upon as defiled, and was therefore divested, and the images cut off from it, the worshippers of these images no longer attending there. Or, it may be taken more generally to speak the utter ruin of Assyria; the army of the enemy shall lay all waste, and not spare even the images of their gods; by which God would intimate to them that one of the grounds of his controversy with them was, their idolatry. [2.] That Sennacherib's grave shall be made there, some think in the house of his god; there he was slain, and there he shall be buried, for he is vile; he lies under this perpetual mark of disgrace, that he had so far lost his interest in the eyes of God, that within a short time of his decease, two of them murdered him. Or, it may be meant of the ignominious fall of the Assyrian monarchy itself, upon the ruins of which that of Babylon was raised; what a noise was made about the grave of that once formidable state, but now despicable, is largely described, Ezek. xxxvi. 3, 11, 15, 16. Note, Those that make themselves vile by scandalous sins, God will make them vile by shameful punishments.

3. The great deliverance which God would hereby work for his own people, and the city that was called by his name. The ruin of the church's enemies is the salvation of the church, and a very great salvation it was, that was wrought for Jerusalem by the overthrow of Sennacherib's army. (1.) The siege shall hereby be raised; "Now will I break his yoke from off thee, by which thou art kept in bondage; and Jerusalem's enemies shall be disarmed; and Jerusalem shall be set at liberty again: this was a figure of the great salvation, by which the Jerusalem that is above is made free, is made free indeed. (2.) The enemy shall be so weakened and dispirited, that they shall never make any such attempt again, and the end of this trouble shall be so well gained by the grace of God, that there shall be no more occasion for such a severe correction. [1.] God will not again afflict Jerusalem with such a destruction in a short time. It is enough; for he has by this fright accomplished his whole work upon mount Zion, (Isa. x. 12.) and therefore, though I have afflicted thee, I will afflict thee no more; the bitter portion shall not be repeated, unless there he need, and the patient's case shall call for it; for God doth not afflict willingly. [2.] The enemy shall not dare again to attempt what destruction hereupon; God's people shall not be able to pass through thee as they have done, to lay all waste, for he is utterly cut off, and disabled to do it. His army is cut off, his spirit cut off, and at length he is himself cut off. Lastly, The tiding of this great deliverance shall be published and welcomed with abundance of joy throughout the kingdom, v. 15. While Sennacherib prevailed, and carried all before him, every day brought bad news; but now, behold upon the mountains the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, the feet of the evangelist; he is seen coming at a distance upon the mountains, as fast as his feet will carry him; and how pleasant a sight is it once more to see a messenger of peace, after we have received so many of Job's messengers! We find these words made use of by another prophet, to illustrate the mercy of the deliverance of people of God out of Babylon; (Isa. li. 7.) not that the prophets spoke the word one from another, (as those did, Jer. xxiii. 39.) but, speaking by the same Spirit, they often used the same expressions: and it may be of good use for ministers to testify their consent to wholesome truths, (1 Tim. vi. 3.) by consisting in the same forms of sound words, 2 Tim. i. 13. These good tidings quenched by the apostle, both from Isaiah and Nahum, and applied to the great redemption wrought out for us by our Lord Jesus, and the publishing of it to the world by the everlasting gospel, Rom. x. 15. Christ's ministers are those messengers of good tidings that preach peace by Jesus Christ; how beautiful are the feet of those messengers! How welcome their message to every heart! and what danger by the hearing of sin! And observe, He that bringeth these good tidings, brings with them a call toJudah to keep her solemn feasts, and perform her vows. During the trouble, [1.] The ordinary feasts had been intermitted. Inter arma silent leges—The voice of law cannot be heard amid the shouts of battle. While Jerusalem was compassed with armies, they could not proclaim the law. But now that the enemy is taken off, they must return to the observation of their feasts; and the feasts of the Lord will then be doubly sweet to the people of God, when they have been for some time deprived of the benefit of them, and God graciously restores them their opportunities again; for we are taught the worth of such mercies by the want of them. [2.] They had made vows to God, that if he would deliver them out of this distress, they would do something extraordinary in his service, to his honour; and now that the deliverance is wrought, they are called upon to perform their vows; the promise they had then made must now be made good, for better it is not to vow, than to vow and not to pay. And those words, The wicked shall no more pass through thee, may be taken as a promise of the perfecting the good work of reformation, which Hezekiah had begun; the wicked shall not, as they have done, walk on every side, but they shall be cut off. Then the baffling of the attempts from the wicked enemies abroad is a mercy indeed to a nation, when it is accompanied with the restraint and reformation of the wicked at home, who are its more dangerous enemies.

CHAP. II.

We now come closer to Nineveh, that great city; she took not warning by the destruction of her armies, and the fall of her king, and therefore may expect, since she persists in her enmity to God, that he will proceed in his enemies' way; for he foretold, I the approver of the enemy that should destroy Nineveh, and the terror of his military preparations, v. 1-5. II. The taking of the city, v. 6. III. The captivity of the queen, the flight of the inhabitants, the seizing of all its wealth, and the consternation it should be in, v. 7-10. IV. All this is run up to its true causes, their sinning against God, and God's appearing against them, v. 11-13. All things, he concludes with, are connected with the fall of his reign, in conjunction with Gycaxares, or Ashasurus, king of the Medes, conquered Nineveh, and made himself master of the Assyrian monarchy.

1. He that dasheth in pieces is come up before thy face: keep the munition, watch the way, make thy loins strong, for thy power mightily. 2. For the Lord hath turned away the excellency of Jacob, as the excellency of Israel: for the emitters have emptied them out, and marred their vine branches. 3. The shield of his mighty men is made red, the valiant men are in scarlet: the chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation, and the fir-trees shall be terribly shaken. 4. The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways: they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings. 5. He shall recount his worthies: they shall stumble in their walk; they shall make haste to the wall thereof, and the defence shall be prepared. 6. The gates of the rivers shall be opened, and the palace shall be dissolved. 7. And Huzzab shall be led away captive, she shall be brought up, and her maids shall lead her as with the voice of doves, tabering upon their breasts. 8. But Nineveh is of old like a pool of water; yet they shall flee away. Stand, stand, shall they cry; but none shall look back. 9. Take ye the spoil of silver, take the spoil of gold; for there is none end of the store and glory out of all the pleasant furniture. 10. She is empty, and void, and the heart melteth, and the knees smite together, and much pain is in all loins, and the faces of them all gather blackness.

Here is, 1. An alarm of war sent to Nineveh, v. 1. The prophet speaks of it as just at hand, for it is neither doubtful nor far distant; "Look about thee, and see, he that dasheth in pieces is come before thy face."

2. Nebuchadnezzar is noted, and will be yet more so, for dashing nations in pieces, begins with thee, and will dissipate and disperse thee;" so some render the word. Babylon is called the hammer of the whole earth, Jer. i. 23. The attempt of Nebuchadnezzar upon Nineveh is public, bold, and daring; "He is come up before thy face, avowing his design to ruin thee; and therefore stand to thine arms, O Nineveh; keep the munition, secure thy towers and magazines, watch the way, set guards upon all the avenues to the city, make thy loins strong, encourage thy soldiers, animate thyself and them, fortify thy power mightily, as cities do when an enemy is advancing against them," (this is spoken ironically,) "do the utmost thou canst; yet though shalt not be able to put by the stroke of this judgment, for there is no counsel or strength against the Lord."
turn away the pride of Jacob, by the captivity of the two tribes, as he did the pride of Israel, by their captivity; he has done it, he has determined to do it, to bring emitters upon them, and the enemy that is to do it must begin with Nineveh, and reduce that first, and humble the pride of that. God is looking upon proud cities, and abusing them, even those that were nearest to him. Samaria is humbled, Jerusalem is to be humbled, and their pride broken. With what astonishment, with what deep concern, must the city, be brought down too? Emitters have emigrated the cities, and marred the vine-branches, in the country of Jacob and Israel; and must not the excellency of Nineveh, that is so much her pride, be turned away too?

3. A particular account given in of the terrors wherein the invading enemy shall appear against Nineveh, as they have been wont to work, as they have been wont to make him formidable. (1.) The shields of his mighty men are made red, and, probably, their other arms and array; as if they were already tinctured with the blood they had shed, or intended hereby to signify they would put all to the sword, they hung out a red flag, in token that they would give no quarter. (2.) The valiant men are in scarlet; not only red clothes, to incite them to greater venturings, enticed to the assault; but rich clothes, to intimate the wealth of the army, and that is the sinews of war. (3.) The chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation; when they are making their approaches, they shall fly as swift as lightning, the wheels shall strike fire upon the stones, and those that drive them shall drive furiously with a flaming indignation. They shall drive fiery torches with them in the open chariots, when they make their approach in the night, as Gideon’s soldiers carried lamps in their pitchers, to be both a guide to themselves, and a terror to their enemies, and with them to set all on fire, wherever they went. (4.) The fir-trees shall be terribly shaken; the great men of Nineveh, that overtop their neighbours, as the stately firs do the shrub; or, the very standing trees shall be made to shake by the violent concussions of the earth, which that great army shall cause. (5.) The chariots of war shall be very terrible; (v. 4.) They shall rage in the streets, that is, those that drive them shall rage, you would think the chariots themselves raged; they shall be so numerous, and drive with so much fury, that even in the streets, where one would think, there should be room enough, they shall just one another; and these iron chariots shall be made so bright, that in the beams of the sun they shall seem like torches in the night; they shall run like the lightnings, so swiftly, so furiously. Nebuchadnezzar’s commanders are here called his worthies, his gallants, (so the margin reads it,) his heroes; those he shall recount, and order them immediately and with authority to their respective posts, for he is entering upon action, is resolved to take the field immediately, and to open the campaign with the siege of Nineveh. His worthies shall remember, (so some read it,) they shall be mindful of the duty of their place, and the charge they have received, and shall thereby be made so intent upon their business, that they will do, immediately and without delay, to that which makes men move the faster, than good speed; they stumbile, but shall not fall; for they shall make haste to the wall thereof, shall open the trenches; and the defence, or the covered way, shall be prepared, (something to shelter them from the darts of the besieged,) and they shall so closely carry on the siege, and with so much vigour, that at length they shall lay waste the city, they shall lay waste Nineveh, which opened upon the river Tigris, (on which Nineveh was built,) shall be first forced by, or betrayed to, the enemy; and by those gates they shall enter. And then the palace shall be dissolved, either the king’s house, or the house of Nisroch his god; the same word signifies both a palace and a temple. When the God of heaven goes forth to contend with a people, neither the palaces nor their kings, neither the temples nor their gods, can protect and shelter them, but must all inevitably fall with them.

4. A prediction of the consequences of this, and it is easy to see what shall be the unusual those will be. (1.) The queen shall fall into the hands of the enemy; (v. 7.) Huzzab shall be led away captive; she that was established, (so some read it,) thought herself safe, because she was concealed, and shut up in secret, shall be discovered, (so the margin reads it,) and shall be led away captive, in greater disgrace than that of common prisoners; she shall be brought up, in a mock-state, and her maids of honour to be led after her, because she is weak and faint, not able to bear such frights and hardships, which are doubly hard and frightful to those that have not been used to them; they shall attend her, not to speak cheerfully to her and to encourage her, but murmuring and maiming themselves, as with the voice of doves, the doves of the valleys, (Ezek. vii. 16.) noted for their soft melodious sound, but make a horrid noise. They shall be taunting upon their breasts, beating their own breasts in grief and vexation, as if they were drumming upon them, for so the word signifies. (2.) The inhabitants, though numerous, shall none of them be able to make head against the invaders, or stand their ground; (v. 8.) Nineveh is of old like a pool of water, replenished with people as a pool with fish; and (v. 9.) now will it be no more; they shall be no more to make war, neither this part of the world, nor these people, shall be able to make war, neither this part of the world, nor these people, shall be able to make war, or hold their ground, (Ezek. xxviii. 15.) or as these waters with fish; it was long ago a populous city, in Jonah’s time there were 120,000 little children in it, (Jonah iv. 11.) and, ordinarily, cities and countries are increasing in their number every year; but though they have so many hands to be employed in the public service, yet they shall not be able to inspire one another with courage, but they shall flee away like coverts. Their commanders shall do what they can to animate them; they shall cry, ‘Stand, stand, have a good heart on it, and we shall do well enough;’ but none shall so much as look back; they shall not have the least spark of courage remaining, but every one shall think it his wisest course to make his best of the opportunity to escape; they shall not so much as look back, but shall run away by whatever means they can, and can dispirit the strongest and boldest, in the day of distress, so that they shall not be what one would expect from them, but like a pool of water, the water whereof is dried up and gone. (3.) The wealth of the city shall become a prey, and all its rich furniture shall fall into the hands of the victorious enemy; (v. 9.) they shall thus animate and excite one another to plunder, Take the spight of silver, take the spoil of gold; thus the officers shall stir up the soldiers to improve their opportunity; here are silver and gold enough for them, for there is no end of the store of money and plate. Nineveh, having been of old like a pool of water, has gathered a vast deal of mud; and abundance of glory it has out of all the pleasant furniture, all the vessels of ivory, whereof they have bade the rest; God, now a firey and a pride to the conquerors. Note, Those who prepare rainment as the clay, and heap up silver as the dust, know not who may put on the rainment, and divide the silver, Job xxxvi. 16, 17. Thus this rich city is empty, and void, and waste; v. 10. See the vanity of worldly wealth; instead of defending its owners, it does but expose them, and enable them to bring upon them more mischief. (4.) The soldiers and people shall have no heart to appear for the defence of the city. Their spirits shall melt away like wax before the fire, their knees shall smite together, (as Belshazzer's did in his agony, Dan. v. 6.) so that they shall not be able to stand their ground, no, not to make their escape; much pain shall be in all lions, as is the case in extreme frights, so that they shall not be able to hold up their backs. And the faxes of them all shall gather blackness, like that of a pot that is every day over the fire; so the lion's sight shall be dim. Note, Guilt in the conscience will fill men with terror in an evil day, and those who place their happiness in the wealth of this world, and set their hearts upon it, think themselves undone when their silver and their gold and their pleasant furniture are taken from them.

11. Where is the dwelling of the lions, and the feeding-place of the young lions, where the lion, even the old lion, walked, and the lion's whelp, and none made them afraid? 12. The lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, and strangled for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey and his dens with ravin. 13. Behold I am against thee, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will burn their chariots in the smoke, and the sword shall devour thy young lions; and I will cut off thy prey from the earth, and the voice of thy messengers shall no more be heard.

Here we have Nineveh's ruin.
1. Triumphed in by its neighbours, who now remember against it all the oppressions and abuse of power it had been guilty of in its pomp and prosperity; (v. 11, 12.) Where is the dwelling of the lions? It is gone, there appears no remnants, no footstep of it; Where is the feeding-place of the young lions, where they glutted themselves with prey; The princes of Nineveh had been as lions, as beasts of prey; cruel tyrants are no better, nay, in this respect much worse—that, being men, humanity is expected from them; nay, if they were indeed lions, they would not prey upon those of their own kind; Sewis inter se conventi urae—Fierce bears agree together. But as the princes have been cruel of lions; they walked in Nineveh as a lion in the woods, and none made them afraid; every one stood in awe of them, and they were under no apprehensions of danger from any; though no body loved them, every body feared them, and that was all they desired; Oderint, dum mutuant—Let them hate, so that they do but fear. The king himself, and every prince, made it their business, by all the arts of violence and extortion, to enrich himself, and raise his family; he did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, (and no little would be enough for them,) and he strangled for his lionesses, killed all that came near him, and seized what they had for his children, for his wives and concubines, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin, as lions are wont to do. Note, Many make it their excuse for their rapine and injustice, that they have wives and children to provide for, whereas what is so got will never do them any good; they that fear the Lord, and get what they have honestly, shall not want a competency for themselves and theirs, verily they shall be fed, when the young lions, though dens and holes were filled with prey and game for them, shall lack and suffer hunger, Ps. xxxiv. 10.
2. It is avowed by the righteous Judge of heaven and earth, it is his doing, and let all the world take notice that it is so; (v. 13.) Behold, I am against thee, saith the Lord of hosts. And what good can hosts do for her in her defence, when the Lord of hosts is against her for her destruction? The oppressors in Nineveh thought they only set their neighbours against them, who were not a match for them, and whom they could easily overpower; but it proved they set God against them, who is, and will be, the Assurer of right, and the Avenger of wrong. God is against the princes of Nineveh, and then, (1.) These military preparations will stand them in no stead; I will burn their chariots in the smoke; he does not say in the fire, but in contempt of them, the very smoke of God's indignation shall serve to burn their chariots; they shall be consumed as soon as the fire of his indignation is kindled, while as yet it does but smoke, and not flame out. Or, The drivers of the chariot heard the noise of the sword and stifled with the smoke; then the chariots of their glory shall be the shame of their families, Isa. xxi. 18. (2.) Their children, the hopes of their families, shall be cut off; The sword shall devour the young lions, whom they were so solicitous to provide for by oppression and extortion. Note, It is just with God to deprive those of their children, which is all in all, who comfort in vain their children with sinful courses to enrich them, and (as has been said of some) damn their souls to make their sons gentlemen. (3.) The wealth they have heaped up by fraud and violence, shall neither be enjoyed by them, nor employed for them; I will cut off thy prey from the earth; not only thou shalt not be the better for it, but they shall eat it, and make use of it; they shall give an account to the Lord for the mischief they have done, and for the disfigurement of their beauty, which was remembered against Nineveh long after. Those are not worthy to be heard again that have once spoken reproachfully of God.

CHAP. III.
This chapter goes on with the burden of Nineveh, and concludes it. 1. The sins of that great city are charged upon it, murder, (v. 1.) whoredom and witchcraft, (v. 4.) and a general extent of wickedness, v. 10. Here again are here threatened against it, blood for blood, (v. 2, 5) and shame for shameful sins, v. 5-7. III. Instances are given of the like desolations brought upon other places for similar sins, v. 8-19. IV. The thoughts and confessions of all those things which they depended upon, and put confidence in, is foretold, v. 12-19.

1. Woe to the bloody city! it is all full of lies and robbery; the prey departeth not; 2. The noise of a whip, and the noise of the rattling of the wheels, and of the prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. 3. The horseman lifteth up both the bright sword and the glittering spear: and there is a multitude of slain, and a great number of carcases; and there is none end of their corpses; they stumble upon their corpses: 4. Because of the multitude of the whoredoms of the well-favoured harlot, the mistress of witchcrafts, that selleth nations through her whoredoms, and families through her witchcrafts. 5. Behold, I am against thee, saith the Lord of hosts; and I will discover thy skirts upon thy face, and I will shew the nations thy nakedness, and the kingdoms thy shame. 6. And I will cast abominable filth upon thee, and make thee vile, and will set thee as a gazzing-stock. 7. And it shall come to pass, that all they that look upon thee shall flee from thee, and say, Nineveh is laid waste: who will bemoan her? whence shall I seek comforters for thee?

Here is,

I. Nineveh arraigned and indicted; it is a high charge: 1 is here drawn up against that great city, and neither her numbers nor her grandeur shall secure her from prosecution. 1. It is a city of blood, in which a great deal of innocent blood is shed, either by unrighteous war, or under colour and pretence of public justice; the inhumanity and barbarity of murders to go unpunished; for this the righteous God will make inquisition. 2. It is all full of lies, truth is banished from among them, there is no such thing as honesty, one knows not whom to believe, nor whom to trust. 3. It is all full of robbery and rapine; no man cares what mischief he does, nor to whom he does it; The prey departeth not, they never know when, or how, they have been spied and imposumion. They shed blood, and told lies, in pursuit of the prey, that they might enrich themselves. 4. There is a multitude of whoredoms in it, that is, idolatries, spiritual whoredoms, by which she defiled herself, and to which she seduced the neighbouring nations, as a well-favoured harlot, and sold, and ruined nations through her whoredoms. 5. She is a mistress of witchcrafts, and by them she sells families, v. 4. That which Nineveh aimed at was, a universal monarchy, to be the metropolis of the world, and to have all her neighbours under her feet; to compass this, she used not only arms, but arts, compelling some, but deluding others, into subjection to her, and wheeling them as a harlot by her charms, to lay their necks under her yoke, suggesting to them that it would be for their advantage; she courted them to join with her in her idolatrous rites, to tie them the faster to her interests; and made use of her wealth, power, and greatness, to draw people into alliances with her, by which she gained advantages over them, and made a hand of them. These were the whoredoms, like those of Tyre, Isa. xxiii. 15, 17. These were her witchcrafts, with which she unaccountably gained dominion. And for this, it is that God has a quarrel with her, who, having made of one blood all nations of men, never designed one to be a nation of tyrants, and another of slaves, and who claims it as his prerogative to be universal Monarch.

II. Nineveh condemned to ruin, upon this indictment. Wo to this bloody city! v. 1. See what this wo is.

Nineveh had with her cruelties been a terror and destruction to others, and therefore destruction and terror shall be brought upon her. Those that are for overthrowing all that come in their way, will, sooner or later, meet with their match. (1.) Hear the alarm with which Nineveh shall be terrified, v. 2. It is a formidable army that advances against it, you may hear them at a distance, the noise maketh already, driving the chariot-horses with fury; you may hear the noise of the rattling of the wheels, the prancing of the horses, and the jumming chariots; the very noise is frightful, but much more so when they know that all this force is coming with all this speed against them, and they are not able to make head against it. (2.) See the slaughter with which Nineveh shall be laid waste, v. 3. the sword drawn, with which execution shall be done, the bright sword lifted up, and the glittering spear, the dazzling brightness of which is very terrible to those whom they are lifted up against. Such as have made these, when they are commissioned to slay; There is a great number of carcasses, for the slain of the land shall be many, there is no end of their corpses, there is such a multitude of slain, that it is vain to go about to take the number of them, they lie so thick, that passengers are ready to stumble upon their corpses at every step. The destruction of Semach Hebrew's example, which was justly observed, but which is perhaps looked upon here as a figure of the like destruction that should afterwards be in Nineveh; for they that will not take warning by judgments at a distance, shall have them come nearer.

2. Nineveh had with her whoredoms and witchcrafts drawn others to shameful wickedness, and therefore God will lead her with shame and contempt; v. 5. The Lord of hosts is against her, and then she shall be exposed to the highest degree of disgrace and ignominy, shall not only lose all her charms, but shall be made to appear very odious. When it shall be seen that while she counted her neighbours, it was with design to ruin their liberty and property, when all her wicked arts shall be brought to light, then her shame is discovered to nations. When her blood and slaughter, her rapine, and filth, and her vain towering hopes of an absolute and universal dominion brought to nought, and she appears not to have been so strong and considerable as she would have been thought to be, then to see the nakedness of thy land do they come, and it appears ridiculous. Then do they cast abominable filth upon her, as upon a carted strumpet, and make her vile as the offscouring of all things that great city, which all the nations had made court to, and coveted an alliance with, is become a gazzing-stock, a laughing-stock. They that formerly looked upon her, and fled to her, in hopes of protection from her, now look upon her, and flee from her, for fear of being ruined by her. Note, Those that abuse their honour and interest, will justly be disgraced and abandoned, and, because miserable, will be made contemptible, and thereby be made more miserable. When Nineveh is laid waste, who will bemoan her? Her trouble will be so great, and her sense of it so deep, as not to admit of relief from sympathy, or any comforting considerations; or, if it would, none shall do any such good office; Whence shall I seek comforters for thee? Note, Those that showed no pity in the day of their power, can expect to that day no pity in the day of their fall. When those about Nineveh, that had been deceived by her wiles, come to be undeceived in her ruin, every one shall insult over her, and none bemoan her. This was Nineveh's fate, when she was made a spectacle or gazzing-stock. Note, The greater men's show was in the day of their abused prosperity, the greater will their shame be in the day of their fall. I will make thee an example; so Drusius reads it. Note, When proud sinners are humbled and brought down, it is designed that others should take example by them not to lift up themselves in security and insolence, when they prosper in the world.

3. Art thou better than populous No, that was situate among the rivers, that had the waters round about it, whose rampart was the sea, and her wall was from the sea? 9. Ethiopia and Egypt were her strength, and it was infinite; Put and Lubim were thy helpers. 10. Yet was she carried away, she went into captivity: her young children also were dashed in pieces at the top of all the streets; and they cast lots for her honourable men, and all her great men were bound in chains. 11. Thou also shalt be drunken; thou shalt be lied, thou also shalt seek strength because of the enemy. 12. All thy strong holds shall be like fig-trees with the first-ripe figs: if they be shaken, they shall even fall into the mouth of the eater. 13. Behold, thy people in the midst of thee are women: the gates of thy land shall be set wide open unto thine enemies: the fire shall devour thy bars. 14. Draw thee waters for the siege, fortify thy strong holds: go into clay, and tread the mortar, make strong the brick-kiln. 15. There shall the fire devour thee; the sword shall cut thee off; it shall eat thee up like the canker-worm: make thyself many as the canker-worm, make thyself many as the locusts. 16. Thou hast multiplied thy merchants above the stars of heaven: the canker-worm pollcth, and fleeth away.

17. Thy crowned are as the locusts, and thy captains as the great grasshoppers, which camp in the hedges in the cold day; but when the sun ariseth they flee away, and their place is not known where they are. 18. Thy shepherd slumbereth, O king of Assyria; thy nobles shall dwell in the dust: thy people is scattered upon the mountains, and no man gathereth them. 19. There is no healing of thy bruise; thy wound is grievous: all that hear the bruit of thee shall clap the hands over thee: for upon whom hath not thy wickedness passed continually?

Nineveh has been told that God is against her, and then none can be for her, to stand her in any stead; yet she sets God himself at defiance, and his power and justice, and says, I shall have peace. Threatened folks live long; therefore here the prophet largely shows how vain her confidences would prove, and insufficient to ward off the judgments of God.

To convince him of this,

1. He shows them that other places, which had been as strong and as secure as they, could not keep their ground against the judgments of God. Nineveh shall fall unpitied and unforgiven, (for merciless conforters will they prove, who speak peace to those on whom God will fasten trouble,) and she shall not be able to lift herself; {see 1. vii. 12.)} so to Nineveh he said, (Jer. xlix. 14.) No Ammon, so some read it, both there and here. We read of it, Ezek. xxx. 14.—16. Some think it was Dibopolis, others Alexandria. As God said to Jerusalem, Go, see what I did to Sodom; (Jer. vii. 19.) so to Nineveh that great city, Go, see what I did to populous No. Note, It will help to keep us in a holy fear of the judgments of God, to consider that we are not better than those that have fallen under those judgments before us. We deserve them as much, and are as little able to grapple with them. This also should help to reconcile us to afflictions. Are we better than such and such, who were in like manner exer-ised? Nay, were not they better than we, and less likely to be afflicted? Now concerning No, observe,

1. How firm her standing seemed to be, v. 8. She was fortified both by nature and art, was situata among the rivers. Nile, in several branches, not only watered her fields, but graced her wall; her rainfart was the sea, the lake of Mareotis, an Egyptian sea, like the sea of Tiberias; her wall was from the sea, it was fenced with a wall which was thought to make the place impregnable; it was also supported by its interests and alliances abroad, v. 9. Ethiopia, of Arabia, was her strength, either by the wealth brought to her in a great quantity, or by the army of forces employed for military service; the whole country of Egypt also contributed to the strength of this populous city; so that it was infinite, and there was no end of it; (so it might be rendered;) she set no bounds to her ambition, and knew no end of her wealth and strength; people flocked to her endlessly, and she thought there never would be any end of it; but it is God's prerogative to be infinite. Put and Labim were thy helpers, two neighbouring countries of Africa, Mauritania, and Libya, this, is Libya Cyrenica, a country that Egypt had much dependence upon. No, thus helped, seemed to sit as a queen, and was not likely to see any sorrow. But,

2. See how fatal her fall proved to be; (v. 10.) Yet was she not cast away, and her strength failed her; even she that was so strong, so secure, yet went into captivity. This refers to some destruction of that city, which was then well known, and probably, fresh in memory, though not recorded in history; for the destruction of it by Nebuchadnezzar, (if we should understand this prophetically,) could not be made an example to Nineveh; for the reducing of Nineveh to captivity, and that of Egypt one of the last. The strength and grandeur of that great city could not be its protection from military execution; (1.) Not from that which was most barbarous; for her young children had no compasion showed them, but were dashed in pieces at the top of all the streets by the merciless conquerors. (2.) Not from that which was most inglorious and disgraceful; they cast lots for her honourable men that were made prisoners of war, who should have them for their slaves. So many had they of them, that they knew not what to do with them, but they made sport with throwing dice for them; all her great men, that used to be adorned on state-days with chains of gold, were now bound in chains of iron; they were finned off or handcuffed, (so the word,) or, rather, their hands were so bound that they could not only as slaves, but as condemned malefactors. What a mortification was this to populous No, to have her honourable men and great men, that were her pride and confidence, thus abused! Now hence he infers against Nineveh, (v. 11.) They also shall be intoxicated, inebriated, thou also shall reel and stagger as drunk with the cup of the Lord's fury; that is, that the Lord shall draw her from her place, and cast her down to her place, (Is. 28. 7.) I should fall and rise no more. The cup shall go round, and come to thy turn, O Nineveh, to drink of at last, and shall be to thee as the waters of jealousy.

11. He shows them that all those things which they reposed a confidence in, should fail them.

1. Did the men of Nineveh trust to their own magnanimity, or to their murmuring, or to their的设计, they would sink and fall them; They shall be hid, shall abscond for shame, being in disgrace; abscond for fear, being in distress and danger, and not able to face the enemies; because of whose strength and terror, having no strength of their own, they shall seek strength, shall come sneaking to their neighbours, to beg their assistance in a time of need. Thus God can cut off the spirit of princes, and take away their heart.
2. Did they depend upon their barrier, the gar- risons and strong holds they had, which were regu- larly provided by the prudent builders; behind these were the quiet but paper walls, and like the first-rate figs, which, if you give the tree but a little shake, will fall into the mouth of the eater that gapes for them; so easily will their strong holds be made to surren- der to the advancing enemy, upon the first sum- mons, v. 12. Note, Strong holds, even the strongest, are no fence against the judgments of God, when their vanities are so vainly princes, and the Upon the field where there is any thing to be had, but they are gone when all is gone. These that men have got by, they do not care to lose by. Nineveh’s merchants bid her farewell in her distress. Riches themselves are as the canker-worms, which on a sudden fly away as the eagle toward heaven, Prov. xxviii. 5.

4. Did they put a confidence in the strength of their gates? In the strength of their fortifications will those be against the force of the judgments of God? v. 13. The gates of thy land shall be set wide open unto thine enemies, the gates of thy rivers, (ch. ii. 6.) the flood-gates, or the passes and avenues, by which the enemy would make his entrance into the country; or the gates of the cities; these, though ever so strong and well guarded, shall not answer their end; the fire shall devour thy bars, the bars of thy gates, and then they shall fly open.

5. Did they put a confidence in their king and princes? They should do them no service; (v. 17.) Thy crowned are as the locusts; those that had pomp and power, as crowned heads, were enfeebled, and had no power to make resistance, when the enemy came in like a flood. Thy captains, that should lead the forces into the field, are but indeed, and hold great, but they are as the great grasshoppers, the maximum quad sic—the largest specimens of that species; still they are but grasshoppers, worthless things, that can do no service. They camp in the hedges in the cold day, the cold weather; but when the sun rises, they flee away, and are gone nobody knows whither. So these mercenary soldiers that lay slumbering about Nineveh, when trouble arises, flee away, and shift for their own safety; the hirpling flies, because he is a hirling. The king of Assyria is told, and it is a shame he needs to be told it, (who might observe it himself,) that his shep- herds number; they have no life or spirit to appear for the flock, and are very remiss in the discharge of the duty of their place, and the trust reposed in them; Thy nobles shall dwell in the dust, and be buried in silence.

6. Did they hope that they should yet recover themselves, and rally again? In this also they should be disappointed; for when the shepherds are smitten, the sheep are scattered, the people are dis- persed upon the mountains, and no man gathers them, nor will they ever come together of them- selves; for they are but the sheep of the flock, and if they shall do. The judgment they are under is as a wound, and it is incurable; there is no relief for it, no heal- ing of thy bruises, no possibility that the wound, which is so grievous and painful to thee, should be so much as skinned over; thy case is desperate, (v. 19.) and thy neighbours, instead of lending a hand to help thee, shall clop their hands over thee, and triumph in thy fall; and the reason is, because they are disposed to do so. Upon whom has not thy wickedness paused continually? Thou hast been always doing mis- chief to those about thee, there is none of them but what thou hast abused and insulted; and therefore they shall be so far from pitying thee, that they shall be glad to see thee reckoned with. Note, Those that have been abusive to their neighbours, till, one to another, find it come to them; they are but preparing enemies to themselves against their day comes to fall; and these that dare not lay hands on them themselves, will clop their hands over them, and upbraid them with their former wickedness, for which they are now well enough served, and paid in their own coin. The troubles shall be troubled, will be the burneth of many, as here, the burneth of Nineveh.

WITH

OF THE PROPHECY OF

HABAKKUK.

It is a very foolish fancy of some of the Jewish rabbinists, that this prophet was the son of the Shunammite woman, that was at first miraculously given, and afterward raised to life, by Elisha; (2 Kings 4.) as they say also that the prophet Jonah was the son of the widow of Zarephath, which Elijah raised to life. It is a more probable conjecture of their modern chroniclers, that he lived and prophesied in the reign of King Manasseh, when wickedness abounded, and destruction was hastening on; destruction by the Chaldæans, whom this prophet mentions as the instruments of God’s judgments; and Manasseh was himself carried to Babylon, as an earnest of what should come afterward. In the apocryphal story of Bel and the Dragon, mention is made of Habakkuk the prophet in the land of Judah, who was carried thence by an angel to Babylon, to feed Daniel in the den; those who give credit to that story, take pains to reconcile our prophet’s living before the captivity, and foretelling it, with that. Huetius thinks that that was another of the same name, a prophet, this is of the tribe of Simeon, that of Levi; others, that he lived so long as to the end of the captivity, though he prophesied of it before it came. And some have imagined that Habakkuk’s feeding Daniel in the den, is to be understood mystically, that Daniel then lived by faith, as Habakkuk had said the just should do; He was fed by that word, Hab. ii. 4. The prophecy of this book is a mixture of the prophet’s addresses to God in the people’s name, and to the people in God’s name; for it is the office of the prophets to carry messages both ways. We have in it a lively representation of the intercourse and communion between a gracious God and a gracious soul. The whole refers particularly to the invasion of the land of Judah by the Chaldæans, which brought spoil upon the people of God, a just punishment of the spoil they had been guilty of among themselves; but it is of general use, especially to help us through that great temptation with which good men have in all ages been exercised, arising from the power and prosperity of the wicked, and the sufferings of the righteous by it.

HABAKKUK, I.

CHAP. I.

In this chapter, I. The prophet complains to God of the violence done by the abuse of the sword of justice among his own people, and the hardships thereby put upon many good people, v. 1–4. II. God by him foretells the punishment of that abuse of power by the sword of war, and the desolations which the army of the Chaldæans should make upon them, v. 5–11. III. Then the prophet complains of that too, and is grieved that the Chaldæans prevail so far; (v. 12–17.) so that he scarcely knows which is more to be lamented, the sin, or the punishment of it, for in both many harmless, good people are very great sufferers. It is well that there is a day of judgment, and a future state; for us, in which it shall be eternally well with all the righteous, and with them only, and ill with all the wicked, and them only; so the present seeming disorders of providence shall be set to rights, and there will remain no matter of complaint whatsoever.

1. THE burden which Habakkuk the prophet did see. 2. O Lord, how long shall I cry, and thou wilt not hear! even cry out unto thee of violence, and thou wilt not save! 3. Why dost thou shew me iniquity, and cause me to behold grievance? for spoiling and violence are before me: and there are that raise up strife and contention. 4. Therefore the law is slackened, and judgment doth never go forth: for the wicked doth compass about the righteous; therefore wrong judgment proceedeth.

We are told, in the title of this book, (which we have, v. 1.) that the prophet was a prophet; man divinely inspired and commissioned, which is enough; if that be so, no meted out and concerning his tribulation, or, the place of his birth: we may also told that the book itself is the burden which he saw; he was as sure of the truth of it as if he had seen it with his bodily eyes already accomplished.

Here, in these verses, the prophet sadly laments the iniquity of the times, as one sensitively touched with grief for the lamentable decay of religion and righteousness. It is a very melancholy complaint which is not without much to be said for God.

1. That no man could call what he had his own; but, in defiance of the most sacred laws of property and equity, he that had power on his side, had what he had a mind to; though he had no right on his side: the land was full of violence, as the old world was, Gen. vi. 11. The prophet cries out of violence; (v. 2.) iniquity and grievance, spoil and violence, are the marks of those whose voices are heard, and who are not only not denounced, but are praised and exalted by those of the opposed. Note, Doing wrong to harmless people, as it is an iniquity in itself, so it is a great grievance to all that are concerned for God's people, Jerusalem, who sigh and cry for abominations of this kind. He complains, (v. 4.) that the wicked doth compass about the righteous. One honest man, one honest cause, shall have enemies hang in their hand on every side; many wicked men, in conference against it, run them down; nay, one wicked man (for it is singular) with so many various arts of mischief sets upon a righteous man, that he perfectly besieges him.

2. That the kingdom was broken into parties and factions, that were continually biting and devouring one another. This is a lamentation to all the sons of peace; There are that raise up strife and contention, (v. 3.) that foment divisions, wide breaches, incense men against one another, and sow discord among brethren, by doing the work of him that is the accuser of the brethren. Strifes and contentions that have been laid asleep, and begun to be forgotten, they awake, and industriously raise up again, and blow up the marks that were hid under the ashes. And it blessed are the peace-makers, cursed are such peace-breakers, that make parties, and so make mischief that spreads further, and lasts longer, than they can imagine. It is sad to see had men warming their hands at those flames which are devouring all that is good in a nation, and stirring up the fire too.

3. That the torrent of violence and strife ran so strong, it bid defiance to the restraints and regulations of laws, and the administration of justice, v. 4. Because God did not appear against them, nobody else would, therefore the law is slackened, it is silent, it breathes not, its pulse beats not, (so, it is said, the word signifies,) it intermits, and judgment does not go forth as it should; no cognizance is taken of those crimes, no justice done upon the criminals; and yet, according to the law, it was the business of the courts of equity, the righteous shall be condemned, and the wicked justified, so that the remedy proves the worst disease. The legislative power takes no care to supply the deficiencies of the law, for the obviating of those growing, threatening mischief; the executive power takes no care to answer the good intentions of the laws that are made; in the storm of justice is dried up by violence, and has no scent of course.

4. That all this was open and public, and impudently avowed; it was barefaced. The prophet complains that this iniquity was shewed him, he beheld it which way soever he turned his eyes, nor could he look off it; spoil and violence are before me. Note, The abounding wickedness in a nation is a very great eye-sore to good people, and if they did not see it, they could not believe it to be so bad as it is. Solomon often complains of the vexation of this kind, which he saw under the sun; and the prophet with all reason and justly might not see it, Jer. ix. 2. But then must we needs go out of the world, which therefore we should long to do, that we may remove to that world where honesty and love reign eternally, and no spoiling and violence shall be before us.

5. That he complained of this to God, but could not obtain a redress of those grievances; "Lord," says he, "why dost thou show me iniquity? Why hast thou cast my lot in a time and place when and where it is to be seen, and why do I continue to sojourn in Mesch and Kedar? I cry to thee of this violence, I cry aloud, I have cried long; but thou wilt not hear, thou wilt not save; thou dost not take vengeance on the oppressors, nor do justice to the oppressed, as if thine arm were shortened, or thine hand heavy, so that thou dost not punish the wickedness of the wicked, nay, and to countenance it, by suffering them to prosper in their wickedness, it shocks the faith of good men, and proves a sore temptation to them to say, We have cleansed our hearts in vain, (Ps. lxxxii. 13.) and hardens those in impiety, who say, God has forsaken the earth. We must not think it strange, if wickedness be suffered to prevail far, and prosper long. God has reasons, and we are sure they are good reasons, both for the reprobates of bad men, and the rebukes of good men; and therefore, though we plead with him, and humbly expostulate concerning his judgments, yet we must say, "He is wise, and righteous, and good, in all; and must believe the day will come, though it may be long deferred, when the cry of sin will be heard against those that do wrong, and the cry of prayer for those that suffer it.

5. Behold ye among the heathen, and regard, and wonder marvellously; for I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe, though it be told you. 6. For, lo, I raise up the Chaldeans, that bitter and nasty nation, which shall march through the breadth of the land, to possess the dwelling-places that are not theirs. 7. They are terrible and dreadful: their judgment and their dignity shall proceed of themselves. 8. Their horses also are swifter than the leopards, and are more fierce than the evening wolves: and their horsemen shall spread themselves, and their horsemen shall come from far; they shall fly as the eagle that hasteth to eat. 9. They shall come all for violence: their faces shall sup up as the east wind, and they shall gather the captivity as the sand. 10. And they shall scoff at the kings, and the princes shall be a scorn unto them: they shall deride every strong hold; for they shall heap dust, and take it. 11. Then shall his mind change, and he shall pass over, and offend, imputing this his power unto his god.
We have here an answer to the prophet's complaint, giving him assurance that, though God bore long, he would not bear always, with this provoking people; for the day of vengeance was in his heart, and he meant it. They shall act upon them. The Lord and judge shall act upon them. 1. A public punishment, which shall be beheaded and regarded among the heathen, which the neighbouring nations shall take notice of, and stand amazed at, see Deut. xxxix. 24, 25. This will aggravate the desolations of Israel, that they will thereby be made a spectacle to the world. 2. An amazing punishment, so strange and surprising, and so much out of the common road of Providence, that it shall not be paralleled among the heathen, shall be sorer and heavier than what God has usually inflicted upon the nations that know him not; nay, it shall not be credited, even by those that had the prediction of it from God, before it comes, or the report of it from those that were eye-witnesses of it, when the child of God believes it, though it be told you; it will be thought incredible that so many judgments should combine in one, and every circumstance so strangely concur to enforce and aggravate it, that so great, and potent a nation should be so reduced and broken, that God should deal so severely with a people that had been taken into the bond of the covenant, and that he had done so much for; and this is a degree of punishment in the word, cannot but be the astonishment of all about them. 3. A speedy punishment; I will work a work in your days, now quickly; this generation shall not pass till the judgment threatened be accomplished. The sins of former days shall be reckoned for in your days; for now the measure of the iniquity is full, Matt. xxiii. 35. 4. It shall be a punishment in which much of the hand of God shall appear; it shall be a work of his own working, so that all who see it shall say, This is the Lord's doing; and it will be found a fearful thing to fall into his hands, wo to those whom he takes to task. 5. It shall be such a punishment as will typify the destruction to be brought upon the despisers of Christ and his gospel, for to that these words are applied, Acts xii. 5. It shall be a type of the destruction of Babylon, greatly, and often. The ruin of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans for their idolatry, was a figure of their ruin by the Romans for rejecting Christ and his gospel, and it is a very marvellous thing, and almost incredible. Is there not a strange punishment to the workers of iniquity? 6. The sentence itself is very dreadful and particular; (v. 6.) Lo, I raise up the Chaldeans. There were those that raised up a great deal of strife and contention among them, which was their sin; and now God will raise up the Chaldeans against them, who shall strive and contend with them, which shall be their punishment. Note, When God's professing people quarrel among themselves, quarrel at and desire one another, it is just with God to bring the common enemy upon them, that shall make peace by making an universal devastation. The contending parties in Jerusalem were inveigle one against another, when the Romans came, and took away their place and nation. The Chaldeans shall be the instruments of the destruction threatened, who, though themselves acting unrighteously, shall execute the righteousness of the Lord, and punish the unrighteousness of Israel. Now here we have, 1. A description of the people that shall be raised up against Israel, to be a scourge to them. (1.) They are a bitter and hasty nation, cruel and fierce, and what they do is done with violence and fury; they are precipitate in their counsels, vehement in their passion, who, given up to anger, and will not consider. Do the despisers of Christ make capital upon their great men to make a stand, and with their conduct and courage to give check to the victorious arms of the Chaldeans? Alas, they will make nothing of them. They shall scoff (he shall, so is it in the original, meaning Nebuchadnezzer, who, being puffed up with his successes, shall scoff) at the kings and commanders of the forces that think to make head against him; and the princes shall be a scorn to them, unequal a match shall they appear to be. Do they depend upon their garrisons and fortified towns? He shall deride every strong hold, for to him it shall be weak, and he shall heap dust, and take it; a little soil, thrown up for ramparts, shall serve to give him all the advantage against them that he can make use of the forces, a jest of them, and a sport of taking them. (5.) By all this he shall be puffed up with an intolerable pride, which shall be his destruction; (v. 11.) Then shall his mind change for the worse. The Spirit both of the people and of the king shall grow more haughty and insolent. Those that will not be content with their own rights, will not be content when they have made themselves masters of other people’s rights too; but as the condition rises, the mind rises too; this victorious king shall pass over all the bounds of reason, equity, and modesty; and break through all their bonds, and thereby he shall offend, shall make God His Enemy, and so prepare ruin for himself by imputing this his power to his god, whereas he had it from the God of Israel. Bel and Marduk, the Chaldean gods, they gave the glory of their successes; they were hardened in their idolatry, and blasphemously argued, that because they had conquered Israel, their gods were too strong for the God of Israel. Note, It is a great offence (and the common offence of proud people) to take that glory to ourselves, or give it to gods of our own making, which is due to the living and true God only. These closing words of the sentence give a glimpse of comfort to the afflicted people of God; it is to be hoped that they will change their minds, and grow better, and ripe for deliverance; and they did so. However their enemies will change their minds, and grow worse, and ripe for destruction, which will inevitably come in God’s due time; for a haughty spirit, lifted up against God, goes before a fall.

12. Art thou not from everlasting, O Lord my God, my Holy One? we shall not die. O Lord, thou hast ordained them for judgment; and, O mighty God, thou hast established them for correction. 13. Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and cannot look on iniquity: wherefore lookest thou upon them that deal treacherously, and holdest thy tongue when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he? 14. And maketh men as the fishes of the sea, as the creeping things, that have no ruler over them? 15. They take up all of them with the angle, they catch them in their net, and gather them in their drag; therefore they rejoice and are glad. 16. Therefore they sacrifice unto their net, and burn incense unto their drag; because by them their portion is fat, and their meat plentiful. 17. Shall they therefore empty their net, and not care continually to slay the nations?

The prophet, having received of the Lord that which he was to deliver to the people, now turns to God, and again addresses himself to him for the ease of his own mind under the burthen which he saw. And still he is full of complaints. If he look about him, he sees nothing but violence done by Israel; if he look before him, he sees nothing but violence done against Israel, and it is hard to say which is the more melancholy sight: his thoughts of both he pears out before the Lord. It is our duty to be affected both with the iniquities and with the calamities of the church of God, and of the times and places wherein we live; but we must take heed lest we grow feverish in our resentments, and carry them too far, so as to entertain any hard thoughts of God, and to think that he seemeth not to be as he is: The world is bad, and always was so, and will be so; it is out of our power to mend it; but we are sure that God governs the world, and will bring glory to himself out of all, and therefore we must resolve to make the best of it, must be ourselves better, and long for the better world. The prospect of the prevalence of the Chaldeans drives the prophet to his knees, and he takes the liberty to plead with God concerning it. In his plea we may observe,

1. The truths which he lays down, which he resolves to abide by, and with which he endeavours to comfort himself and his friends, under the growing, threatening power of the Chaldeans; and they will furnish us with pleasing considerations for our support in the like case.

2. How severe, yet God is the Lord our God, and our Holy One. The victorious Chaldeans impute their power to their idols, but we are taught to tell them that the God of Israel is the true God, the living God, Jer. x. 10, 11. (1.) He is Jehovah, the Fountain of all being, power, and perfection; our Rock is not as theirs. (2.) He is my God. He speaks in the people’s name; every Israelite may say, "He is mine; though we are sore broken, and all this is come upon us, yet have we not forgotten the name of our God, nor quitted our relation to him, yet have we not disowned him, nor hath he disowned us, Ps. xlv. 17. We are an offending people, he is an offended God, yet he is ours and we will not entertain any hard thoughts of him or of his service, for all this." (3.) He is my Holy One; this intimates that the prophet loved God as a holy God, and loved him for his holiness. "He is mine, because he is a Holy One; and therefore he will be my Sanctifier and my Saviour, because he is my Holy One. Men are unholy, but my God is holy." 2. Our God is from everlasting. This he pleads with him; Art thou not from everlasting, O Lord my God? It is matter of great and continual comfort to God’s people, under the troubles of this present life, that their God is from everlasting. This speaks, (1.) The eternity of his nature; if he is from everlasting, he will be to everlasting, and we must have recourse to this first principle, when things seen, which are temporal, are discouraging, that we have hope and help sufficient in a God that is not seen, that is eternal; "Art thou not from everlasting, and then wilt thou not make bare thine everlasting arms in public judgment, in punishment of evil, and make unto thyself an everlasting name?" (2.) The antiquity of his covenant; "Art thou not from old, a God in covenant with thy people;" (so some understand it;) "and hast thou not done great things for them in the days of old, which we have heard with our ears, and which our fathers have told us of; and art thou not God, and they shall not perish? Thou art God, and changest not." 3. While the world stands, God will have a church in it. Thou art from everlasting, and then we shall not die. The Israel of God shall not be extirpated, nor the name of Israel blotted out, though it may sometimes seem to be very near it; like the apostle’s, (2 Cor. vi. 9.) chastened, and not killed; chastened sore, but not delivered over to death, Ps. cxviii. 18. See how the prophet infers the perpetuity of the church from the eternity of God; for Christ has said, Because I live, and therefore I die not, John xiv. 19. He is the Rock upon which the church is so firmly built, that the gates of hell shall not, cannot, prevail against it. We shall not die.

4. Whatever the enemies of the church may do against her, it is according to the counsel of God, and is designed and directed for wise and holy ends; Therefore, O Lord, though I die, yet will I trust in thee, Ps. iv. 6. It was God that gave the Chaldeans their power, made them a formidable people, and in his counsel determined what they should do, nor had they any power against his Israel, but what was given them from above. He gave them their commission to take the spoil, and to take the prey, Is. x. 6. Herein God appears a mighty God, that the power of mighty men is derived from him, and depends upon him, and is under his check; he says concerning it, Hitherto shall it come and no further. They whom God ordains, shall do no more than what God has ordained, which is a great comfort to God's suffering people. Men are God's hand, the rod in his hands, Ps. xvii. 14. And he has ordained them for judgment, and for correction, and for prosperity to whom they shall do good, and for whom they shall do evil. If they cannot sharpen out, they must expect it, they shall have it; when wicked men are let loose against them, it is not for their destruction, that they may be ruined, but for their correction, that they may be reformed: they are intended not for a sword, to cut them off, but for a rod, to drive out the foolishness that is found in their hearts, though they mean not so, neither do they think so. And the reason is, Note, It is matter of great comfort to us, in reference to the troubles and afflictions of the church, that whatever mischief men design to them, God designs to bring good out of them, and we are sure that his counsel shall stand.

5. Though the wickedness of the wicked may prosper for awhile, yet God is a holy God, and does not approve of that wickedness; (v. 13.) They are of purer eyes than to behold evil. The prophet, observing how very vicious and impious the Chaldeans were, and yet what great success they had against God's Israel, found a temptation arising from it to say, "It is vain to serve God, and it is indifferent to him what men are." But he soon suppresses the thought by having recourse to his first principle; if he can but see, he need not, he cannot be, the Author or Patron of sin; as he cannot do injustice himself, so he is of purer eyes than to behold it with any allowance or approbation; no, it is that abominable thing which the Lord hates. He sees all the sin that is committed in the world, and it is an offence to him, it is odious in his eyes, and those that commit it are thereby made obnoxious to his justice. There is in the nature of God an antipathy to those dispositions and practices that are contrary to his holy law; and though an expediency is happily found out for his being reconciled to sinners, yet he never will or can be reconciled to sin. And this principle we must resolve to abide by, though the dispensations of his providence may for a time, and in some instances, seem to be inconsistent with it. God's dispensation at sin must never be interpreted into a giving countenance to it; for he is not a God that has pleasure in wickedness, Ps. v. 4, 5. The iniquity which, it is here said, God does not look upon, may be meant especially of the mischief done to God's people by their persecutors; though God sees cause to permit it, yet he does not approve of it; so it agrees with what of Balaam, (Num. xxiii. 22.) He has not beheld iniquity against Jacob, nor seen, with allowance, perverseness against Israel; which is very comfortable to the people of God, in their afflictions by the rage of men, that they cannot infer God's anger from it; though the instruments of their trouble hate them, it does not therefore follow that God does, nay, he loves them, and it is in love that he corrects them, in order to their good.

II. The grievances he complains of, and finds hard to reconcile with these truths; "Since we are sure that thou art a holy God, why have atheists temptation given them to question whether thou art so or no? Wherefore lookest thou upon the Chaldeans that deal treacherously with thy people, and hast thou offended that thou hast attempted upon them? Why dost thou suffer the sword to encroach upon him who blasphemeth thy name, to deal thus cruelly, thus perfidiously, with thy sworn subjects, who desire to fear thy name? What shall we say to this?" This was a temptation to Job; (ch. xxi. 7—xxv. 1.) to David; (Ps. lxxxii. 2, 3.) to Jeremiah, ch. xili. 1, 2. 1. That God permitted sin, and was patient with the sinners. He looked upon them, he saw all their wicked doings and designs, and did not restrain or punish them, but suffered them to speed in their purposes, to go on and prosper, and to carry all before them. Nay, his looking upon them intimates that he not only gave them no check or rebuke, but that he gave them encouragement and assistance, as he said, He caused his hand and his right hand and his enemies, Ps. lxxv. 8. 2. (2.) They were false and deceitful, that there was no credit to be given them, nor any confidence to be put in them. They deal treacherously; under colour of peace and friendship, they prosecute and execute the most mischievous designs, and make no conscience of their word in any thing. (2.) They hated and persecuted men, because they were better than themselves, as Cain hated Abel because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous. The wicked devour the man that is more righteous than he, for that very reason, because he shames him; they have an ill will to the image of God, and therefore devour good men, because they bear that image. Though many of the Jews were as bad as the Chaldeans themselves, and worse, yet were they ever so wicked, not so much more righteous, and yet were devoured by them. 1 (3.) They make no more of killing men than of catching fish. The prophet complains that Providence having delivered up the weaker to be a prey to the stronger, they were, in effect, made as the fishes of the sea, v. 14. So they had been among themselves, preying upon one another as the greater fishes do upon the lesser; (v. 3.) and they were made so to the common enemy. They were as the creeping things, or swimming things, (for the word is used for fish, Gen. i, 20.) that have no ruler over them, either to restrain them from devouring one another, or to protect them from being devoured by their enemies. They are given up to the Chaldeans as fish to the fishermen. Those proud oppressors make no conscience of killing them, any more than men do of pulling fish out of the water, so small an account do they make of human lives. They make no difficulty of killing them, but do it with as much ease as men catch fish, that make no resistance, but are unguarded and unarmed, and it is rather a pastime than any pains to take them. They make no distinction among them, but all is fish that comes to their net; and they reckon every thing their own that they can lay their hands on. They have various ways of spoiling and destroying, as men have of taking fish. Some they take up with the angle, (v. 15.) one by one; others catch them in shoals, and by wholesale, in their net, and gather them in their drag, their enclosing net. Such variety of methods have they to destroy those by whom they hope to enrich themselves.

(4.) They gloried in what they got, and pleased themselves with it, though it was got dishonestly; Their portion is fat, and rich mead have they eaten, pow'rs. From oppression and fraud, they have a great deal, and it is of the best; their land is good, and they have abundance of it. And therefore, [v. 1.] They have great complacency in themselves, and are very pleasant, they live merrily; (v. 15.) Therefore they rejoice and are glad, because their wealth is great, and their projects succeed, for the increase of it, Job xxxi. 22.

[2.] They have a great conceit of themselves, are very much in love with themselves, and are great admirers of their own ingenuity and conduct; They sacrifice to their own net and burn incense to their own drag; they applaud themselves for having got so much money, though ever so dishonestly. Note, There is a proneness in us to take the glory of our outward progress, and to raise ourselves upon it. My Lord, I am the king of the bow of my hands, have gotten me this wealth, Deut. viii. 17. This idolizing ourselves, sacrificing to the drag-net, because it is our own, which is as absurd a piece of idolatry as sacrificing to Neptune or Dagon. That which makes them ad re their net thus is, because by it their portion is fat. They that make a god of their money, will make a god of their drag-net, if they can get money by it.

Lastly, The prophet, in the close, humble expresses his hope that God will not suffer these destroyers of mankind always to go on and prosper thus, and expostulates with God concerning it; (v. 17.) "Shall they therefore empty their net? Shall they enrich themselves, and fill their own houses, with that which they have got by violence and oppression taken away from their neighbours? Shall they empty their net of what they have caught, that they may cast it into the sea again, to catch more? And wilt thou suffer them to proceed in this wicked course? Shall they not share continually to stay the nations? Must the numbers and wealth of nations be sacrificed to their net? As if it should not alone be a small thing that they rob God of the glory? Is not God the King of nations, and will he not assert their injured rights? Is he not jealous for his own honour, and will he not maintain that?" The prophet lodges the matter in God's hand, and leaves it with him, as the Psalmist does, (Ps. lxiv. 22.) Arise, O God, plead thine own cause.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter we have an answer expected by the prophet, (v. 1.) and returned by the Spirit of God, to the complaints which the prophet made of the violence and violence of the Chaldeans, in the close of the foregoing chapter. The answer is, I. That after God has served his own purposes by the prevailing power of the Chaldeans, has tried the faith and patience of his people, and distinguished between the hypocrisies and the sincere among them, he will reckon with the Chaldeans, will humble and bring down, not only that proud monarch Nebuchadnezzar, but that proud monarch, for his hypocrisies, thirst after sin, and want of his own and wealth, for which they themselves should at length be made a prey, v. 2. 8. II. That not only, but all other sinners like them, should perish under a divine wrath, and the curse and plagues, (v. 9.) shall be a common portion, and shame, and honour; v. 9. 11. II. Those that are injurious and oppressive, and raise estates by wrong and rapine, v. 12. 14. III. Those that promote drunkenness, that they may impose upon theirbau, and be the white, v. 12. 17. IV. Those that worship idols, v. 18. 20.

1. I WILL stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved. 2. And the Lord answered me, and said, Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it. 3. For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall stand, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry. 4. Behold, his soul which is lifted up is not upright in him: but the just shall live by his faith. as shot, Ps. v. 5,) we must hear what God the Lord will speak, Ps. lxxxv. 8. 3. When we go to read and hear the word of God, and so to consult the mind of God, as the prophet here shows what God will thereby say unto us, to suit our case; what word of conviction, caution, counsel, and comfort, he will bring to our souls, that we may receive it, and submit to the power of it, and may consider what we shall answer, what returns we shall make to the word of God, when we are reproved by it. 4. When we are attacked by such as quarrel with God concerning his providence, as the prophet here has to have been beset by, besieged as in a tower by hosts of objectors, we should consider how to answer them, fetch our instructions from God, hear what he says to us for our satisfaction, and have that ready to say to others, when we are reproved, to satisfy them, as a reason of the hope that is in us, (1 Pet. iii. 15,) and beg of God a mouth and wisdom, and that it may be given us in that same hour what we shall speak.

II. God graciously gives him the meeting; for he will not disappoint the believing expectations of his people that wait to hear what he will say unto them, but will speak peace, will answer them with good words and comfortable words, Zech. i. 13. The prophet had complained of the prevalence of the God, who should see the accomplishment of it, now, to pacify him concerning it, he here gives him a further prospect of their fall and ruin, as Isaiah, before this, when he had foretold the captivity in Babylon, foretold also the destruction of Babylon. Now this great and important event being made known to him by a vision, care is taken to publish the vision, and transmit it to the generations to come. 1. The prophet must write the vision, v. 2. Thus when St. John had a vision of the New Jerusalem, he was ordered to write, Rev. xxi. 5. He must write it, that he might imprint it on his own mind, and make it more clear to himself; but especially that it might be notified to those in distant places, and transmitted to these in future ages. What is handed by tradition, is easily mistaken, and liable to corruption; but what is written, is reduced to a certainty, and preserved safe and pure. We have reason to bless God for written visions, that God has written to us the great things of his prophets as well as of his law. He must write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, must write it legibly, in large characters, so that he who runs may read it; that he may give them leisure to read it deliberately, may not avoid a cursory view of it. Probably, the prophets were wont to write some of the most remarkable of their predictions in tables, and to hang them up in the temple, Isa. viii. 1. Now the prophet is bid to write this very plain. Note, Those who are employed in preaching the word of God, should study plainness as much as may be, so as to make it intelligible to the meanest capacities. The things of our everlasting peace, which God has written to us, are made plain, they are all plain to him that understands, (Prov. viii. 9,) and they are published with authority; God himself has prefixed his imprint on them; he has said, Make them plain. 2. The people must wait for the accomplishment of it, (v. 3.) The prophet tells them of the appointed time to come. You shall now be told of your deliverance by the breaking of the Chaldeans' power, and that the time of it is fixed in the counsel and decree of God; there is an appointed time, but it is not near, it is yet to be deferred a great while; and that comes in here as a reason why it must be written; that it might be reserved afterwards, and the event compared with it. Note, God has an appointed time for his appointed work, and will be sure to do the work when the time comes; it is not for us to anticipate his appointments, but to wait his time. And it is a great encouragement to wait with patience, that, though the promised favour be deferred long, it will come at last, and be an abundant recompense for our waiting: At the end it shall speak, and not lie; we shall not be disquieted by it, for it will come at the time appointed, nor shall we be disappointed in it, for it will fully answer our believing expectations. The promise must be a present grace, whilst the event be at the end it shall speak; and therefore though it tarry longer than we expected, yet we must continue waiting for it; being assured it will come, and willing to tarry until it doth come. The day that God has set for the deliverance of his people, and the destruction of his and their enemies, is a day. (1.) That will surely come at last; it is never adjourned sine die—without fixing another time, but it will without fail come at the fixed time, and the fittest time. (2.) It will not tarry, for God is not slack, as some count slackness; (2 Pet. iii. 9,) though it tarry past our time, yet it does not tarry past God's time, which is always the best time. 3. This vision, the accomplishment of which is so long waited for, will be such an exercise of faith and patience, as will carry us forward with firmness and confidence, till we shall see the event. (1.) There are some who will boldly disdain this vision, whose hearts are so lifted up, that they seem to take notice of it; if God will work for them immediately, they will thank him, but they will not give him credit; their hearts are lifted up toward vanity, and since God puts them off, they will shift for themselves, and not be beholden to him: they think their own hands sufficient for them, and God's promise is to them an insignificant thing. That man's soul that is thus lifted up, is not upright in him; it is not right with God, is not as it should be. Those that either distrust or despise God's all-sufficiency, will not walk uprightly with him, Gen. xvii. 1. But, (2.) Those who are truly good, and whose hearts are upright with God, will value the promise, and venture their all upon it; and in confidence of the truth of it, will keep close to God and duty in the most difficult, trying times, and will then live comfortably in communion with God, dependence on him, and expectation of him. The just shall live by faith; during the captivity good people shall support themselves, and live comfortably, by faith in these precious promises, which he who believes in them is delivered from, The just shall live by his faith, by that faith which he acts upon the word of God. This is quoted in the New Testament, (Rom. i. 17. Gal. iii. 11. Heb. x. 38.) for the proof of the great doctrine of justification by faith only, and of the influence which the grace of faith has upon the Christian life. Those that are made just by faith, shall live, shall be happy here and for ever; while they are here, they live by what is to come to heaven, faith shall be swallowed up in vision.

5. Yea also, because he transgresseth by wine, he is a proud man, neither keepeth at home, who enlargeth his desire as hell, and is as death, and cannot be satisfied, but gathereth unto him all nations, and heareth unto him all people: 6. Shall not all these take up a parable against him, and a taunting proverb against him, and say, Wo to him that increaseth that which is not his! how long? and to him that ladeneth himself with thick clay! 7. Shall they not rise up suddenly that shall bite thee, and awake that shall vex thee, and thou shalt be for booties unto them? 8. Because thou hast spoiled many nations, all the remnant of the people shall spoil thee; because of men's blood, and for the violence of the land, of the city, and of all that dwell therein. 9. Wo to him that covetheth an evil covetousness to his house, that he may set his nest on high, that he may be delivered from the power of evil! 10. Thou hast consulted shame to thy house by cutting off many people, and hast sinned against thy soul. 11. For the stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it. 12. Wo to him that buildeth a town with blood, and establisheth a city by iniquity! 13. Behold, is it not of the Lord of hosts that the people shall labour in the very fire, and the people shall weary themselves for very vanity! 14. For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

The prophet having had orders to write the vision, and the people to wait for the accomplishment of it, the vision itself follows; and it is, as divers other prophecies we have met with, the burthen of Babylon, and Babylon's king; the same that was said to pass over and offend, ch. 1. 11. It reads the doom, some think, of Nebuchadnezzar, who was principally active in the destruction of Jerusalem; or of that monarch, or of that whole Israel out of the Chaldees, or of all such proud and oppressive powers as bear hard upon any people, especially upon God's people. Observe, I. The charge laid down against this enemy, upon which the sentence is grounded; (v. 5.) The lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eye, and the pride of life, are the entangling snares of men, and great men especially; and we fear that much of that old Israel out of the height of his career is followed by each of these. For, 1. He is sensual and voluptuous, and given to his pleasures; he transgresses by wine; drunkenness is itself a transgression, and is the cause of abundance of transgression. We read of those that err through wine, Isa. xxviii. 7. Belshazzar (in whom particularly this prophecy had its accomplishment) was in the height of his transgression by wine, when the handwriting upon the wall signed the warrant for his immediate execution, pursuant to this sentence, Dan. v. 1. 2. He is haughty and imperious, he is a proud man, and his pride is a certain presage of his fall coming on. If great men be proud men, the great God will make them know he is above them. His transgressing by wine is made the cause of his arrogance and insolence, therefore he is a proud man. The more he draws on, the more he makes himself as mean as a beast, yet he thinks himself as great as a king, and pride himself in that by which he shames himself. We find the crown of pride upon the head of the drunkards of Ephraim, and a woe to both, Isa. xxviii. 1. 3. He is covetous and greedy of wealth, and this is the effect of his pride; he thinks himself worthy to enjoy all, and therefore makes it his business to enrich all. The Chaldean monarch aimed to be a universal one. He keeps not at home, is not content with his own, which he has an incontestable title to, but thinks it too little, and so enjoys it not, nor takes the comfort he might in his own palace, in his own dominion; his sin is his punishment, and his ambition his perpetual uncesswhich they must give of it another day. They overload their ship with this thick clay, and so sink it and themselves into destruction and perdition. [2.] See what people say of him, while he is thus increasing his wealth; they cry, How long? How long wilt it be ere he has enough? They cry to God, How long wilt thou suffer this proud oppressor to trouble the nations? Or, they say to one another, See how long it will last, how long he will be able to keep what he gets thus dishonestly. They dare not speak out, but we know what they mean when they say, How long? [3.] See what will be in the end hereof; what he has got, and his wealth, others shall take by violence from him. The Medes and Persians shall make a prey of the Chaldeans, as they had done of other nations, v. 7, 8. "There shall be those that will bite thee, and vex thee; from whom thou didst not fear any danger, that seemed asleep, shall rise up and awoke to be a plague to thee. They shall rise up suddenly when thou art most secure, and least prepared to receive the shock, and ward off the blow. Shall they not rise up suddenly? No doubt they shall, and thou thyself hast reason to expect it, to be dealt with as thou hast dealt with others; that thou shalt be forbooties unto them, as others have been unto thee; that, according to the law of retaliation, as thou hast spoiled many nations, so thou shalt yourself be spoiled. For God shall avenge thee of the tres-68 sins that thou hast made. The King of Babylon thought he had brought all the nations round about him so low, that none of them should have been able to make reprisals upon him; but though they were but a remnant of people, a very few left, yet these shall be sufficient to spoil him, when God has such a controversy with him. First, For men's blood, and the thing of blood. What he had done had been sacrilegious to his ambition and revenge, especially for the blood of Israelites, which is in a special manner precious to God. Secondly, For the violence of the land, his laying waste so many countries, and destroying the fruits of the earth, especially in the land of Israel. Thirdly, For the violence of the city, the many cities that he had turned into ruinous heaps, especially Jerusalem the holy city, and of all that dwelt there-in, who were ruined by him. Note, The violence done by proud men, to great and enrich themselves, will be called over again, (and must be accounted for,) another day, by him to whom vengeance belongs. [2.] Here is a war against him for covetting still more, and aiming to be still higher, v. 9. The crime as it is denounced, is much the same with that in the foregoing article—an insatiable desire of wealth and honour; it is coveting an evil covetousness to his house, grasping at an abundance for his family. Note, Covetousness is a very evil thing in a family; it brings disquiet and uneasiness into it; he that is greedy of gain, troubles his own house; and, as it were, sets a curse upon the crown of God's work and upon all the affairs of it. Wo to him that gains an evil gain; so the margin reads it. There is a lawful gain, which by the blessing of God may be a comfort to a house; (a good man leaves an inheritance to his children's children;) but what is got by fraud and injustice is ill-got, and will be bad gain, will not only do no good to a family, but will bring poverty and ruin upon it. Now observe,

[1.] What this covetous wretch aims at; it is to set his nest on high, to raise his family to some greater dignity than it had before arrived at; or to set it, as he apprehends, out of the reach of danger, that he may be delivered from the power of evil; that it may not be in the power of his enemies to do him a mischief, or so much as to disturb his reposes. Note, It is common for men to pretend it as an excuse for their covetousness and ambition, that they only consult their own safety, and aim to secure themselves: and yet they do but deceive themselves, when they think their wealth will be a strong city to their honour and safety; for it is so often in their own concourse, Prov. xviii. 11.

[2.] What he will get by it; Thou hast consulted, not safety, but shame, to thy house, by cutting off many people, v. 10. Note, An estate raised by iniquity is a scandal to a family. Those that cut off, or undermine others, to make room for themselves, that impoverish others to enrich themselves, do but fasten on themselves, and make them a mark of infamy. Yet that is not the worst of it; "Thou hast sinned against thine own soul, hast brought that under guilt and wrath, and endangered that." Note, Those that do wrong to their neighbour, do a much greater wrong to their own souls. But if the sinner pleads, Not guilty, and thinks he has managed his frauds and violence with so much art and contrivance, that they cannot be proved upon him, let him know that if there be no other witnesses against him, the stones shall cry out of the wall against him, and the beam out of the timber in the roof shall answer it, shall second it, shall witness that, the money and materials where- with he built the house, were unjustly gotten, v. 11. The stones and timber cry out against the wealth and violence under the sin of man, and waits to be delivered from that bondage of corruption.

[3.] Here is a wo against him for building a town and a city by blood and extortion; (v. 12.) He builds a town, and is himself lord of it; he establishes a city, and makes it his royal seat: so Nebuchadnezzar did; (Isa. xxiv.) I have built for the house of the kingdom! But it is built with the blood of his own subjects, whom he has oppressed, and the blood of his neighbours, whom he has unjustly invaded; it is established by iniquity, by the unrighteous laws that are made for the security of it. Wo to him that doeth so; for the towns and cities thus built can never be established, they will fall, and their founders be buried in the ruins of them. Babylon, which was built by blood and iniquity, did not continue long, its day soon came to fall; and then this wo took effect, when that prophecy, which is expressed as a history, (Isa. xxvi. 9.) proved a history indeed; Babylon is fallen, is fallen: And the destruction of that city was, (v. 13.) The shame of the Chaldeans, who had taken so much pains, and were at such a vast expense, to fortify it; (v. 13.) Is it not of the Lord of hosts, that the people who have laboured so hard to defend their city shall labour in the very fire, shall see the out-works which they confided in the strength of set on fire, and shall labour in vain to save them? Or, they, in their pursuits of worldly wealth and honour, are like those who put away the crown of God's work and upon all the affairs of it. Wo to him that gains an evil gain; so the margin reads it. There is a lawful gain, which by the blessing of God may be a comfort to a house; (a good man leaves an inheritance to his children's children;) but what is got by fraud and injustice is ill-got, and will be bad gain, will not only do no good to a family, but will bring poverty and ruin upon it. Now observe,

[1.] What this covetous wretch aims at; it is to set his nest on high, to raise his family to some greater dignity than it had before arrived at; or to set it, as he apprehends, out of the reach of danger, that he may be delivered from the power of evil; that it may not be in the power of his enemies to do him a mischief, or so much as to disturb his repose. Note, It is common for men to
of the Chaldean monarchy (which all the world could not but take notice of) the earth was filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, v. 14. The Lord is known by these judgments which he executes; especially when he is pleased to look upon forsyed men, and to abase them, in order to prove himself to be God alone, Job xl. 11, 12. See what good God brings out of the staining and sinking of earthly glory; he thereby manifests and magnifies his own glory, and fills the earth with the knowledge of it as plentifully as the waters cover the sea, which lie deep, spread far, and shall not be dried up until time shall be no more. Such is the knowledge of the glory of God as in the face of Jesus Christ, given by the gospel; (2 Cor. iv. 6.) and such was the knowledge of his glory by the miraculous ruin of Babylon. Note, Such as will not be taught the knowledge of God's glory by the judgments of his mouth, shall be made to know and acknowledge it by the judgments of his hand.

15. Wo unto him that giveth his neighbour drink, that putteth thy bottle to him, and maketh him drunken also, that thou mayest look on their nakedness! 16. Thou art filled with shame for glory: drink thou also, and let thy foreskin be uncovered: the cup of the Lord's right hand shall be turned unto thee, and shameful spewing shall be on thy glory. 17. For the violence of Lebanon shall cover thee, and the spoil of beasts, which made them afraid, because of men's blood, and for the violence of the land, of the city, and of all that dwell therein. 18. What profieth the graven image, that the maker thereof hath graven it; the molten image, and a teacher of lies, that the maker of his work trusteth therein, to make dumb idols! 19. Wo unto him that saith to the wood, Awake; to the dumb stone, Arise, it shall teach! Behold, it is laid over with gold and silver, and there is no breath at all in the midst of it. 20. But the Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him.

The three foregoing articles, upon which the woes here are grounded, are very near akin to each other. The criminals charged by them, are oppressors and extortioners, that raise estates by rapine and injustice; and it is mentioned here again, (v. 17.) the very same that was said, v. 8. For that is the crime upon which the greatest stress is laid; it is because of men's blood, innocent blood, barbarously and unjustly shed, which is a provoking, cry- ing thing; it is for the violence of the land, of the city, and of all that dwell therein, which God will certainly reckon for, sooner or later, as the Asserter of right, and the Avenger of wrong.

But here are two articles more, of a different nature, which carry a wo to all those in general to whom they belong, and particularly to the Babylonian monarchs, by whom the people of God were taken and held captives.

19. For the cup of drunkenness stand here im- peached and condemned. Belshazar was one of those; he was so, remarkably, that very night that the prophecy of this chapter was fulfilled in the pe- riod of his life and kingdom, when he drank wine before a thousand of his lords, (Dan. v. 1.) began the laws and forces them to pledge him. And perhaps it was one reason why the succeeding mo- narchs of Persia made it a law of their kingdom, that in drinking none should compel, but they should do according to every man's pleasure, (as we find, Est. i. 8.) because they had seen in the kings of Babylon the disadvantages, who is in heart, who is thirsty and poor, though it be but a cup of cold wa- ter to a disciple in the name of a disciple; to give drink to a weary traveller; nay, and to give strong drink to him that is ready to perish, and wine to them that are of heavy heart, is a piece of charity, which is required of us, and shall be recompensed to us; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; but to give a neighbour drink, who has enough already, and more than enough, with design to intoxicate him, that he may expose himself, may talk foolishly, and make himself ridiculous, may disclose secret concerns, or be drawn in to agree to a bad bargain for himself—this is abominable wickedness; and those who are guilty of it, who make a practice of it, and take a pride and pleasure in it, are rebels against God and his law. Law, that whoever is in the devil, and his cursed interests, and enemies to men on earth, and their honour and wel- fare; they are like the son of Nebat, who sinned and made Israel to sin. To entice others to drunk- nesses, to put the bottle to them, that they may be allured to it by its charms, by looking on the wine when it is red, and gives its colour in the cup; or to force them to it, by obliging them by the club (and club-law: indeed the more) to drink so many glasses, and so filled, is to do what we can, and perhaps more than we know of, toward the murder both of soul and body; and those that do, have a great deal to answer for.

2. What the sentence is, that is here passed upon him. There is a wo to him, (v. 15.) and a punish- ment, (v. 16.) that shall answer to the wo. (1.) He shall be put into the cup of drunkenness, that is the cup of his neighbour! The cup of fury, the cup of trem- bling, the cup of the Lord's right hand, shall be turned unto him; the power of God shall be armed against him. That cup which had gone round among the nations, to make them a desolation, an astonishment, and a hissing, which had made them stumble and fall, so that they could rise no more, shall at length be put into the hand of the king of Babylon, as was foretold, Jer. xxv. 15, 16, 18, 26, 27. Thus the New Testament Babylon, which had made the nations drunk with the cup of her fornications, shall have blood given her to drink, for she is worthy, Rev. xvii. 3, 6. (2.) Does he take a pleasure in putting his neighbour to shame? He shall himself be loaded with contempt. Thou art filled with shame and dishonour, (Dan. v. 5.) or art filled now with shame, more than ever thou wast with glory; and the glory thou hast been filled with, shall but serve to make thy shame the more grievous to thyself, and the more ignominious in the eyes of others. Thou also shalt drink of the cup of trembling, and shalt expose thyself by thy fear and cowardice, which shall be put into thy neighbour's hand, and thy nakedness shall be put into thy shame; and all about thee shall load thee with disgrace, for shameful spewing shall be on thy glory, on that which thou hast most prided thyself in, thy dignity, wealth, and domi- nion; those whom thou hast made drunk, shall them- selves spew upon it. For the violence of Lebanon shall cover thee, and the spoil of beasts; (v. 17.)

thou shalt be hunted and run down with as much violence as ever any wild beasts in Lebanon were, shall be spoiled as they are, and they fall made a sport for: for art thou one of the beasts that made them afraid, and therefore they triumph when they have got the mastery of thee. Or, "It is because of the violence thou hast done to Lebanon, that is, the land of Israel, (Deut. iii. 25.) and the temple, (Zech. xi. 1.) that God now reckons with thee; that is the sin that now covers thee.

II. The promoters of idolatry are hated. "Thus stand here impeached and condemned; and this also was a sin that Babylon was notoriously guilty of; it was the mother of harlots; Belshazzar, in his revels, praised his idols. And for this, here is a wo against them, and in them against all others that do likewise, particularly the New Testament Babylon. Now see here, (1.) That they are made a mark of shame. Their images, and molten images, that may take their choice which they like best. (2.) They are very nice and curious in the framing of them; The maker of the work has performed his part admirably well, the fashioner of his fashion is in the margin, the counterfeit model in the margin, of God, the maker. (3.) They are at great expense in beautifying and adorning them; They lay them over with gold and silver; because they are things people love and dote upon, wherever they meet with them; they dress up their idols in them, the more effectually to court the adoration of the children of this world. (4.) They have great expectations of them: The maker of the work trusts therein as his god, puts a confidence in it, and gives honour to it as his god. The worshippers of God give honour to him, by offering up their prayers to him, and waiting to receive instructions and directions from him; and these honours they give to their idols. (1.) They pray to them, they say to the wood, Awake for our relief, awake to hear our prayers; and to the dumb stone, Arise, and save us, as the church prays to her God, Awake, O Lord, arise, Ps. xlv. 23. They own their images to be a god, by praying to it. Deliver me, for thou art my god, Isa. xlv. 17. Doest thou goods I liefly fast — That to which a man addresses petitions, is to him a god. (2.) They consult them as oracles, and expect to be directed and dictated to by them; they speak to the dumb stone, through them, as in the plural, they shall teach. What the wicked demon, or no less wicked priest, speaks to them from the image, they receive with the utmost veneration, as of divine authority, and are ready to be governed by it. Thus idolatry planted and propagated under the specious show of religion and devotion.

2. How the extreme folly of this is exposed. God, by Isaiah, when he foretold the deliverance of his people out of Babylon, largely showed the shameful stupidity and sottishness of idolators, and so he does here by the prophet, on the like occasion. (1.) Their images, when they have made them, are but mere matter, which is the meanest, lowest rank of being; and all the expense they are at upon them, cannot advance them one step further, for they are wholly void both of sense and reason, lifeless and speechless; it is a dumb idol, a dumb stone, and there is no breath at all in the midst of it, so that the most minute animal, that has but breath and motion, is more excellent than they. They have not so much as the spirit of a beast. (2.) It is not in their power to do their worshippers any good; (v. 18.) It is grace to work in them. Thus if it be mere matter, if it were cast in some other form, it might be serviceable to some purpose or other of human use: but as it is made a god of, it is of no profit at all, nor can its worshippers the least kindness. Nay, (3.) It is so far from profiting them, that it puts a cheat upon them, and keeps them under the strong delusion; they say, It shall teach, but it is a strong delusion, it presents God as having a body, as being finite, visible, and dependent; whereas he is a Spirit, infinite, invisible, and independent; and it confirms those that become vain in their imaginations, in the false notions they have of God, and makes the idea of God to be a precarious thing, and what every man pleases; if we mingle with the temple of the Lord, we are to have our gods, we may say so to any of the creatures of our own fancy, though the chimera be ever so extravagant. An image is a doctrine of vanities, it is falsehood, and a work of errors, Jer. v. 8, 14, 15. It is therefore easy to see what their religion is, and what they aim at, who recommend those teachers of lies as Laymon's books, which they are to study and govern themselves by; when they have locked up from them the book of the scriptures in an unknown tongue.

3. How the people of God triumph in him, and therewith support themselves, when the idolaters thus shame themselves; (v. 20.) But the Lord is in his holy temple.

(1.) Our Rock is not as their rock, (Deut. xxxii. 31.) Theirs are dumb idols, ours is Jehovah, the Lord, and what he is, and not, as theirs, what men please to make him. He is in his holy temple in heaven, the residence of his glory, where we have access to him in the way, not which we have invented, but which he himself has instituted. Compare Ps. cxv. 3. But our God is in the heavens, Ps. xxv. 4. (2.) The multitude of their gods wliich they set up, and take so much pains in, support, cannot then prevail against God's people, our God will be in his holy temple still, and glorious in holiness. They have laid waste his temple at Jerusalem; but he has a temple above, that is out of the reach of their rage and malice, but within the reach of his people's faith and prayers. (3.) Our God will make all the world silent before him; will strike the idolaters as dumb as their idols, convicting them of their folly, and covering them with shame. He will silence the fury of the oppressors, and check their rage against his people. (4.) It is the duty of his people to attend him with silent adorations, (Ps. lxv. 1.) and patiently to wait for his appearing to serve him in his own way and time. Be still, and know that he is God, Zech. ii. 13.

CHAP. III.

Stil the correspondence is kept up between God and his prophet. In the first chapter, he spoke to God, then God to him, and in the second chapter to God, God to him. In this chapter, God spake wholly to him by the spirit of prophecy; now in this chapter, he speaks wholly to God by the spirit of prayer; for he would not let the intercourse drop on his side, like a genuine son of Abraham, who returned not to his place until God had left communicating with him, Gen. xvi. 33. The prophet's prayer, in this chapter, is in imitation of David's Psalms, for it is directed and determined towards God, and is set to musical instruments. The prayer is laid up upon record for the use of the church, and particularly of the Jews in their captivity, while they were waiting for their deliverance, promised them in the foregoing chapter. I. He earnestly begs of God to relieve and succour his people in affliction, to hasten their deliverance, and to comfort them in the mean time. v. 2. II. He calls to mind the experience which the church formerly had of God's glorious and gracious appearances on his behalf, when he brought Israel out of Egypt through the wilderness to Canaan, and there many a time wrought wonderful sal- vations, Ps. lxv. 10, 11. He affects himself with a holy concem for the present troubles of the church, but encourages himself and others to hope that the issue will be comfortable and glorious at last, though all visible means fail, v. 16, 19.

1. A PRAYER of Habakkuk the prophet upon Shigionoth. 2. O LORD.
I have heard thy speech, and was afraid: O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy.

This chapter is entitled, a prayer of Habakkuk; it is a meditation with himself, an intercession for the church. Prophets were praying men, this prophet was so. He is a prophet and he shall pray for thee; (Gen. xx. 7.) and sometimes they prayed for even those whom they prophesied against. They that were intimately acquainted with the mind of God concerning future events, knew better than others how to order their prayers, and what to pray for, and, in the foresight of troublous times, could lay up a stock of prayers, that might then receive a gracious answer, and so be serving the church by their prayers when their prophesying was over. This prophet had found God ready to answer his requests and complaints before, and therefore now repeats his applications to him. Because God has inclined his ear to us, we must resolve that therefore we will call upon him as long as we live.

1. The prophet owns the receipt of God's answer to his former representation, and the impression it made upon him; (v. 2.) "O Lord, I have heard thy speech, thy hearing," (so some read it.) "that which thou hast least us hear, the decree that is given to many people: I received, and it is before me." Note, Those that would rightly order their speech to God, must carefully observe, and lay before him his speech to them. He had said, (ch. ii. 1.) I will watch to see what he will say; and now he owns, Lord, I have heard thy speech; for if we turn a deaf ear to God's word, we can expect no other than that he should turn a deaf ear to our prayers. Prov. xxx. 5. He that heard it, and was afraid. Messages immediately from heaven, commonly struck even the best and boldest men into a consternation; Moses, Isaiah, and Daniel, did exceedingly fear and quake; but beside that, the matter of this message made the prophet afraid, when he heard how low the people of God should be brought, under the oppressing power of the Chaldeans, and how long they should continue under it; he was afraid lest their spirits should quite fail, and lest the church should be utterly rooted out and run down, and being kept low so long, should be lost at length.

2. He earnestly prays that for the elect's sake these days of trouble might be shortened, or the trouble of these days mitigated and moderated, or the people of God supported and comforted under it. He thinks it very long to wait till the end of the years; perhaps he refers to the seventy years fixed for the continuance of the captivity, and therefore, "Lord," (says he,) "do something on our behalf, in the midst of the years, these years of our distress; though we be not delivered, and our oppressors destroyed, yet let us not be abandoned and cast off."

(1.) Do something for thine own cause; revive thy work, and remember thine own work. (2.) Do something for thine own cause; revive thy work, and remember thine own work, of God's own hand, formed by him, formed for him; "revive that, even when it walks in the midst of trouble, Ps. cxxxviii. 7, 8. Grant thy people a little reviving in their bondage, Ezra ix. 8. Ps. lxxxv. 6. Preserve alive thy work; (so some read it:) though thy church be chastened, let it not be killed, though it have not its liberty, yet continue its life, save a remnant, and this be a seed of another generation. Revive the work of thy grace in us, by sanctifying the trouble to us, and supporting us under it, though the time be not yet come, even the set time for our deliverance out of it; whatever becomes of us, though we be dead and dry bones, Lord, let thy work be revived, let not that sink, and go back, and come to nothing." (2.) "Do something for thine own cause; in the midst of the years make known, make thyself known, for now verily thou art a God that hidest thyself;" (Isa. xlv. 13.) make thyself known thy power, thy pity, thy promise, thy providence, in the government of the world, for the safety and welfare of thy church. Though we be buried in obscurity, yet, Lord, make thyself known; whatever becomes of Israel, let not the God of Israel be forgotten in the world, but discover himself even in the midst of the dark years, before they are expected to appear." When in the midst of the years of the captivity God miraculously owned the prayers of three children in the fiery furnace, and delivered Nebuchadnezzar, this prayer was answered, In the midst of the years make known. (3.) "Do something for thy people's comfort; In wrath remember mercy, and make that known: show us thy mercy, O Lord," Ps. lxiii. 7. They see God's displeasure against them in their troubles, and that makes them grievous indeed; there is wrath in the bitter cup, that therefore they deprecate, and are earnest in begging that in the midst of wrath God would remember mercy to them, would make it appear that he is a merciful God, and they are vessels of his mercy. Note, Even those that are under the terrors of God's wrath, must not despair of his mercy; and mercy, more mercy, is that which we must flee to for refuge, and rely upon as our only plea. He does not say, Remember our merit, but, Lord, remember thy own mercy.

3. God came from Teman, and the Holy One from mount Paran. Selah. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise. 4. And his brightness was as the light; he had horns coming out of his hand: and there was the hiding of his power. 5. Before him went the pestilence, and burning coals went forth at his feet. 6. He stood and measured the earth: he beheld, and drove asunder the nations; and the everlasting mountains were scattered, the perpetual hills did bow: his ways are everlasting. 7. I saw the tents of Cushan in affliction: and the curtains of the land of Midian did tremble. 8. Was the Lord displeased against the rivers? was thine anger against the rivers? was thy wrath against the sea, that thou didst ride upon thy horses, and thy chariots of salvation? 9. Thy bow was made quite naked, according to the oaths of the tribes, even thy word. Selah. Thou didst cleave the earth with rivers. 10. The mountains went out of their place, at the light of thine arrows they went, and at the shining of thy glittering spear. 12. Thou didst march through the land in indignation, thou didst thresh the heathen in anger. 13. Thou wentest forth for the salvation of thy people, even for salvation with thine hand upon ed; thou woundedst the head out of the house of the wicked, by discovering the foundation unto the neck. Selah. 14. Thou didst strike through with his staves the head of his villages; they came out by a whirlwind to scatter me: their rejoicing was as to devour the poor secretly. 15. Thou didst walk through the sea with thy horses, through the heap of great waters, and burning coals went forth at his feet, when, in the plague of hail, there was fire mingled with hail; burning diseases, (so the margin reads it,) some think, those that wasted Egypt; others, that with hisfahren (the salvation of Israel) and his chariots and his wheels, he made the land of Egypt invisible before Israel was brought in upon them. These were at his feet, at his coming, for they are at his command; he says to them, Go, and they go, Come, and they come. Do this, and they do it.

3. He divided the land of Canaan to his people Israel, and expelled the heathen from before them; (v. 6.) He stood and made his name to be as the everlasting hills; he dwelt there in the days of old, and in ancient times, (Ps. lxxvii. 5.) and pleading them with God in prayer, as he is pleased sometimes to plead them with himself; (Isa. lix. 1.) Then he remembered the days of old. This is that which the prophet does here, and he looks as far back as the first forming them into a people, when they were brought by miracles out of Egypt, a house of bondage through the wilderness, a land of drought, into Canaan, then possessed by mighty nations. He that thus brought them at first into Canaan through so much difficulty, can now bring them thither again out of Babylon, how great soever the difficulties are that lie in the way. Those works of wonders, wrought of old, are repeated in this psalm, that the greater encouragement to the faith of God's people in their present straits.

1. God appeared in his glory, so as he never did before or since; (v. 3, 4.) He came from Teman, even the Hcr.; One from mount Paran. This refers to the visible display of the glory of God, when he gave the law upon mount Sinai, as appears by Deut. xxv. 17. Then these expressions are borrowed. Then the Lord came down upon mount Sinai in a cloud, (Exod. xix. 20.) and his glory was as the devouring fire; not only to enforce the law which he gave them, but to show the delivernce he had wrought for them, and to magnify it; for the first word he said there was, I am the Lord thy God, that brought thee out of the land of Egypt. That appear in this glory, am the Author of that work. Then his glory covered the heavens, which shone with the reflection of that glorious appearance of his; the earth also was full of his praise, or of his splendour, as some read it. People at a distance saw the cloud and fire on the top of mount Sinai, and praised the God of Israel, or the earth was full of his praise, which were to be praised. His brightness was as the light, as the light of the sun when he goes forth in his strength; he had horns, or bright beams, (so it should be rendered,) coming out of his side or hand; rays of glory were darted forth around him; and with some rays borrowed thence it was that Moses's face shone when he came down from that mount of glory. Some by the horns, the rays in the eye, the side, the hand, from the face. When Moses came out of his hand, understand the two tables of the law, which perhaps, when God delivered them to Moses, though they were tables of stone, had a glory round them; those books were girt with beams, and so it agrees with Deut. xxxiii. 2. From his right hand went a fiery law for them. It is added, And there was the hiding of his power; there was his hidden power, in the rays that came out of his hand; the operations of his power, compared with what he could have done, were rather the hiding of it than the discovery of it; the secrets of his power, as well as of his wisdom, are double to that which is, Josh. xi. 6.

2. God sent plagues upon Egypt; for the happiness of Pharaoh, and the obedience of him to let the people go; (v. 5.) Before him went the pestilence, which slew all the first-born of Egypt in one night; through them, and get over them. Then the deep uttered his voice, when the Red sea and Jordan being divided, the waters roared and made a noise, as if they were sensible of the restraint they were under from proceeding in their natural course, and consequently the waters gave a shock to the banks or sides, on high, (for the waters stood up on a heap, Josh. iii. 16,) as if they would have made opposition to the orders given them; they lifted up their voice, lifted up their waves; but in vain, the Lord on high was mightier than they, Ps. xc. 3, 4. With the dividing of the sea and Jordan, notice is again taken of the trembling of the mountains, as if the stop given to the waters gave a shock to the banks or hills; they are put together, Ps. cxiv. 3, 4. When the sea saw it, and fled, and Jordan was driven back, the mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs. The whole creation yielded, earth and waters trembled at the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the mighty God of Jacob. But (as Mr. Cowley paraphrases it)

Fly where thou wilt, thou sea, and Jordan's current cease;
For at God's word, wheresoe'er he please,
The rocks shall weep new waters forth instead of these.

So here, Thou didst cleave the earth with rivers; channels were made in the wilderness, which seemed to cleave the earth, for the waters to run in, which issued out of the rock; to supply the camp of Israel, while they were marching through the wilderness, and which moves. Note, The God of nature can alter and control the powers of nature which way he pleases; can turn waters into crystal rocks, and rocks into crystal streams.

5. He arrested the motion of the sun and moon, to befriend and complete Israel's victories; (v. 11.) The sun and moon stood still at the prayer of Joshua, that the shadow might be moved backward, instead of forward, the night to favour their escape; they stood still in their habitation in the heaven, (Ps. xix. 4.) but with an eye to Gibeon and the valley of Ajalon, where God's work was in the doing, and of which they, though at so vast a distance, attended the motions. At the light, at the direction of thine arrows, they went, and at the shining of thy glittering spear; they followed him as a saved man, to save them; according to the intimation of the arrows God shot, (as Joshua's arrows, 1 Sam. xx. 20.) and which way soever his spear pointed, (the glittering light of which they acknowledged to outshine theirs,) that way they directed their influences, benign to Israel, and malignant against their enemies, as when the stars in their courses fought against Sisera. Note, The heavenly bodies, as well as earth and seas, are at God's command, and, when he pleases, at Israel's service too.

6. He carried on, and completed, Israel's victories over the nations of Canaan, and their kings; he slew great kings and famous, Ps. cxxxvi. 17, 18. This is largely insisted upon here, as a proper plea with God, to enforce the present petition, that he would restore them again to that land, which they were, at the close of the former narrative, put in possession of. Many expressions are here used, to set forth the conquest of Canaan. (1.) God's bow was made quite naked, taken out of the case, to be employed for Israel; we should say, his sword was quite unsheathed, not drawn out a little way, to frighten the enemy, and then put up again; but quite drawn out, not to be returned till they are all taken. (2.) He marched through the land from end to end, in indignation, as according to that wicked generation of Canaanites any longer possess so good a land. He marched even fastidiously—with disdain; (so some;) despising their confederacies. (3.) He threatened the heathen in anger; trot them down, nay, he trod them out, as corn in the floor; to give them, and what they had, to be meat to his people Israel; Mic. vi. 13. (4.) He wounded the heads out of the house of the wicked; he destroyed the families of the Canaanites, and wounded their princes, the heads of their families; nay, he cut off the heads of a dozen countries, Ps. cx. 6. Thus.

He struck through with his staves the head of the villages; (v. 14.) with Israel's staves God struck through the head of the villages of the enemies, whether Egypt or Canaan. Staves shall do the same execution as swords, when God pleases to make use of them. The enemy came out with the utmost force and fury, as a whirlwind to scatter me; (says Israel,) for many a time have they thus afflicted me, thus attacked me, from my youth, Ps. cxix. 1.

1. Pharaoh, when he pursued Israel to the Red sea, came out as a whirlwind; so did the kings of Canaan in their confederacies against Israel. Their rejoicing was as to devour the floor secretly; they were as confident of success in their enterprise as ever any great man was of devouring a poor man, which he was not able to do, against his will. He that was thus avenged upon them, on his head was carried on with secrecy. But God disappointed them, and their pride did but make their fall the more shameful, and God's care of his hower the more illustrious. (5.) He walked to the sea with his horses; (so some read it, v. 15.) he carried Israel's victories to the great sea, which was opposite to that side of Canaan at which they entered, and to which the sea was a barrier, as the mountains were to the tribes of Israel; it was his oath to Isaac, confirmed to Jacob, and repeated many a time to the tribes of Israel; Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan. This word God will accomplish, though Israel be ever so unworthy, (Deut. iv. 5.) and their enemies ever so many and mighty. Note, What God does for his tribes, is according to the oaths of the tribes, according to what he has said and sworn to them; for he is faithful that promised.

2. He would hereby show his kindness to his people, because of their relation to him, and his interest in them; Thou wentest forth for the salvation of thy people, v. 13. All the powers of nature are shaken, and the course of nature changed, and every thing seems to be thrown into disorder, and all is for the salvation of God's people. There are a people in the world, who are God's people, and the salvation is that which he has in his eye, in all the operations of his providence. Heaven and earth shall sooner come together than any of the links in the golden chain of their salvation shall be broken; and even that which seems most unlikely, shall by an overruling hand be made to work for their salvation; Phil. i. 19. [3.] He would hereby give in typical figures of the redemption of the world by Jesus Christ. It is for salvation with thine anointed; with Joshua, who led the armies of Israel, and was a figure of him whose name he bare, even Jesus, our Joshua. What God did for his Israel of old, was done with an eye to his Anointed, for the sake of the Mediator, who was both the Founder and Pem dation of the covenant made with them. It was salvation with him, for, in all the salvations wrought for them, God looked upon the face of the Anointed, and did them by him.

16. When I heard, my belly trembled; my lips quivered at the voice: rottenness entered into my bones, and I trembled within myself, that I might rest in the day of trouble: when he cometh up unto the people, he will invade them with his troops. 17. Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls:
18. Yet will I rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation. 19. The Lord God is my strength, and he will make my feet like hinds' feet, and he will make me to walk upon my high places. To the chief singer on my stringed instruments.

Within the compass of these few lines we have the prophet in the highest degree, both of smiling and triumphing; such are the varieties both of the state and of the spirit of God's people in this world. That the days of fleshly strength shall be no more trembling, but everlasting triumphs.

I. The prophet had foreseen the prevalence of the church's enemies, and the long continuance of the church's troubles; and the sight made him tremble, v. 16. This goes on with what he had said, (v. 2.) "I have heard thy speech, and was afraid;
when I heard what sad times were coming upon the church, my belly trembled, my lips quivered at the voice; the news made such an impression, that it put me into a perfect ague-fit"—the blood retiring to the heart, to succour that when it was ready to faint, the extreme parts were left destitute of spirits, so that his lips quivered. Nay, he was so weak, and so unable to help himself, that he was as if rotenness had entered into his bones, he had no strength left in him, he had neither steadiness nor force in himself, trembled all over him, trembled within him; he yielded to his trembling, and troubled himself, as our Saviour did; his flesh trembled for fear of God, and he was afraid of his judgments, Ps. cxix. 120. He was touched with a tender concern for the calamities of the church, and trembled for fear lest they should end at length in his ruin, and that the name of Israel would be blotted out. Nor did he think it any disparagement to him, or a reproach to his courage, but freely owned he was one of those that trembled at God's word, for to them he will look with favour; I tremble in myself that I might rest in the day of trouble. Note, When we see a day of trouble approaching, it concerns us to provide accordingly, and to lay up something in stock, and the help within himself at the warning, and the best way to make sure rest for ourselves in the day of trouble, is, to tremble within ourselves at the word of God, and the threatenings of that word. He that has joy in store for them that sow in tears, has rest in store for them that tremble before him. Good hope through grace is founded in a holy fear. Noah, who was moved with fear, and trembled within himself at the warning, given him of the deluge coming, had the ark for his resting place in the day of that trouble. The prophet tells us what he said in his trembling; his fear was, that, when he comes up to the people, when the Chaldean comes up to the people of Israel, he will invade them, will surround them, will break in upon them, nay, as it is in the margin, he will cut them in pieces with his troops; he cried out, We are all undone, the whole nation of the Jews is lost and gone. Note, When things look bad, we are too apt to aggravate them, and make the worst of them.

II. He had looked back upon the experiences of the church in former ages, and had observed what great things God had done for them; and so he covered himself out of his fright, and not only retrieved his temper; but fell into a transport of holy joy, with an express non obstante—although to the calamities he foresaw coming, and this, not for himself only, but in the name of every faithful Israelite.

1. He supposes the ruin of all his creature-comforts and enjoyments, not only of the delights of his life, but every comfort, every need, and every occasion for joy. 17. famine is one of the ordinary effects of war, and that commonly feel it first and most, that sit still,
and are quiet; the prophet and his pious friends, when the Chaldean army comes, will be plundered and stripped of all they have. Or, he supposes himself deprived of all by blasting and unseasonable weather, or by the severity of the hand of God.
Or, that the captives in Babylon had not enjoyed many of all good things as in their own land. (1.) He supposes the fruit-tree to be withered and become barren; the fig-tree (which used to them with much of their food, hence we often read of caken of figs) shall not so much as blossom, nor shall fruit be in the vine, from which they had their fruit, than they did before. Nor (2.) he supposes the labour of the olive should fail, their oil, which was unto them as butter is to us; the labour of the olive shall lie, (so it is in the margin,) their expectations from it shall be disappointed. (2.) He supposes the bread-corn to fail; the fields shall yield no meat, and since the king himself is served of the field, if the productions of that be withdrawn, every one will feel the want of them he 3.) He supposes the cattle to perish, either for want of the food which the field should yield, and does not, or by disease, or being destroyed and carried away by the enemy;

the flocks is cut off from the fold, and there is no herd in the stall. Note, When we are in the full enjoyment of our creature-comforts, we should consider that there may come a time when we shall be stripped of them all, and they accordingly, as not abusing them, 1 Cor. vii. 29, 30.

2. He resolves to delight and triumph in God notwithstanding; when all is gone, his God is not gone;
(v. 18.) "Yet will I rejoice in the Lord, I shall have him to rejoice in, and will rejoice in him." Destroy the vines and the fig-trees, and you make all the mirth of a carnal heart to cease, Hos. ii. 11, 12. But those who, when they were full, enjoyed God in all, when they are emptied and impoverished, can enjoy all in God; and can sit down upon a melancholy heap of the ruins of all their creature-comforts, and even then can sing to the praise and glory of God, as the God of their salvation. This is the principal ground of our joy in God, that he is the God of our salvation, our eternal salvation, the salvation of the soul; and if he be so, we may rejoice in him as such in our greatest distresses, since by our salvation cannot be hindered, but may be furthered. Note, Joy in God is never out of season, nay, it is in a special manner seasonable when we meet with losses and crosses in the world, that it may then appear that our hearts are not set upon these things, nor our happiness bound up in them. So, as the prophet speaks in God is my strength, v. 19. He that is the God of our salvation in another world, will be our Strength in this world, to carry us on in our journey thither, and help us over the difficulties and oppositions we meet with in our way. Even then

Vol. iv.—6 U
when provisions are cut off, to make it appear that man lives not by bread alone, we may have the want of bread supplied by the graces and comforts of God’s Spirit, and with the supplies of them.
(1.) We shall be strong for our spiritual warfare and work; The Lord God is my Strength, the Strength of my heart. (2.) We shall be swift for our spiritual race; “He will make my feet like hinds’ feet, that with enlargement of heart I may run the way of his commands, and outrun my troubles.” (3.) We shall be successful in our spiritual enterprises; “He will make me to walk upon my high places; I shall gain my point, shall be restored unto my own land, and tread upon the high places of the enemy,” Deut. xxxii. 13.—xxxiii. 29. Thus the prophet, who began his prayer with fear and trembling, concludes it with joy and triumph; for prayer is heart’s ease to a gracious soul. When Hannah had prayed, she went her way, and did eat, and her countenance was no more sad. This prophet, finding it so, publishes his experience of it, and puts it into the hand of the chief singer for the use of the church, especially in the day of our captivity. And though then the harps were hung upon the willow-trees, yet in the hope that they would be resumed, and their right hand retrieve its cunning, which it had forgotten, he set his song upon Shigionoth, (v.
1.) wandering tunes, according to the variable songs, and upon Neginoth, (v. 19.) the stringed instruments. He that is afflicted, and has prayed aright, may then be so easy, may then be so merry, as to sing psalms.

WITH

OF THE PROPHECY OF

ZEPHANIAH.

This prophet is placed last, as he was last in time, of all the minor prophets before the captivity, and not long before Jeremiah, who lived at the time of the captivity. He foretells the general destruction of Judah and Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, and sets their sins in order before them, which had provoked God to bring their ruin upon them; calls them to repentance; threatens the neighbouring nations with the like destructions, and gives encouraging promises of their joyful return out of captivity in due time, which have a reference to the grace of the gospel. We have, in the first verse, an account of the prophet, and the date of his prophecy, which supersedes our inquiry concerning them here.

ZEPHANIAH, I.

CHAP. I.

After the title of the book, (v. 1.) here is, 1. A threatening of the destruction of Judah and Jerusalem, an utter destruction, by the Chaldeans, v. 2., 4. II. A charge against them for their gross sin, which provoked God to bring that destruction upon them; (v. 5, 6.) and so he goes on in the rest of the chapter, setting both the judgments before them, that they might prevent them or prepare for them; and the sins that destroy them, that they might judge themselves, and justify God in what was brought upon them. 1. They must hold their peace because they had greatly sinned, v. 7, 9. But, 2. They shall howl because the trouble will be great. The day of the Lord is near, and it will be a terrible day, v. 10., 15. Such fair and timely warning as this did God give to the Jews of the approaching captivity; but they hardened their neck, which made their destruction remediless.

1. THE word of the Lord which came unto Zephaniah the son of Cushi, the son of Gedaliah, the son of Amariah, the son of Hizkiah, in the days of Josiah the son of Anon king of Judah. 2. I will utterly consume all things from off the land, saith the Lord. 3. I will consume man and beast; I will consume the fowls of the heaven, and the fishes of the sea; and the stumbling-blocks with the wicked; and I will cut off man from off the land, saith the Lord. 4. I will also stretch out my hand upon Judah, and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and I will cut off the remnant of Baal from this place, and the name of the Chemarims with the priests; 5. And them that worship the host of heaven upon the house-tops; and them that worship and that swear by the Lord, and that swear by Malcham; 6. And them that are turned back from the Lord; and those that have not sought the Lord, nor inquired for him. Here is,

I. The title-page of this book, (v. 1.) in which we observe, 1. What authority it has, and who gave it that authority; it is from heaven and not of men. It is the word of the Lord. 2. Who was the instrument of conveying it to the church. His name Zephaniah, which signifies the servant of the Lord, for God revealed his secrets to his servants the prophets. The pedigree of other prophets, whose extraction we have an account of, goes no further back than their father, except Zecharias, whose grandfather also is named. But this of Zephaniah goes back four generations, and the highest mentioned is Hizkiah; it is the very same name in the original with that of Hezekiah king of Judah, (2 Kings xvii. 1.) and refers, probably, to him; if so, our prophet, being linearly descended from that pious prince, and being of the royal family, could with the better grace reprove the folly of the king's children as he does, v. 8. 3. When this prophet prophesied; in the days of Josiah king of Judah, who reigned well, and in the twelfth year of his reign.
ZEPHANIAH, I.

began vigorously, and carried on a work of reformation in which he destroyed idols and idolatry. Now it does not appear whether Zephaniah prophesied immediately before the beginning of his reign or not. Some suppose his prophesying had a great and good influence in that reformation. When he, as God's messenger, reproved the idolatries of Jerusalem, Josiah, as God's vicegerent, removed them; and reformation is likely then to go on and prosper, when both magistrates and ministers do their part towards it. If it were toward the latter end of his reign that he prophesied, we may suppose people relapsed into their former distempers. The idolatries Josiah had abolished, it should seem, returned in his own time, when the heat of the reformation began to abate and wear off. What good can the best reformers do with a people that hate to be reformed, as if they longed to be ruined?

II. The summary, or contents, of this book; the general proposition contained in it, is, that utter destruction is coming upon Judah and Jerusalem for sin. Without preamble, or apology, he begins abruptly (v. 2.) By taking away I will make an end of all things from off the face of the land, saith the Lord. Ruin is coming, utter ruin; destruction from the Almighty; he has said it, who can, and will, make good what he has said; If I utterly consume this land, says he, and destroy all things (So some read), I will recall all the blessings I have bestowed, because they have abused them, and so forfeited them."

The consumption determined shall take away,

1. The inferior creatures; I will consume the beasts, the fowls of the heaven, and the fishes of the sea; (v. 3.) as, in the deluge, every living substance was destroyed that was upon the face of the ground. Gen. vii. 23. The creatures were not for man's use, and therefore when he has perverted the use of them, and made them subject to vanity, God, to show the greatness of his displeasure against the sin of man, involves them in his punishment. The expressions are figurative, speaking universal desolation. Those that fly ever so high, as the fowls of heaven, and think themselves out of the reach of the enemies' hand; those that swim ever so close, as the fishes of the sea, and think themselves out of the reach of the enemies' eyes, shall yet become a prey to them, and be utterly consumed.

2. The children of men; "I will consume man, I will cut off man from the land. The land shall be despeopled and left uninhabited; I will destroy, not only Israel, but man. The land shall enjoy her sabbaths. I will cut off, not only the wicked men, but all men; even the few among them that are good, shall be involved in this common calamity. Though they shall not be cut off from the Lord, yet they shall be cut off from the land." It is with Judah and Jerusalem that God has this quarrel, both city and country, and upon them he will stretch out his hand, the hand of his power, the hand of his wrath, which is a hand stretched out beyond all measure of power and strength. They that shall not humble themselves under his mighty hand, shall be humbled and brought down by it. Note, Even Judah, where God is known, and Jerusalem, where his dwelling-place is, if they revolt from him, and rebel against him, shall have his hand stretched out against them.

3. All wicked people, and all those things that are, are to be cut off. "I will consume the stumbling-blocks with the wicked, the idols with the idolaters, the offences with the offenders." Josiah had taken away the stumbling-blocks, and, as far as he could, had purged the land of the monuments of idolatry, hoping that there would be no more idolatry, but the wicked did wickedly, the dog will return to his vomit, and therefore, since the sin will not otherwise be cured, the sinners must themselves be consumed; even the wicked with the stumbling-blocks of their iniquity. Ezek. xlv. 3. Since it was not done by the sword of justice, it shall be done by the sword of war. See who the sinners are, that shall be consumed.

(1.) The professed idolaters, who avowed idolatry, and were wedded to it. The remnant of Baal shall be cut off, the images of Baal, and the worshippers of those images. Josiah cut off a great deal of Baal; but that which was so close as to escape the eye, or so bold as to escape the hand, of his justice, it shall be done by the sword of war, of it. The Chaldeans would spare none of the images of Baal, or the worshippers of those images. The Chemarims shall be cut off; we read of them in the history of Josiah's reformation; (2 Kings xxviii. 6.) He put down the idolatrous priests, the word is the Chemarim. The word signifies black men; some think because they wore black clothes, affording to spew grave; others, because their faces were black with attending the altars, or the fires in which they burnt their children to Moloch. They seem to have been immediate attendants upon the service of Baal; they shall be cut off with the priests, the regulars with the scelars. The very name of them shall be cut off; the order shall be quite abolished, so as to be forgotten, or remembered with abhorrence. And as the worshippers of the host of heaven upon the house-tops shall be cut off, (v. 5.) who justified themselves in their idolatry with them that did not worship images, the work of their own hands, but offered their sacrifices, and burned their incense, to the sun, moon, and stars, immediately upon the tops of their houses; but God will let them know that he is a jealous God, and will not endure any rival; and through sense was thought that the most specious and plausible idolatry, yet it will appear as great an offence to God, to give divine honours to a star, as to give them to a stone or a stock. Even the worshippers of the host of heaven shall be consumed as well as the worshippers of the beasts of the earth, or the idols of bell. The sin of the adulteress is not the less sinful for the gaiety of the adulterers." (2.) Those also are to be consumed that think to compound the matter between God and idols, and keep an even hand between them; that halt between God and Baal, and worship between Jehovah and Moloch, and swear by both; or, as it might better be read, swear to the Lord, and to Moloch. They bind themselves by oath and covenant to the service both of God and idols; they have a good opinion of the worship of the God of Israel, it is very pleasing to their religion of their country, and has been long so; and therefore they will by no means quit it; but they think it will be very much improved and beautified if they join with it the worship of Moloch, for that also is much used in other countries, and travellers admire it, there is a great deal of good fancy and strong flame in it. They cannot keep always to the worship of the one, and the worship of the other. There is a constant sense of, and therefore they must have an image; and what better than the image of Moloch—a king? They think they shall effectually atone for their sin, if they swear to Moloch, and, pursuant to that oath, burn their children in sacrifice to that idol; and yet if they do amiss in that, they hope to atone for it in worshipping the God of Israel too. Note, Those that think they can divide and partake of the relations between God and idols, will not only come short of acceptance with God, but will have their doom with the worst of idolaters; for what communion can there be between light and darkness, Christ and Belial, God and Mammon? She whose own child is not, pleads for the dividing of it, for if Satan have half, he will have all; but the true mother says, Divide it not, for if God have but half, he will have none. Such waters will not be long sweet, if they come from a fountain that sends forth bitter water too; what have they to do to swear by the Lord, that swear by Malcham?

(3.) Those also shall be consumed, that have apostatized from God, together with those that never gave up their names to him, v. 6. I will cut off, [1.] Them that are turned back from the Lord; that were well taught, and began well, that had given up their names to him, and set out at first in the worship of him, but have flown off, and turned aside, and fallen in with idolaters, but deserted these good ways of God, which he had brought up in, and despised them; these God will be sure to reckon with, who are renegades from his service, who began in the Spirit, and ended in the flesh; they shall be treated as deserters, to whom no mercy is showed. [2.] Those that have not sought the Lord, nor ever inquired for him, never made any profession of religion, and think to excuse themselves with that, shall find that this will not excuse them; nay, that is the thing laid to their charge; they are atheistical, careless people, that live without God in the world; and those that do so, are certainly unworthy to live upon God in the world.

7. Hold thy peace at the presence of the Lord God; for the day of the Lord is at hand; for the Lord hath prepared a sacrifice, he hath bid his guests. 8. And it shall come to pass in the day of the Lord's sacrifice, that I will punish the princes, and the king's children, and all such as are clothed with strange apparel. 9. In the same day also will I punish all those that leap on the threshold, which fill their masters' houses with violence and deceit. 10. And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord, that there shall be the noise of a cry from the fish-gate, and a howling from the second, and a great crashing from the hills. 11. Howl, ye inhabitants of Maktesh, for all the merchant people are cut down; all they that bear silver are cut off. 12. And it shall come to pass at that time, that I will search Jerusalem with candles, and punish the men that are settled on their lees; that say in their heart, The Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil. 13. Therefore their goods shall become a booty, and their houses a desolation; they shall also build houses, but not inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, but not drink the wine thereof.

Notice is here given to Judah and Jerusalem, that God is coming forth against them, and will be with them shortly; his presence, as a just Avenger, his day, the day of his judgment, and his wrath, are not far off, v. 7. Those that improve not the presence of God with them as a Father, but sin away that presence, may expect his presence with them as a Judge, to call them to an account for the contempt put on his grace. The day of the Lord will come; men have their day now, when they take a liberty to do what they please, but God's day is at hand; it is here called his sacrifice, a sacrifice of his preparing; for the punishing of presumptuous sinners is a sacrifice to the justice of God, some reparation to his injured honour; they that brought their offerings to other gods, were justly made themselves victims to the true God. On a day of sacrifice great slaughter was made; so shall there be in Jerusalem, men shall be killed up as fast as lambs for the altar; with as little regret, with as much pleasure; The slain of the Lord shall be many. On a day of sacrifice great feasts were made upon the sacrifices; so the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem shall be feasted upon by their enemies the Chaldeans; these are the guests God has prepared and invited to come and glut themselves—their revenge with slaughter, and their covetousness with plunder. Nor observe, We know, that are that are marked to be sacrificed, that shall be visited and punished in this day of reckoning, and what is it they shall be called to an account for.

1. The royal family, because of the dignity of their place, shall be first reckoned with for their pride, and vanity, and affectation; (v. 8.) I will punish the princes, and the king's children, who think themselves exempt from punishment; they shall find themselves accountable to God, and that, high as they are, he is above them. They shall be punished, and all such as, like them, are clothed with strange apparel, such as, in contempt of their own country, (where, probably, it was the custom to go in a very plain dress, as became the seed of Jacob that plain man,) affected to appear in the dress of princes, lords, and noblemen, or quizzed in apparel; studying to resemble those from whom God had appointed them, even in their clothes, indiscriminately to distinguish themselves. The princes and the king's children, scorned to wear any home-made stuffs, though God had provided them fine linen and silks, (Ezek. xvi. 10.) but they must send abroad to strange countries for their clothes, which could not please unless they were far-fetched and dear-bought; and even those of inferior rank affected to imitate the princes, and the king's children. Pride in apparel is displeasing to God, and a symptom of the degeneracy of a people.

2. The noblemen, and their stewards and servants, come next to be reckoned with; (v. 9.) In the same day will I punish those that leap on the threshold; a phrase, no doubt, well understood then, which probably signified the invading of their neighbours' rights; entering their houses by force and violence, and seizing their possessions, they leap on the threshold; as much as to say, the house is their own, and they will keep their hold of it; and, accordingly, they make all in it their own that they can lay their hands on, and so fill their masters' houses with goods gotten by violence and deceit, and with all the goods thereby contracted. Nor shall it suffice them to say, that the ill-gotten gains were not for themselves, but for their masters, and that what they did was by their order; for the obligations we lie under to keep God's commandments, are prior and superior to the obligations we lie under to serve the interests of any master on earth.

3. The trading people, and the rich merchants, are next called to account; iniquity is found in their end of the town, among the inhabitants of Maktesh, a low part of Jerusalem, deep like a mortar; (for so the word signifies,) the goldsmiths lived there, (Neh. iii. 32.) and the merchants: and they are now cut down, they are broken, and have shut up their shops, and have broken not nor will they that bear silver are cut off, in the first place, by the invaders, for the sake of the silver they carry, which is so far from being a protection to them, that it will expose and betray them. The conquerors aimed at the wealthy men, and carried them off first, while the floor of the land escaped. Or, it may be meant of a general decay of trade, which was a pre face and introduction to the general destruction of the land. It is the token of a declining state, when great dealers are cut down, and great bankers are cast off and become bankrupts, who cannot fall alone, but with themselves ruin many.

4. All the secure and careless people, the sons of pleasure, that live a loose, idle life, are next reckoned with; (v. 12.) they come from all parts of the country, to take up their quarters in the head-quarters of the kingdom, where they take private lodgings, and indulge themselves in ease and luxury; but God will find them out, and put them to death; and by the same I will search Jerusalem with candles, to discover them, that they may be brought out to confign punishment. This intimates that they conceal themselves, as being either ashamed of the sin, or afraid of the punishment of it; when the judgments of God are abroad, they hope to escape by absconding, and getting out of the way; but God will search Jerusalem, as search is made for a malefactor that is harboured by his accomplices; God's hand will find out all his enemies, wherever they lie hid, and will punish not only the secret idolaters, but the secret epicures and profane; and those are they that are here described, and marks are given by which they will be discovered when strict search is made for them. (1.) Their disposi tors are sensuous; they are settled on their teas; in-textures the wine, strengtheneth the, themselves in their wealth and wickedness, they are secure and easy, and, because they have had no changes, they fear none, as Moab, Jer. xxxviii. 11. They had not been emptied from vessel to vessel. They fell themselves with wine and strong drink, and banish all thought, saying, To-morrow shall be as this day, Isa. li. 12. Their being settled on their teas, signifies the same with the Director; They defy the Lord and his dispensing of rewards and punishments; "The Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil; that is, He will do nothing. They deny his providential government in the world; "What good and evil there is in the world, comes by the wheel of fortune, and not by the disposal of a wise and supreme Being." They defy the Lord and his dispensing of rewards and punishments; "The Lord will not do good to those that serve him, nor do evil to those that rebel against him; and therefore there is nothing got by religion, nor lost by sin." This is the effect of their sensuality; if they were not drowned in sense, they could not be thus senseless, nor could they be so stupid, if they had not stupefied themselves with the love of pleasure. It was also the cause of their sensuality; men would not make a god of their belly, if they had not at first become so vain, so vile in their imaginations, as to think the God that made them altogether such a one as themselves. But God will punish them, their end is destruction, Phil. iii. 19.

II. What the destruction will be, with which God will punish those sinners, and what course he will take with them. 1. He will silence them; (v. 7.) Hold thy peace at the presence of the Lord. He will force them to hold their peace, will strike them dumb with horror and amazement: they shall be speechless, all the excuses of their sin, and exceptions against the sentence, will be overruled, and they shall not have a word to say for themselves. 2. He will fill them with the fear of the Lord, that they be not wise; (v. 8.) He will give them into the hands of their enemies, and glorify himself thereby. 3. He will fill both city and country with lamentations; (v. 10.) In that day there shall be the noise of a cry from the fish-gate, so called because near either to the fish-ponds or to the fish-market. It belonged to the city of David; (2 Chron. xxxiii. 14. Neh. in 3.) perhaps the same with that which is called the first-gate, (Zech. xiv. 10.) and if so, it will explain what follows here, And a howling from the second, that is, the second gate, which was next to that fish-gate. The alarm shall go round the walls of Jerusalem, from gate to gate; and there shall be a great crashing from the hills, a mighty noise from the mountains round about Jerusalem, either from the acclamations of the victorious invaders, or from the lamentations of the timorous invaded, or from both. The inhabitants of the city, even of the choicest, that is, the second gate, which was next to that fish-gate, shall bestow their houses shall be levelled with the ground, and be a desolation; those of them that have built new houses, shall not inherit them, but the invaders shall get and keep possession of them. And the vineyards they have planted they shall not drink the wine of; but instead of having it for the relief of their friends that faint among them, they shall part with it for the animating of their foes that fight against them, Deut. xxviii. 30.

14. The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the Lord: the mighty man shall cry there bitterly. 15. That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of fastings and desolations, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of thick darkness. 16. A day of the trumpet and alarm against the fenced cities, and against the high towers. 17. And I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk like blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord: and their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as the dung. 18. Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath; but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy: for he shall make even a speedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land.

Nothing could be expressed with more spirit and life, nor in words more proper to stirle and awaken a secure and careless people, than the warning here given to Judah and Jerusalem, of the approaching destruction by the Chaldeans. That is enough to make the sinners in Zion tremble—that it is the day of the Lord, the day in which he will manifest himself by taking vengeance upon his enemies in that very day of the Lord, a specimen of the day of judgment, a kind of doom's-day, as the last destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans is represented to be in our Saviour's prediction concerning it, Matt. xxvii. 1.

1. This day of the Lord is here spoken of as very near; the vision is not for a great while to come, as those imagine who put the evil day far from them; they deceive themselves with the hope of future prosperity, they are at a distance from it; but if it is near, it is near, it hastens greatly. The prophet gives the alarm like one that is in earnest, like one that awakens a family with the cry of, Fire, fire, when it is at next door that the danger is; "It is near, it is near, and therefore it is high time to bestir yourselves, and do whatever you can for your own safety before it be too late. It is madness for those to clamber, whose Dammnation slumbers not, and to linger when it has
... 2. It is spoken of as a very dreadful day; the very voice of this day of the Lord, the noise of it, when it is coming, shall be so great as to make the mighty men cry there bitterly, cry for fear as children do. It shall be a vexation to hear the report of it. In the last great day of the Lord the mighty men shall cry bitterly to rocks and mountains to shelter them; but in vain. Observe how emphatically the prophet speaks of this day approaching; (v. 15.) It is a day of wrath, God's wrath, wrath to a proverb, will be a day of trouble and distress to the sinners, they shall be in pain, and shall see no ways of easing or helping themselves. The miseries of the damned are summed up (perhaps with reference to this here,) in the indignation and wrath of God, which is the cause, and the tribulation and anguish of the sinner's soul, which is the effect. Rom. ii. 8, 9. It will be a day of trouble and distress to the inhabitants, and a day of wasteness and desolation to the whole land; that fruitful land shall be turned into a wilderness. It shall be a day of darkness and gloominess, everything shall look dismal, and there shall not be the least gleam of comfort, or glimpse of hope; look round, and it is all black. It is a day of clouds and thick darkness; there is not only nothing visible therein, but those thick clouds are big with storms and tempests.
... 3. It is spoken of as a destroying day, - 16, 17. It shall be destroying, (1.) To pillars, even the strongest and best fortified; A day of the trumpet and alarm against the fenced cities, to break into them, and against the high towers, to bring them down; for what forts, what fences can hold out against the wrath of God? (2.) To persons; (v. 17.) I will bring distress upon men, the strongest and stoutest of men; their hearts and hands shall fail them; they shall walk like blind men, wandering endlessly because they have sinned against the Lord. Note. Those that walk as bad men, will justly be left to walk as blind men, always in the dark, in doubt and danger, without any guide or comfort, and falling at length into the ditch. Because they have sinned against the Lord he will deliver them into the hands of cruel enemies, that shall pour out their blood as dust, so profusely, and with as little regret, and their flesh shall be thrown as dung upon the dunghill.
... 4. The destruction of that day will be unavailing and universal, v. 18. (1.) There shall be no escape for them, Nor shall they find mercy in the gold, which they have hoarded up so covetously against the evil day, or which they have spent so prodigiously, to make friends for such a time, shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath. Another prophet borrowed these words from this, with reference to the same event, Ezek. vii. 19. Note. Riches profit not in the day of wrath, Prov. xxx. 15. They lay also a snare for the feet of men. (Ecc. v. 13.) and riches abused to the wrath of God. (2.) There shall be no escaping it by flight or concealment; for the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy; and where then can a hiding-place be found? See what the fire of God's jealousy is, and what the force of it: it will devour with violence; it will be a consuming fire, such as covered Sodom. Before it he shall make riddance, a speedy riddance, of all them that dwell in the land; as the husbandman, when he rides his ground, cuts up all the briers and thorns for the fire. Note. Sometimes the judgments of God make riddance, even utter riddance, with sinful nations, a speedy riddance; their destruction is effected, is completed, in a little time. Let not sinners be laid asleep by the patience of God, for where the measure of their iniquity is full, his justice will both overtake and overcome; will make quick work and thorough work.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter we have, 1. An earnest exhortation to the nation of the Jews to repent and make their peace with God, and so to prevent the thing threatened before it was too late, (v. 1. 3.) and this inferred from the revelation of God's wrath against them in the foregoing chapter. 1. A denunciation of the judgments of God against divers nations, which were then denounced against, or suspected, or rejoiced, in the calamity of Israel. 1. The Philistines, v. 4. 7. 2. The Moabites and Ammonites, v. 8. 11. 3. The Ethiopians and Assyrians, v. 12. 15. All these were no less threatened with God's wrath, all that is put into the hands of God's people, as was also foretold by other prophets before and after.

1. GATHER yourselves together, yea, gather together, O nation not desired; 2. Before the decree bring forth, before the day pass as the chaff, before the fierce anger of the Lord come upon you, before the day of the Lord's anger come upon you. 3. Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness: it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger.

Here we see what the prophet meant in that terrible description of the approaching judgments, which we had in the foregoing chapter, from first to last; his design was to drive the people to desire, and seek, and find nothing but God and his duty, and to frighten them out of their wits, but to frighten them out of their sins. In pursuance of that, he here calls them to repentance, national repentance, as the only way to prevent national ruin.

Observe.

1. The summons given them to a national assembly; (v. 1.) Gather yourselves together. He had told them, in the last words of the Forbearing chapter, that God would make a speedy riddance of all that dwell in the land, upon which, one would think, it should follow, "Disperse yourselves, and flee for shelter where you can find a place." When the decree was absolutely gone forth for the last destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, that was the advice given, (Matt. xxiv. 16.) Then let them which be in Judea, flee into the mountains; but here it is otherwise. God warns, that he may not wound, threatens, that he may not strike, and therefore calls to the people to use means for the turning away of his wrath. The summons is given to a nation not desired. The word signifies either, (1.) Not desiring, that has not any desires toward God, or the remembrance of his name, is not desirous of his favour and grace. It is very different to it, has no mind to repent and reform; "Yet come together, and see if you can stir up desires in one another." Thus God is often found of those that sought him not, nor asked for him, Isa. lxv. 1. Or, (2.) Not desirable, no way lovely, nor having any thing in them amiable, or which might recommend them to God. The study of the word had been a land of delights; (Dan. xi. 41.) but now it is unlovely, it is a nation not desired, to which God might justly say, Depart from me; but he says, "Gather together to me, and let us see if any expedient can be found out for the preventing of the ruin. Gather together, that you may in a body humble yourselves before God, may fast, and pray, and seek his face. Gather together, to consult among yourselves what is to be done in this critical juncture, that every one may consider of it, may give and take advice, and speak his mind; and that what is done or omitted may be done up common, and so may be a national act." Some read it, "Inquire into yourselves, ye, inquire into yourselves; examine your consciences, look into your hearts, search and try your ways; inquire into yourselves, that you may find out the sin by which God has been provoked to this displeasure against you, and may find out the way of returning to him." Note, When God is dealing with us, it concerns us to inquire into ourselves.

2 Arguments urged to press them to the utmost seriousness and expedition herein; (v. 2.) "Do it in earnest, do it with all speed before it be too late, before the decree bring forth, before the day pass." The manner of speaking here is very lively and awakening, designed to make them apprehensive, (as all sinners are concerned to be,) (1.) That their danger is very great, that their all lies at stake, that it is a matter of life and death, which therefore well requires and well deserves the closest application of mind that can be. It is not a trifling, and therefore is not a thing to be trifled about. It is the fierce anger of the Lord that is kindled against them, and is just ready to kindle upon them; that devouring fire which none can cool with water, whose millions of sparks may dart and hold up their head under. It is the day of the Lord's anger, the day set for the pouring out of the full vials of it, that you are threatened with, that great day of the Lord," spoken of, ch. i. 14. "Are you not concerned to prepare for that day?" (2.) That it is very imminent; *Bestir yourselves now quickly, before the decree bring forth, and then it will be too late, the opportunity will be lost, and never retrieved. The decree is as it were big with child, and it will bring forth the day, the terrible day, which shall pass as chaff, which shall hurry you away into captivity, as chaff before the wind." We know not what a day may bring forth, (Prov. xxvii. 1.) but we do know what the decree will bring forth against impenitent sinners, whom therefore it highly concerns to repent in time, in the accepted time. Note, It is the wisdom of those whom God has a controversy with, to agree with him quickly, while they are in the way, before his fierce anger comes upon them, not to be turned away. In a case of this nature delays are highly dangerous, and may be fatal; they will be so if by them the heart is hardened. How solicitous should we all be to make our peace with God before we are brought out upon this great search for us; before the day of grace be over, or the day of life; before our everlasting state shall be determined on the other side the great gulf fixed!

3. Directions prescribed for the doing of this effectually. It is not enough to gather together in a congregation, but they must seriously and calmly apply themselves to the duty of the day; (v. 3.) Seek ye the Lord, that they may find him; for he is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness: Go early here, get upon seeking; for so is the rule, Seek, and ye shall find. A general call was given to the whole nation, to gather together, but little good is to be expected from the far greater part of them; if the land be saved, it must be by the interest and intercession of the pious few, and therefore to them the exhortation here is particularly directed. It is observed, (1.) They are the meek of the earth; or, they are the meek ones of the earth; this is their badge, it is their livery: they are modest, and humble, and low in their own eyes, they are mild and gentle, and yielding to others, not soon angry, not very angry, not long angry, they are the quiet in the land, Ps. xxxiv. 29. And they are subject and submissive to their God, to all his precepts and all providences; actuated by this principle and disposition, they have wrought his judgments, have obeyed his voice, have been lifted up in his contemplation; they have made conscience of their duty to him, and have laid out themselves for the advancement of his honour and interest in the world. (2.) What they are required to do; they must seek; which denotes both a careful inquiry, and a constant endeavour, that they may know and do their duty. [1.] They must seek the Lord, seek his favour and grace, and all those blessings and advantages that appertain to and flow from them; seek him early, seek him diligently, and continue seeking him. [2.] They must seek righteousness; "Seek to God for the performance of his promises to you, and see to it that you abound yet more in duty to him, seek for the righteousness of Christ to be imputed to you, for the graces of God's Spirit to be implanted in you; hunger and thirst after them," [3.] They must seek peace; "for they were so eminently for, that they were denominated the meek of the land; and yet this they must seek. Note, Those that are ever so good, must still strive to be better, those that have ever so much grace, must still be praying and labouring for more. Nay, those that excel in any particular grace, must still seek to excel yet more in that, because in most distresses will be made use of by their friends, and might be expected from them by their friends, and in that they are most apt to be themselves secure. Si dixistis, sufficit, fretatis—Say but, I am all that I ought to be, and you are undone. In the difficult, trying times approaching, the meek will find exercise for all the meekness they have, and all little enough, and therefore should seek it earnestly, and pray that when God in his providence gives them occasion for it, he would by his grace enable them to exercise it, to show all meekness to all men, in all instances; that as the day is, so may the strength be.

4. Encouragements given to take these directions; It may be, you shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger. (1.) "You particularly that are the meek of the earth; though the day of the Lord's anger do come upon the land, yet you shall be safe, you shall be taken under special protection; verily it shall be well with thy remnant, Jer. xv. 11. Thy life wilt I give unto thee for a prey, Jer. xlv. 5. I will deliver thee in that day, Jer. xxxix. 17. It may be, you shall be hid; if any be hid, you shall." Good men cannot be sure of temporal preservation, for all things come alike to all, but they are most likely to be safe who are under the good care of Providence. It is expressed thus doubtfully, to try if they will trust the goodness of God's nature, though they have but the 'it may be' of a promise; and to keep up in them a holy fear and watchfulness, lest they should seem to come short, and should do any thing to throw themselves out of the divine protection. Note, Those that hold fast these important promises, (as they must do, if they have hope to rely upon them,) must have reason to hope that God will find out a hiding-place for them, where they shall be safe and easy in times of common calamity. They shall be hid (as Luther says) aut in caelo, aut sub caelo—either in heaven, or under heaven, either in the possession of heaven, or under the protection of heaven. Or, (2.) "You of this nation, though it be a nation not desirous of, yet, in the day of God's wrath, God will find out a hiding-place for those few meek ones that stand in the gap, to turn away the wrath of God." It concerns us all to make sure to ourselves, that we shall be hid in the great day of God's wrath; and if we hide ourselves in chambers of duty, God will hide us in chambers of safety, Isa. xxvii. 12, 20. If we prepare for, there is an ark, that shall be our hiding-place, Gen. vii. 1.
4. For Gaza shall be forsaken, and Ashkelon a desolation: they shall drive out Ashdod at the noontide, and Ekron shall be rooted up. 5. Wo unto the inhabitants of the sea-coast, the nation of the Cherethites! the word of the Lord is against you; O Canaan, the land of the Philistines, I will even destroy thee, that there shall be no inhabitant. 6. And the sea-coast shall be dwellings and cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks. 7. And the coast shall be for the remnant of the house of Judah; they shall feed thereupon: in the houses of Ashkelon shall they lie down in the evening; for the Lord their God shall visit them, and turn away their captivity.

The prophet here comes to foretell what share the neighbouring nations should have in the destructions made upon those parts of the world by Nebuchadnezzar and his victorious Chaldees, as other of the prophets did at that time; which is designed, (1.) To awaken the people of the Jews, by making them sensible how strong, how deep, how large, the immoderation of these calamities should be, that the day of the Lord, which was near, might appear the more dreadful, and they might thereby be quickened to prepare for it as for a general deluge. (2.) To comfort them with this thought, that their case, though sad, should not be singular; (Solamens: Missor socios habuisse doloris—the wretched find it consolatory to have companions of their woe) and much more of this, that though God had seemed to be their Enemy, and to fight against them, yet he was still so far their Friend, and an Enemy to their enemies, that he retained, and would revenge, the indignities done to them.

In these verses, we have the doom of the Philistines, who were near neighbours, and old enemies, to the people of Israel. Five lordships there were in that country; only four are here named, Gaza and Ashkelon, Ashdod and Ekron; Gath, the fifth, is not named; some think, because it was now subject to Judah. They were the inhabitants of the sea-coasts, (v. 5.) for their country lay upon the Great sea. The nation of the Cherethites is here joined with them, which bordered upon them, (1 Sam. xxx. 14.) and fell with them, as is foretold above. These seven Philistines were here called Canaan, for it belonged to that country which God gave to his people Israel, and was inserted in the grant made to them, Josh. xiii. 3. This land is yet to be possessed, (five lords of the Philistines,) so that they wrongfully kept Israel out of the possession of it, (Judg. iii. 3.) which is now remembered against them. For though the rights of others may be long detained unjustly, the righteous God will at length avenge the wrong. 1. It is here foretold that the Philistines, the usurpers, shall be dispassembled and quite eriptured. In general, here is a wo to them, (v. 5.) which, coming from God, speaks all misery; The word of the Lord is against them;—the word of the former prophets, which, though not yet accomplished, will be its sequel, Isa. xlv. 31. This word, and by this prophet, is against them. Note, Those are really in a woful condition that have the word of the Lord against them, for no word of his shall fall to the ground. They that rebel against the precepts of God's word shall have the threatenings of the word against them. The effect will be no less than their destruction, (1.) God himself will be the Author of it: "I will even destroy thee, who can make good what I say and will." (2.) It shall be a universal destruction, it shall extend itself to all parts of the land, both city and country. Gaza shall be forsaken, though now a populous city; it was forsocked, (Jer. xlv. 6.) that baldness should come upon Gaza; Alexander the great razed that city, and we find, (Acts viii. 26.) that Gaza was a desert. Ashkelon shall be a desolation, a pattern of desolation. Ashdod shall be driven out at noon-day; in the extremity of the scorching heat they shall have no shade, no shelter to protect them; but then, when most incommoded by the weather, they shall be forced away into captivity, which will be an aggravating circumstance of it. Ekron likewise shall be rooted up, that had been long taking root. The land of the Philistines shall be despoiled, there shall be no inhabitant, v. 5. God made the earth to be inhabited, (Isa. xlvi. 14.) otherwise he had made it in vain; but if men do not answer the end of their creation, in serving God, it is just with God that the earth should not answer the end of its creation, in serving them for a habitation; man's sin has sometimes subjected it to this vanity. (3.) It shall be an utter destruction. The sea-coast, which used to be a harbour for ships, and a habitation for merchants, shall now be deserted, and be only cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks, (v. 6.) and then peribus put to better use than when it was possessed by the lords of the Philistines.

2. It is here foretold that the house of Judah, the rightful owners, shall recover the possession of it, v. 7. The remnant of them that shall return out of captivity, when God visits them, shall be made to lie down in safety in the houses of Ashkelon; to lie down in the evening, when they are weary and sleepy. There they shall feed themselves and their flocks. Note, God will at length restore his people to their rights, though they may be long kept out from them.

8. I have heard the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children of Ammon, whereby they have reproached my people, and magnified themselves against their border. 9. Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah, even the breeding of nettles; and salt-pits, and a perpetual desolation: the residue of my people shall spoil them, and the remnant of my people shall possess them. 10. This shall they have for their pride, because they have reproached and magnified themselves against the people of the Lord of hosts. 11. The Lord will be terrible unto them; for he will punish all the gods of the earth; and men shall worship him, every one from his place, even all the isles of the heathen.

The Moabites and Ammonites were both of the posterity of Lot; their countries joined; and, both adjoining to Israel, they are here put together in the prophecy against them. 1. They are both charged with the same crime, and that was, reproaching and reviling the people of God, and triumphing in their calamities; (v. 8.) They have reproached my people; while God's people kept close to their duty, it is probable that they reproached them for the singularities of their religion; and now that they had revolted from God, and were fallen under his displeasure: they re-proached them for that too. It has been the common lot of God's people in all ages, to be reproofed and reviled upon one account or other; thus the old serpent spits his venom; and pride is at the bottom of it, it is in their pride that they have magnified themselves against the people of the Lord of hosts, thinking themselves as good as they, as great, and even wise, as those spoken against by the Lord; and that God's people are filled with, Ps. cxxxiii. 4. They have spoken big (so some read it, magna locuti sunt—they have spoken great things) against their border; (v. 8.) against those of them that bordered upon their country, whom upon all occasions they insulted; or against the profanity they claimed, which they disputed, or the protection they boasted of, upon which they prided themselves, as the people of the Lord of hosts as a deserted, abandoned people; great swelling words of vanity are the genuine language of the church's enemies. "But I have heard them," (says God,) "and will let you know that I have heard them, I have heard, and I will reckon for them,) Jude 15. And if God hears the reproaches and revilings we are under, it is a great comfort to us all, be we despised or feared, be we heard or not, Ps. xxxviii. 14, 15. Nay, God not only takes notice of, but interests himself in, the reproaches cast on his people, because they are his; and it is certain, that they who look with disdain upon the people of the Lord of hosts, thereby displease the Lord of hosts himself. See this very thing charged on Moab and Ammon, Ezek. xxxv. 3, 8.

3. Other nations shall in like manner be humbled, that the Lord alone may be exalted; (v. 11.) The Lord will be terrible unto the Moabites and Ammonites in particular, who have made themselves a terror to his Israel. (1.) Heathen gods must be abolished; they have long had possession, and their worshippers have both glorified, and gloried in them. But the Lord will fulfill all the gods of the earth, will starve them out of their strong holds. The Pagans had a fond conceit, that their idols were regaled by their offerings, and did eat the fat of their sacrifices, Deut. xxxii. 38. Omnia comest a Belo—Bel has eaten all. But it is here promised that when the Christian religion is set up in the world, and believers are the children of the living God, the dumb idols, shall forsake their altars, and bring no more sacrifices to them, and thus they shall be famished, or made lean, as the word is; their priests shall. This speaks the vanity of those idols, it lies in the power of their worshippers to famish them; whereas the true God says, If I were hungry, I would not tell thee. It speaks also the victory of the God of Israel over them; Now know wee, that he is greater than all gods. (2.) Heathen nations must be converted; when the gospel gets ground, by it men shall be brought to worship him who lives for ever, (for that is the command of the everlasting God,) Rev. xiv. 7. If every one for this purpose shall not need to go up to Jerusalem, to worship the God of Israel, but, wherever they are, they may have access to him. I will that men pray every where. God shall be worshipped, not only by all the tribes of Israel, and the strangers who join themselves to them, but by all the isles of the heathen; this is a promise which looks favourably upon God's native country, for it is one of the most consid-erable of the isles of the Gentiles, by which God will be glorified.

12. Ye Ethiopians also, ye shall be slain by my sword. 13. And he will stretch out his hand against the north, and destroy Assyria; and will make Nineveh a desolation, and dry like a wilderness. 14. And flocks shall lie down in the midst of her, all the beasts of the nations: both the comorant and the bittern shall lodge in the upper lintels of it; their voice shall sing in the windows; desolation shall be in the thresholds: for he shall uncover the cedar-work. 15. This is the rejoicing city that dwelt carelessly: that said in her heart, I am and there is none beside me: how is she become a desolation, a place for beasts to lie down in! every one that passeth by her shall hiss, and wag his hand.

The cup is going round, when Nebuchadnezzar is going on conquering and to conquer; and not only Israel's near neighbours, but those that lay more remote, must be reckoned with for the wrongs they had done to God's people; the Ethiopians and the Assyrians are here taken to task. 1. The Ethiopians, or Arabians, that had sometimes been a terror to Israel, (as in Asia's time, 2 Chron. xiv. 9,) must now be reckoned with. They shall be slain by my sword, v. 12. Nebuchadnezzar was God's sword, the instrument in his hand, with which these and other enemies were subdued and punished, Ps. xvii. 14.

2. The Assyrians, and Nineveh the head city of their monarchies, are next set to the bar, to receive their doom. He that is God's sword, will stretch out his hand against the north, and destroy Assyria, and make himself master of it. Assyria had been the rod of God's anger against Israel, and now Babylon is the rod of God's anger against Assyria, Isa. x. 5. He will make Nineveh a desolation, as has been lately and largely foretold by the prophet Nah. v. 18. Observe, (1.) How flourishing Nineveh's estate had formerly been, (v. 15.) This is the rejoicing city that dwelt carelessly. Nineveh was so strong, that she feared no evil, and therefore dwelt carelessly, and set danger at defiance; she was so rich, that she thought herself sure of all good; and therefore was a rejoicing city, full of mirth and gaiety; and she had such a conception of the dignity and glory of her realm, but said in her heart, "I am, and there is none beside me that can compare with me, no city in the world that can pretend to be equal with me." God man, that there is none inhabitant. 7. I said, Surely thou wilt fear me, thou wilt receive instruction: so their dwellings should not be cut off, howsoever I punished them: but they rose early, and corrupted all their doings.

One would wonder that Jerusalem, the holy city where God was known, and his name was great, should be the city of which this black character is here given; that a place which enjoyed such plenty of the means of grace should become so very corrupt and vicious, and that God should permit it to be so; yet so it is, to show that the law made nothing perfect; but if this be the true character of Jerusalem, as no doubt it is, (for God’s judgments will make none worse than they are,) it is no wonder that the prophet begins with wo to her. For the holy God hates sin in those that are nearest to him, nay, in them he hates it most. A sinful state is, and will be, a woful state.

1. Here is a very bad character given of the city in general; how is the faithful city become a harlot! 1. She shamest herself; she is filthy and polluted, has made herself infamous; (so some read it; v. 1.) the glutinous city, (so the margin,) always cramming, and making great provision for the pleasures of the lusts of it. Sin is the filthiness and pollution of persons and places, and makes them odious in the sight of the holy God. 2. She wrongs her neighbours and inhabitants; she is the oppressing city; never any place had statutes and judgments so righteous as this city had, and yet, in the administration of the government, never was more unmercifulness. 2. She is very showing off God, and in every respect walks contrary to him, v. 2. He has given his law, and spoken to her by his servants the prophets, telling her what is the good she should do, and what the evil she should avoid; but she obeyed not his voice, nor made conscience of doing as he commanded her, in any thing. He has taken her under an excellent discipline, both of the word and of the rod; but she did not receive the instruction of the one, or the correction of the other; did not submit to God’s will, nor answer his end in either. He encouraged her to depend upon him, and his power and promise, for deliverance from evil, and supply with good; but she trusted not in the Lord; her confidence was placed in her alliances with the nations more than in her covenant with God. He gave her her tokens of his presence, and instituted ordinances of communion for her with himself; but she drew not near to her God, did not meet him where he appointed, and where he promised to meet her. She stood at a distance, and said to the Almighty, Depart.

2. Here is a very bad character of the leading men in this city, that should by their influence suppress vice and iniquity, and so be a blessing to the metropolis and patrons of it; and those that should be her physicians, are really her worst disease. 1. Her princes are ravenous and barbarous as roaring lions that make a prey of all about them; and they are universally feared and hated; they use their power for destruction, and not for edification. 2. Her judges, who should be the protectors of injured innocence, are evening wolves; rapacious wolves, that prey cruelly and covetously both lustfully; They gnaw not the bones till the morrow; they take so much delight and pleasure in cruelty and oppression, that when they have devoured a good man, they reserve the bones, as it were, for a sweet morsel, to be gnawed the next morning, Job xxxi. 31. 3. Her prophets, who pretended to be special messengers from heaven to them, were light and vicious persons, fanciful, and of a vain imagination, ZEPHANIAH, III.

in them, no inhabitant, all were slain, or carried into captivity. The enemies did it, but God avows it; I cut them off, says he. And God designed this for an admonition to Jerusalem; (Ezek. xxiii. 9, 11.) "I said, Surely thou wilt fear me, surely these judgments upon others will deter thee from the like wicked practices; surely thou wilt receive instruction by these providences; it ought reasonably to be expected, that thou wouldest not continue to sin like the nations, when thou seest the ruin which their sin brought upon them." They could not but see their own house in danger, when their neighbour's was on fire: and when we are frightened God should not be surprised.

3. He had set before them life and death, good and evil, both in his word and in his providence.

(1.) He had assured them of the continuance of their prosperity, if they would fear him and receive instruction, for their dwelling would not be cut off as their neighbour's was; if they took the warning given them, and reformed, what was past should be pardoned, and their tranquillity lengthened out.

(2.) He had made them feel the smart of the rod, though he reproved them from the sword; However I punish them, that, being chastened, they might not be condemned: such various methods did God take with them, to reclaim them, but all in vain; they were not won upon by gentle methods, nor had severe ones any effect, for they rose early, and corrupted all their doings; they were more remiss and careless in their worst hours than ever; more studious and solicitous in making provision for their lusts, and let slip no opportunity for the gratification of them. God rose up early to send them his prophets, to reduce and reclaim them, but they were up before him, to shut and bolt the door against them. Their wickedness was universal; all their doings were corrupted, and it was all owing to themselves, they could not lay the blame upon the tempter, but they alone must bear it; they themselves wilfully and designedly corrupted all their doings; for every man is tempted, when he is drawn aside of his own lust and enticed.

8. Therefore wait ye upon me, saith the LORD, until the day that I rise up to the prey; for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger: for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy.

9. For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the LORD, to serve him with one consent. 10. From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia my suppliants, even the daughter of my dispersed, shall bring mine offering.

11. In that day shalt thou not be ashamed for all thy doings, wherein thou hast transgressed against me; for then I will take away out of the midst of thee those that rejoiced in thy pride; and thou shalt no more be haughty because of my holy mountain. 12. I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the LORD. 13. The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth: for they shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid.
Things looked very bad with Jerusalem in the foregoing verses; she is got into a very bad name, and seems to be incorrigible, incurable, mercy-proof and judgment-proof. Now one would think it should follow, therefore expect no other but that she should be utterly abandoned and rejected, as refractory silver; since they will not be wrought upon by prophets or providences, let them be made a desolation as their neighbours have been: but here a merciful and gracious hand of God is seen, which takes occasion from man's badness, to appear so much the more illustrious. They still grew worse and worse; therefore wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, v. 8. Since the law, it seems, will make nothing perfect, the bringing in of a better hope shall; let those that lament the corruptions of the church, wait upon God, till he send his Son into the world, to save his people from their sins; he will send his gospel to reform and refine his church, and to purify to himself a peculiar people both of Jews and Gentiles. And there were those who, according to this direction and encouragement, waited for redemption, for this redemption in Jerusalem; and long-looked for came at last, Luke xi. 38. For judgment shall come into this world, John ix. 39. I. Principalities and powers of this world, he promises, shall destroy his church, to bring down and destroy the enemies of it, its spiritual enemies; of which the destruction of Babylon, and other the oppressors of God's people, in the Old Testament times, was a type, and would be a happy presage. He will rise up to the heavenly, to lead captivity captive, (Ps. lxxxvii. 18.) to conquer and spoil the powers of darkness, and the powers on earth, that let themselves wrestle against the Lord and his anointed; he will break them with a rod of iron, (Ps. ii. v. 9.—xi. 5, 6.) his determination is to gather the nations, and to assemble the kingdoms. By the gospel of Christ preached to every creature all nations are summoned, as it were, to appear in a body before the Lord Jesus, who is about to set up his kingdom in the world. But since the greatest part of mankind will not obey the summons, he will pour upon them his indignation, for he that believeth not is condemned already. At the time of the setting up of the kingdom of the Messiah, there shall be on earth distress of nations with perplexity, (Luke xxii. 25.) great tribulation, such as never was, or ever shall be, Matth. xxiv. 21. Then God pours upon the nations his indignation, even as a thief cometh into his house, and shall take away his treasures, Ps. lxxiv. 1. But it is not only against the Messiah and his kingdom, Ps. ii. 1, 2. Then all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of his jealousy. Both Jews and Gentiles shall be reckoned with for their enmity to the gospel. Principalities and powers shall be shod, and made a show of open Fire, and the victorious Redeemer shall triumph over them. The end of those that continue to be of the earth, and to mind earthly things, after God has set up the kingdom of heaven among men shall be destruction, (Phil. iii. 19.) they shall be devoured with the fire of God's jealousy.

II. To amend what he finds amiss in his church. When God intends the restoration of Israel, and the revival of their peace and prosperity, he makes way for it by their reformation, and the revival of their virtue and piety; for this is God's method, both with his own persons and with communities, first, to make them holy, and then to make them happy. These promises were in part accomplished after the return of the Jews out of Babylon, when by their captivity they were thoroughly cured of their idolatry; and this was all the fruit, even the taking away of sin but it looks further, to the blessed effects of the going of the grace of Christs times of reformation in which we live, Heb. ix. 10.

1. It is promised that there shall be a reformation in men's discourse, which had been generally corrupt, but should now be with grace seasoned with salt; (v. 9.) Then will I turn to the people a pure language; I will turn the people to such a language, from that evil communication which had almost ruined all good manners among them. Note, Converting grace refines the language, not by making the phrases witty, but the substance wise. Among the Jews, after the captivity, there needed a reformation of the dialect, for they had mingled the tongue of the Gentiles with the Hebrew. (Isa. xi. 24.) and that grievance shall be redressed. But that is not all; their language shall be purified from all profaneness, filthiness and falseness; I will turn them to a choice language; so some read it; they shall not speak rashly, but with caution and deliberation; they shall choose out their words. Note, An air of purity and piety in common conversation is a great happiness to men; and he that shall pray for grace the blessings, shall be given where God gives a pure language to those that have been a people of uncircumcised tongues.

2. That the worship of God, according to his will, shall be more closely applied to, and more unani mously concurred in. Instead of sacrifice and incense, they shall call upon the name of the Lord, prayer is the spiritual offering with which God must be pleased, and the honours of his throne. And as it is necessary that we have a pure language, we are utterly unfit to take God's name into our lips, unless they be pure lips. The purifying of the language in common conversation, is necessary to the acceptableness of the words of our mouth, and the meditation of our heart in our devotion; for how can sweet waters and bitter come out of the same fountain, Matthew xii. 38. 39. It is likewise proper that their language being thus purified, they shall serve God with one consent; with one shoulder, so the word is; alluding to oxen in the yoke, that draw even; when Christians are unanimous in the service of God, the work goes on cheerfully. This is the effect of the pure language, purified from passion, envy, and censoriousness. Note, Purity is the way to unity; the reformation of manners the way to a comprehension; the wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable.

3. That those that were driven from God, shall return to him, and be accepted of him; (v. 10.) From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia; from Egypt, so described, (Isa. xviii. 1.) or from some other very remote country, my suffrants, even the daughter of my dispersed, is a name of import. They are those that by reason of their distance had almost forgotten God, and their obligations to him, shall be put in mind of him, as the prodigal son was of his father's house, in the far country. These that by reason of their dispersion, under the tokens of their displeasure, might be afraid of coming to him, yet even they shall be gathered under his wings; the daughter of his dispersed, that is afar off, will be found among those whom the Lord our God shall call and though they are dispersed he will own them for his; his calling them my dispersed, puts honour upon them, sufficient to balance all the disgrace of their dispersion. These shall come, (1.) With their humble petitions; They are my suffrants. Note, True converts are suffrants to God; they do not plead, but they are come. (2.) ix. 13, and wherever they are, though beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, a great way off from his house of prayer, he has his eye upon them, and his ear open to them, they are his suffrants. (2.) With their spiritual sacrifices they shall bring mine offering; shall bring themselves as spiritual sacrifices to God, Rom. xii. 1. The conversion of the Gentiles is called the bringing of the Gentiles, (Rom. xv. 16.) and with themselves they shall offer unto God, sacrifice-sacrifices of prayer, and praise, and alms, with which God is well pleased.
4. That sin and sinners shall be purged out from among them, v. 11. God will take away, (1.) Their just reproach; In that day shall thou not be ashamed for all thy doings. They shall be ashamed as penitents, and shall continue to be so, (see Ezek. xvi. 63.) but they shall not be ashamed as sinners that return; for (Jer. vii. 16.) I will cleanse them after I purify thee. Take thee not thyself; thou shalt not more do a shameful thing, as thou hast done. The guilt of sin being taken away by pardoning mercy, the reproach of it shall be rolled away from the sinner's own conscience, that being purified, and pacified, and cleansed from dead works. When wickedness and wicked people abound in a nation, those few in it that are good, are scattered on the land of their land; but when sinners are converted, and the land reformed, that shame and the cause of it are removed. (2.) Their unjust glorifying; I will take away out of the midst of thee, not only the profane, who are a shame to thy land, but the hypocrites, who appear beautiful outwardly, and rejoice in thy pride, in the holy city, the holy house; these were indeed Israel's glory, but they made them their pride, and rejoiced in them, as if they were an invincible bulwark, to secure them in their sinful ways; they relied on them as their righteousness and strength, boasting of the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord; (Jer. vii. 4.) they were haughty because of the holy mountains; were converted of themselves, scornful of others, and set even the judgments of God at defiance. Note, Church-privileges, when they are not duly employed, to promote a knowledge of God and his ways; they made the matter of men's pride, and the ground of their security. But that haughtiness is of all other the most offensive to God, which is supported and fed by the pretensions of holiness. This God will silence and take away.

5. That God will have a remnant of holy, humble, serious people among them, that shall have the comfort of their relation to him, and interest in him; (v. 12.) I will leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people. When the Chaldeans carried away the Jews into captivity, they left the poor of the land for vine-dressers and husbandsmen, a type and figure of God's distinguished remnant, whom he sets apart for himself; they are afflicted and poor, low in the world; such God has chosen, James ii. 5. The poor are evangelized, low in these states, and are not cast aside and afflicted for sin, poor in spirit. They are God's leaving, for it is a remnant according to the election of grace. I have reserved them to myself, says God, (Rom. xi. 4, 5.) and they shall trust in the name of the Lord. Note, Those whom God designs for the glory of his name, he enables to trust in his name. And the greater their affliction and poverty in the world are, the more reason they see to trust in God, having nothing else to trust to. 1 Tim. v. 5. Tongues found in their mouth, not in the mouth of any of them; not the least equivocation shall come from them. (3.) They shall be blessed with peace. They shall, as the sheep of God's pastures, feed, and lie down, and none shall make them afraid. They shall not be fearful themselves, nor shall any about them be frightful to them. Note, Those that are careful to be pure in their own persons need not be afraid of any calamity, for it cannot hurt them, and therefore should not terrify them.

14. Sing, O daughter of Zion; shout, O Israel; be glad and rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem. 15. The Lord hath taken away thy judgments, he hath cast out thine enemy: the king of Israel, even the Lord, is in the midst of thee: thou shalt not see evil any more. 16. In that day it shall be said to Jerusalem, Fear thou not; and to Zion, Let not thy hands be slack. 17. The Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty; he will save, he will rejoice over thee with joy; he will rest in his love; he will joy over thee with singing. 18. I will gather them that are sorrowful for the solemn assembly who are of thee, to whom the reproach of it was a burden. 19. Behold, at that time I will undo all that afflict thee; and I will save her that halteth, and gather her that was driven out; and I will get them praise and fame in every land where they have been put to shame. 20. At that time will I bring you again, even in the time that I gather you: for I will make you a name and a praise among all people of the earth, when I turn back your captivity before your eyes, saith the Lord.

After the promises of taking away of sin, here follow promises of the taking away of trouble; for when the cause is removed, the effect will cease. What makes a people holy, will make them happy of course. The precious promises here made to the purified people, were to have their full accomplishments in the comforts of the gospel; in the hope, and much more in the enjoyment, of which, they are here called upon, (1.) To rejoice and sing; (v. 14.) Sing, O daughter of Zion, sing for joy, shout, O Israel, in a holy transport and exultation; be glad and rejoice with all the heart; let the joy be inward, let it be great; those that love God with all their heart have occasion with all their heart to rejoice in him. Note, Rejoice as persons that hope in God. (v. 15.) that their sins should be mortified, and they should rejoice in all things, and say, Sing and rejoice. Note, Those that reform, have cause to rejoice; whereas Israel cannot rejoice for joy as other people, while she goes a whoring from her God. God's promises, applied by faith, furnish the saints with constant and abundant matter for joy; they are filled with joy and peace in believing them. (2.) To throw off all their discouragements; (v. 16.) In that day it shall be said to Jerusalem, God will say it by his prophets, by his pro- visions, their neighbours shall say it, they shall say it to one another, "Fear thou not, be not disposed to fear, do not easily admit the impressions of it; when things are bad, fear not their being worse, but hope they will mend; frighten not thyself upon every occasion. Let not thy hands be slack or faint; wring not thy hands, nor do any thing to disquiet thyself, disquiet thyself for thy work and warfare, by giving way to doubts and fears. Plead up thy spirits, and, in token of that, lift up thy hands, the hands that hang down, Heb. xii. 12. Isa. xxxv. 2. Lift up thy hands in prayer to God, lift up thy hands to help thyself." Fear makes the hands slack, but faith and hope make them vigorous, and the joy of the Lord will be our strength both for doing and suffering.

Let us now see what these precious promises are, which are here made to the people of God, for the banishing of their griefs and fears, and the encouraging of their hopes and joys; and to us are these promises made as well as to them.

1. An end shall be put to all their troubles and distresses; (v. 15.) "The Lord has taken away thy judgments; has removed all the calamities thou hast been groaning under, which were the punishments of thy sin; the noise of war shall be silenced, the reproach of famine done away, and the captivity brought back. Though some grievances remain, they shall be only temporary; the end of the day of their sin shall be pardoned. He has cast out thine enemy, that has thrust himself into thy land, and triumphed over thee. He has swept out thine enemy, (so some read it,) "as dust is swept out of the house to the dunghill." When they sweep out their sins with the besom of reformation, God will sweep out their enemies with the besom of destruction. If they should need correction, they shall fall short of the grandeur of the Lord, whose mercies are great, and shall not again fall into the hands of man, whose tender mercies are cruel; Thou shalt not see evil any more, not such evil days as thou hast seen. Note, The way to get clear of the evil of trouble, is to keep clear from the evil of sin; and to them that do so, trouble has no real evil in it.

2. The appointed time shall bring them the tokens of his presence with them; though he has long seemed to stand at a distance, (they having provoked him to withdraw,) he will make it to appear that he is with them of a truth; "The Lord is in the midst of thee, O Zion, of thee, O Jerusalem, as the sun in the centre of the universe, to diffuse his light and influence upon every part. He is in the midst of thee, to preside in all things, and to take care of all the events and occurrences of thy affairs, (as the sun presides over all the events of the day, and governs all the occurrences of the weather.) And, (1.) He is the King of Israel, (v. 15.) and is in the midst of thee as a King in the midst of his people." With an eye to this, our Lord Jesus is called the King of Israel; (John i. 49.) and he is, and will be, in the midst of his church always, even to the end of the world, to receive the homage of his subjects, and to give out his favours to them, even where but two or three are gathered together in his name. (2.) "He is the Lord thy God, thine in covenant, and he is in the midst of thee as thy God, whom thou hast an interest in, and of whose thou art. He has put himself into dear relation to thee, laid himself by promise under obligations to thee, and, that thou mayest have abundant comfort in both, he is in the midst of thee, nigh at hand, to bless thee, and guide thee, and be a protection against all thy adversities and enemies. And, (3.) "He that is in the midst of thee as thy God and King, is mighty, is almighty, is able to do all that for thee that thou needest, and canst desire." (4.) "He has engaged his power for thy succour; He will save; he will be Jesus; will answer the name, for he will save his people from their sins.'

3. God will take delight in them, and in doing them good. The expressions of this are very lively and affecting; (v. 17.) He will rejoice over thee with joy, will not only be well pleased with thee upon thy repentance and reformation, and take thee into favour, but will take a complacency in thee, as the bridgework does in his bride, or the bride in her ornaments, Isa. lxxiii. 3." The conversion of sinners and the consolation of saints are the joy of angels, for the free grace of God is "the joy of the Lord himself. The church should be the joy of the whole earth, (Ps. lxxxviii. 2.) for it is the joy of the whole heaven. He will rest in his love, will be silent in his love; so the word is, "I will not rebuke thee as I have done, for thy sins; I will acquiesce in thee, and in my relation to thee. I know not where there is the like expression of Christ's love in his church, unless in the song of songs, Cant. iv. 9. Thou art all fair, my love, my spouse, with one of thine eyes. O the condescensions of divine grace! The great God not only loves his saints, but he loves to love them, is pleased that he has pitched upon these objects of his love. He will joy over them with singing. He that is grieved for the sin of sinners, rejoices in the graces and services of the saints, and is ready to express that joy, by singing over them. The Lord takes pleasure in them that fear him, and in them Jesus Christ will shortly be glorified and admired.

4. God will comfort Zion's mourners, who sympathize with her in her griefs, and will wipe away their tears; (v. 18.) "He will be merciful to them; for the solemn assemblies, to whom the reproach of it was a burthen. See, (1.) Who are they whom God will rejoice in, and make to rejoice: they are such as are sorrowful. They only must expect to reap in joy, that sow in tears. The sorrowful now shall be for ever joyful. (2.) What is the great matter of sorrow to Zion's mourners, when she is in mourning, it is the reproach of it. Many are the calamities of the city are ruined, and the palaces are demolished; trade is at an end, and the administration of public justice; but all these are nothing to them, in comparison with the desolations of the sanctuary, the destruction of the temple and the altar; to attend on which, in solemn feasts, all Israel used to come together three times a year. It is for those that these solemn assemblies are a fearful thing to all good people. If the ways of Zion mourn, the sons of Zion mourn too. And hereby they make it to appear that they are indeed of Zion, living members of that body with the grievances of which they are so sensibly affected. (2.) Because they are dispersed; the reproach of the solemn assemblies is a burthen to them. It had been the lot of the solemn assemblies to lie under a great deal of reproach. Satan and his instruments having a particular spite at them, as the great support of the interest of God's kingdom among men. Black and odious characters have been put upon those assemblies; and this is a burthen to all those that have a cordial concern for the glory of God, and the welfare of the souls of men. They reckon that the reproaches of those who represent them in solemn assemblies, fall upon them, fall full on them.

5. God will recover the captives out of the hands of their oppressors, and bring home the banished that seemed to be expelled, v. 19, 20. (1.) Their enemies shall be disabled to detain them in bondage. At that time I will undo all that afflict thee, will break their power, and blast their counsels, so that they shall be forced to surrender the prey they have taken. Confiscated—"I will take them to task, I will be doing with them shortly, and so as to make an end of them." Note, Those that abuse and oppress God's people, take the ready way to undo themselves. (2.) They shall be enabled to assert and recover their liberty, and all the difficulties in the way of it shall be surmounted. Is the church once free, and secure from sinners, then, as it was promised, Mic. iv. 7. He will help her when she cannot help herself; even the lame shall take the flrey, Isa. xxxiii. 23. Is she dispersed, and not likely to incorporate for her common benefit? I will gather her that was driven out, and bring her again, at the time that I gather her. One act of mercy and grace shall serve both to collect them of their dispersion, and to set them in their own land. When the people's hearts are prepared, the work will be done suddenly; and who can hinder it, if God undertake to effect it? 'Twill turn back your Captivity before your eyes, saith the Lord; you shall plainly discern the hand of God in it, and say, This is the Lord's doing."

6. God will by all this put honour upon them, and gain them respect from all about them. Israel was at first made high above all nations in praise and name, Deut. xxxvi. 19. The reproach brought upon them was therefore one of the sorest of their grievances: (nothing cuts deeper to those that are in honour, than disgrace does;) and therefore, when God returns in mercy to his church, it is here promised that she shall regain her credit; all the reproach shall be forever rolled away, as Israel's at Gilgal, Josh. vi. ix. The church shall be as honourable as ever she has been despicable. (1.) Even those that have reproached her, shall be made to respect her; I will give them praise and name in every land, where they have been put to shame; that the same who were the witnesses of their disgrace, may see cause to change their mind concerning them. They that said, "This is Zion whom no man looks after," shall say, "This is Zion whom the great God looks after." And she that was looked upon to be the offscouring of the earth, now appears to be the darling of heaven. (2.) Even those that never knew her, shall be brought to honour her; (v. 20.) I will make you a name and a praise among all people of the earth; so the Jewish church was, when the fear of the Jews fell upon their neighbours, (Esth. viii. 17.) and some of all nations said, We will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you, Zech viii. 23. So the Christian church was, when it was made to flourish in the world, for there is that in it, which may justly recommend it to the value and esteem of all the people of the earth. And so the universal church of the first-born will be in the great day; when the saints shall be brought together to Christ, that he may be admired and glorified in them, and they admired and glorified in him before angels and men. Then will God's Israel be made a name and a praise to eternity.
AN EXPOSITION,

WITH

OF THE PROPHECY OF

HAGGAI.

The captivity of Babylon gave a very remarkable turn to the affairs of the Jewish church, both in history and prophecy. It is made a signal epocha in our Saviour's genealogy, Matth. 1. 17. Nine of the twelve minor prophets, whose oracles we have been hitherto consulting, lived and preached before their captivity, and most of them had an eye to it in their prophecies, foretelling it as the just punishment of Jerusalem's wickedness. But the three last (in whom the Spirit of prophecy took its period, until it revived in Christ's forerunner) lived and preached after the return out of captivity; not immediately upon it, but some time after. Haggai and Zechariah appeared much about the same time, eighteen years after the return, when the building of the temple was both retarded by its enemies, and neglected by its friends. Then the prophets, Haggai the prophet, and Zechariah the son of Iddo, prophesied unto the Jews that were in Jerusalem, in the name of the God of Israel, even unto them, (so we read Ezra v. 1.) to reprove them for their remissness, and to encourage them to revive that good work when it had stood still for some time, and to go on with it vigorously, notwithstanding the opposition they met with in it. Haggai began two months before Zechariah, who was raised up to second him, that out of the mouth of two witnesses the word might be established. But Zechariah continued longer at the work; for all Haggai's prophecies, that are recorded, were delivered within four months, in the second year of Darius, between the beginning of the sixth month and the end of the ninth. But we have Zechariah's prophecies dated above two years after, Zech. vii. 1. Some have the honour to lead, others to last, in the work of God. The Jews ascribe to these two prophets the honour of being members of the Great Synagogue, (as they call it,) which was formed after the return out of captivity; we think it more certain, and it was their honour, and a much greater honour, that they prophesied of Christ. Haggai spake of him as the Glory of the latter house, and Zechariah as the Man, the Branch. In them the light of that Morning-Star shone more bright than in the foregoing prophecies, as they lived nearer the time of the rising of the Sun of righteousness, and now began to see his day approaching. The LXX. make Haggai and Zechariah to be the penman of Ps. cxxxviii. and of Ps. cxlvii, cxlvii, and cxlviii.

HAGGAI, I.

CHAP. I.

In this chapter, after the preamble of the prophecy, we have, 1. A reproof of the people of the Jews for their dilatoriness and slothfulness in building the temple, which had provoked God to contend with them by the judgment of famine and scarcity; with an exhortation to them to resume that good work, and to prosecute it in good earnest, v. 1. 11. 2. The good success of this sermon, appearing in the people's return and close application to that work, wherein the prophet, in God's name, animated and encouraged them, assuring them that God was with them, v. 12. 15.

1. In the second year of Darius the king, in the sixth month, in the first day of the month, came the word of the Lord, by Haggai the prophet, unto Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, saying, 2. Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, This people say, The time is not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built. 3. Then came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying, 4. Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your ceiled houses, and this house lie waste?
5. Now, therefore, thus saith the Lord of hosts, Consider your ways. 6. Ye have sown much, and brought in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but ye are not warm; and he that earneth wages, earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes. 7. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Consider your ways. 8. Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the Lord. 9. Ye looked for much, and lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow upon it. Why? saith the Lord of hosts. Because of my house that is waste, and ye run every man unto his own house. 10. Therefore the heaven over you is stayed from dew, and the earth is stayed from her fruit. 11. And I called for a drought upon the land, and upon the mountains, and upon the corn, and upon the new wine, and upon the oil, and upon that which the ground bringeth forth, and upon men, and upon cattle, and upon all the labour of the hands.

It was the complaint of the Jews in Babylon, that they saw not their signs, and there was no more any prophet (Ps. Lxxv. 9.) which was a just judgment upon them for mocking and misusing the prophets. We read of no prophets they had in their return, as there were in their coming out of Babylon. Hos. 2. 13. God stirred them up immediately by his Spirit to exert themselves in that escape; (Ezra i. 5.) for though God makes use of prophets, he needs them not, he can do his work without them. But the lamp of Old Testament prophecy shall yet make some bright and glorious efforts before it expire; and Haggai is the first that appears under the character of a special commission to give the word of the Lord had been long firecast, (as when prophecy began, 1 Sam. iii. 1.) and there had been no open vision. In the reign of Darius Hystaspes, the third of the Persian kings, in the second year of his reign, the prophet was sent; and the word of the Lord came to him, and came by him, to the leading men among the Jews, who are here named, v. 1. The chief governor, 1. In the state: that was Zerubbabel, the son of Shealtiel, of the house of David, who was commander-in-chief of the Jews, in their return out of captivity. 2. In the church; and that was Joshua the son ofNosedach, who was now high priest. They were great men, and good men, and yet were to be stirred up to their duty when they grew remiss. What the people also were faulty in they must be told of, that they might use their power and interest for the welfare of it. The prophets, who were extraordinary messengers, did not go about to set aside the ordinary institutions of magistracy and ministry, but endeavoured to render both more effectual for the ends to which they were appointed, for both ought to be supported. Now observe,

I. What the sin of the Jews was at this time, v. 1. 2. As soon as they came up out of captivity, they set up an altar for sacrifice, and within a year after laid the foundations of a temple, (Ezra xii. 10.) they then seemed very forward in it, and it was likely enough that the work would be done suddenly; but being served with a prohibition some time after from the Persian court, and charged not to go on with it, they not only yielded to the force, when they were actually under it, which might be excused, but, afterward, when the violence of the opposition was abated, they continued very indifferent: to it, had no spirit or courage to set about it again, but seemed glad that they had a pretence to set it up at last. The temple desired for God, may be driven off from their work by storm, yet they must return to it as soon as the storm is over. These here did not so, but continued loitering, until they were refreshed and revived of their duty. And that which they suggested one to another was, The time is not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built; that is, Our time of wealth and plenty is not come, when we are able to support and repair the temple, when our losses are not yet recovered, nor have we yet got beforehand in the world; it is too great an undertaking for new beginners in the world, as we are.—let us first get our own houses up, before we talk of building churches; and in the mean time let a bare altar serve us, as it did our father Abraham. They did not say that they would not build a temple at all, but, Not yet; it is all in good time. Note, Many a good word is put by, by being put off; as Felix put off the prosecution of his convictions to a more convenient season. They do not say that they will never repent and reform, and he religious, but, Not yet. And so the great business we were sent into the world to do, is not done, under pretence that it is all in good time to do it about, or whenever; is 2. They do not attend to the doing of it; for (say they) the restraint laid upon us by authority in a legal way is not broken off, therefore we ought not to proceed, though there be a present connivance of authority. Note, There is an aptness in us to misinterpret providential discouragements in our duty, as if they amounted to a discharge from our duty, when they are only intended for the trial and exercise of our courage and faith. It is bad to neglect our duty, but it is worse to vouch Providence for the patronizing of our neglects.

II. What the judgments of God were, by which they were punished for this neglect, v. 6. 9.—11. They neglected the building of God's house, and put that off, that they might have time and money to do their secular affairs, and to run away from the expensive piece of work, under this pretence, that they must provide for their families; their children must have meat and portions too, and until they have got beforehand in the world, they cannot think of rebuilding the temple. Now that the punishment might answer to the sin, God in his providence kept them still behindhand. And that poverty which they thought to prevent by not building the temple, God brought upon them for not building it. They were sensible of the smart of the judgments, and every one complained of the unseasonable weather, and the great losses they sustained in their corn and cattle, and the decay of trade; but they were not sensible of the cause of the judgment, and the ground of God's controversy with them; they did not, or would not, see and own that it was proceeding from their neglecting the building of the temple that they lay under these manifest tokens of God's displeasure; and therefore God here gives them notice that this was it for which he contended with them. Note, We need the help of God's prophets and ministers to expound to us, not only the judgments of God's mouth, but the judgments of his hands, that we may understand his mind and mean in his rod as well as in his word; to discover to us, not only wherein we have offended God, but wherein God shows himself offended at us. Let us observe,

1. How God contended with them. He did not send them into captivity again, nor bring a foreign enemy upon them, as they deserved, but took the correcting of them into his own hands, for his mercies are great (1). But those who have not sowed wheat, did not bless upon the seed sown, and then it never prospered; they had nothing, or next to nothing, from it. They sowed much, v. 6. kept a deal of ground in tillage, which, they might expect, would turn to a better advantage than usual, because their land had long lain fallow, and had enjoyed its sabbaths. Having sowed much, they looked for much from the Lord. He is God, the Creator, and they hoped for that; but they were disappointed; they bring in little, very little; (v. 6.) when they have made the utmost of it, it comes to little; (v. 9.) it did not yield as they expected, Isa. v. 10. The seed of an honor shall yield an ephah, a bushel’s sowing shall yield a peck. Note, Our expectations from the creature are often most frustrated when they are most raised; and then when we look for much it comes to little, or that our expectation may be from God only, in whom it will be outdone. We are here told how they came to be disappointed; (v. 10.) The heaven over you is staid from dew; he that has the key of the clouds in his hands, shut them up, and withheld the rain, when the ground called for it, the former or the latter rain, and then of course the earth is staid from fresh showers. For it is mere wind, the earth is as iron. The corn perhaps came up very well, and promised a very plentiful crop, but, for want of the dew at eating-time, it never filled, but was parched with the heat of the sun, and withered away. The restored captives, who had long been kept bare in Babylon, thought they should never want, when they had got their own land again possession again, and had what it commanded. But what the better are they for it, unless they had the clouds at command too; God will make us sensible of our necessary and constant dependence upon him, throughout all the links in the chain of second causes, from first to last; so that we can at no time say, “Now we have no further occasion for God and his providence.” See Hos. ii. 21. But God not only withheld the cooling rains, but he appointed the scorching heats, (v. 11.) I called for a drought upon the land, ordered the weather to be extremely hot, and then the fruits of the earth were burnt up. See how every creature is that to us, that God makes it to be, either comfortable or afflicting, serving us, or incommending us. Nothing among the interior creatures is so needful to us, as without it the sun, that is to say, that puts life into the plants, and renews the face of the earth at spring. And yet, if that go into an extreme, it undoes all again. Our Creator is our best Friend; but if we make him our Enemy, we make the best friends we have among the creatures our enemies too. This drought God calls for, and it came at the call; as the winds and the waves, so the rays of the sun, obey it. It was universal, and the ill effects of it were general; it was a drought upon the mountains, which, lying high, were first affected with it, the mountains were their pasture-grounds, and used to be covered over with flocks, but now there is no grass for them. It was upon the corn, the new wine, and the oil; all failed through the extremity of the hot weather, even to the lowest springs, and bled, as it were, and withered. Nay, it had a bad influence upon men; the hot weather enfeebled some, and made them weary and faint, and spent their spirits; it inflamed others, and put them into fevers. It should seem it brought diseases upon cattle too. In short, it spoiled all the labour of their hands, which they hoped to eat of, and maintain their families by. Note, Meat for the belly is. That which goes not into the mouth will be cast out; for that only, we are in danger of losing our labour; but we are sure our labour shall not be in vain in the Lord, if we labour for the meat which endures to eternal life. For the hand of the diligent, in the business of religion, will infallibly make rich, whereas in this world the greatest abilities, and the most industrious often lose the labour of their hands. The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. (2.) He that gives bread to the eater, denied his blessing upon the bread they ate, and then that did not nourish them. The cause of the withering and falling of the corn in the field was visible—it was for want of rain; but, beside that, there was a general, universal, and general, which they brought home. [1.] When they had it in the barn, they were not sure of it; I did blow upon it, saith the Lord of hosts, (v. 9.) and that withered it, as buds are sometimes blasted in the spring by a nipping frost, which we see the effects of, but know not the way of. I did blow it away; and the margin renders it Man curst; but he helped both together, God can scatter it with the breath of his mouth as easily as we can blow away a feather. Note, We can never be sure of any thing in this world; it is exposed, not only when it is in the field, but when it is housed; for there moth and rust corrupt, Matth. vi. 19. And if we would have the comfort and continuance of our temporal enjoyments, we must not only bring them to God, but bless him with them, for they are blessings indeed, but if he blow upon them, we can expect no good from them, they make themselves wings and fly away. [2.] When they had it upon the board, it was not that to them that they expected; “Ye eat, but ye have not enough, either because the meat is dishy, and not satisfying, or because the stomach is greedy, and not digestible; you eat, but you have not food for the digestion, and so are not nourished by it, nor does it answer the end, or you have not enough, because you are not content, nor think it enough. Ye drink, but are not cooled and refreshed by it, ye are stitted, and have not enough to quench your thirst. The new wine is cut off from your mouth, (Joel i. 5.) nay, and you drink your water too by measure, and with astonishment; you have no comfort of it, because you have no plenty of it, but are still in fear of failing short.” [3.] That which they had upon their backs, did them no good there; “Ye clothe you, but there is none warm, your clothes soon wear out, and was old, and grow thin, because God blows upon them; contrary to what Israel’s did in the wilderness when God blessed them, God is your enemy, and his punishments warm our upon us when he quites the earth, Job xxxvii. 17. [4.] That which they had in their bags, which was not laid out, but laid up, they were not sure of; he that earns wages by hard labour, and has it paid him in ready current money, puts it into a bag with holes; it drops through, and wastes away insensibly. Every thing is so scarce and dear, that they spend their money as fast as they get it. These that lay up their treasure on earth, put it into a bag with holes; they lose it as they go along, and they that come after them pick it up. But if we lay up our treasure in heaven, we provide for ourselves bags that wax not old, Luke xii. 33. 2. Observe wherefore God thus contended with them, and stopped the current of the favours promised them, and that in this manner; they provoked him to do it; It is because of my house that is waste. That is the quarrel God has with them; the foundation of the temple is laid, but the building does not go on; “Every man runs to his own house, to finish that, and to make that convenient and fine, and no care is taken about the Lord’s house; and therefore it is that God crosses you thus in all your schemes. It is by the want of the fear of God that neglect, and to bring you to a sense of your sin and folly.” Note, As they who seek first the kingdom of God and the righteousness thereof, shall not only find them, but are most likely to have other things added to them, so they who neglect and postpone those things, will not only lose them, but will justly have other things taken away from them. And if God cross us in our temporal affairs, and we meet with trouble and disappointment, we shall find this is the case. It is true of Zerubbabel and Joshua, that God had left their own souls unloved, and we seek our own things more than the things of Jesus Christ, Phil. ii. 21.

III. The reproach which the prophet gives them for their neglect of the temple-work, (v. 4.) "Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your ceiled houses, to have them beautiful and adorned, and your families settled in them? They are not content with the houses which are a good heritage of God, they despise their work and labour, and the things of God: their souls are left unloved, and we seek our own things more than the things of Jesus Christ." For no man that is a prophet shall be redeemed for his house, nor his brothers, nor his parents, nor he that hath a son shall redeem himself: for he shall not see the labour of his soul, nor the labour of his hands, because of the hay that his soul should yield; but he shall be blessed which doeth this thing, saith the Lord. He shall be well served and worshipped in the temple when it is built, and sanctified in them that come nigh to him. It is worth while to bestow all possible care, and pains, and cost, upon that by which God may be glorified.

12. Then Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, with all the remnant of the people, obeyed the voice of the Lord their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, (as the Lord their God had sent him,) and the people did fear before the Lord. 13. Then spake Haggai, the Lord's messenger, in the Lord's message unto the people, saying, I am with you, saith the Lord. 14. And the Lord stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and the spirit of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and the spirit of all the remnant of the people; and they came, and did work in the house of the Lord of hosts, their God. 15. In the four and twentieth day of the sixth month, in the second year of Darius the king.

As an ear-ringing of gold, (says Solomon,) and an ornament of fine gold, so amiable, so acceptable, in the sight of God and man, is a wise reprover upon an obedient ear, Prov. xxv. 12. The prophet here was a wise but faithful reprover, in God's name, and he met with an obedient ear. The foregoing sermon met with the desired success among the people, and that met with due encouragement from God. Observe, 1. How the people returned to God in a way of duty. All those to whom that sermon was preached, received the word in the love of it, and were wrought upon by it. Zerubbabel, the chief governor, did not think himself above the check and command of God's word; he was a man that had been eminently useful in his day, and serviceable to the interest of the church, yet did not plead his former merits, in answer to this reproof for his present remissness, but submitted to it. Joshua's business, as high priest, was to teach, and yet he was willing himself to be taught, and willingly received admonition and instruction. The remnant of the people, (and the whole body of them was but a remnant,) received the word in the love of it, and were very few of the many thousands of Israel,) they also were very pliable, they all obeyed the voice of the Lord their God, and bowed their neck to the yoke of his commandments, by being the Lord's messenger, &c. They looked up upon the prophet to be the Lord's messenger, and the word he delivered to be the Lord's message to them; and therefore received it, not as the word of man, but as the word of Almighty God; they obeyed his words, as the Lord their God had sent him, v. 12. Note, In attending to God's ministers, we must have an eye to him that sent them, and receive them for his sake, while they act according to their commission.

(2.) They did fear before the Lord. Prophecy was a new thing to them, they had had no special messenger from heaven of a great while, and therefore now that they had one, and but one, they paid an extraordinary regard to him; whereas their fathers, who had many prophets, mocked and misused them. It is sometimes so, that when good preaching is most scarce, it does most good, whereas the manna that is raised in plenty, is hoarded light.

Note, This was the first sight of this holy work, that they should be received as this prophet, God, within a month or two after, raised them up another, Zech. i. 1. They feared before the Lord; they had a great regard to divine authority, and a great dread of the divine wrath, and were of those that trembled at God's word. The judgments of God which they had been under, though very severe, did not make them, as it were, to make their fire before the Lord, until the word of God was sent to expound his providences, and then they feared; then when they saw their own sin to be the cause of those judgments, then they feared. Note. A holy fear of God will have a great influence upon our obedience to him. Serve the Lord with fear; if we fear him not, we shall not serve him.

(3.) The Lord stirred up their spirits. v. 14. [1.] He excited them to their duty, and put it into their hearts to go about it. Note, Then the word of God has its success, when God by his grace stirs up our spirits to comply with it; and without that grace we should remain stupid, and utterly averse to every thing that is good. It is in the day of a divine power that we are made strong. [2.] He encouraged them in their duty, and with those encouragements enlarged their hearts, Ps. cxix. 32. When they heard the word, they feared; but, lest they should sink under the weight of that fear, God stirred them up, and made them cheerful and bold to encounter the difficulties they might meet with. Note, When God has work to do, he will either find men to undertake it, and give them strength to do it, and courage to go on in it.

(4.) They applied themselves to their work with all possible vigour; They came, and did work in the house of the Lord of hosts their God; every one, according as his capacity or ability was, lent a hand, some way or other, to further that good work; and this they did with an eye to God as the Lord of hosts, and as their God, the God of Israel. The consideration of God's sovereign dominion in the world by his providence, and his covenant-relation to his people by his grace, should stir up our spirits to act for him, and for the advancement of the interest of his kingdom among men, to the utmost of our power.

(5.) They did this speedily; it was but on the first day of the sixth month that Haggai preached them this sermon, and by the twenty-fourth in the same month, little more than three weeks after, they were all busy, working in the house of the Lord their God, v. 15. To show that they were ashamed of their delays hitherto, now that they were convinced and called, they were resolved to delay no longer, but to strike while the iron was hot, and to set about the work while they were under convictions. Note, Those that have lost time, have need to redeem time; and the longer we have lost ed in that which is good, when we are convinced of our folly, the more haste we should make.

2. How God met them in a way of mercy. The same prophet that brought them the reproof, brought them a very comforting, encouraging word; (v. 13.) Then spoke Haggai, the Lord's messenger, in the Lord's message, in his name, and as from him, saying, I am with you, saith the Lord. That is all he has to say, and that is enough; as that word of Christ to his disciples is, (Matt. xxviii. 20.) "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world. I am with you; will forgive our neglects hitherto, and they shall not be remembered against you; I will remove the judgments you have been under for those neglects, and will appear for you, as I have in them appeared against you. I am with you, to protect you against your enemies that bear ill will to your work, and to prosper you, and to give you success in it; with you, to strengthen your hands, so they shall not labour in vain that build." Note. Those that work for God have God with them; and if he be for us, who can be against us? if he be with us, what difficulty can stand before us?

CHAP. II.

In this chapter, we have three sermons preached by the prophet Haggai, for the encouragement of those that are forward to build, and to show them that the Lord's builders that the glory of the house they were now building should, in spiritual respects, though not in outward, exceed that of Solomon's temple, in which he has an eye to the coming of Christ, v. 1. In the second, he assures them that though their sin, in delaying to build the temple, had retarded the prosperous progress of all their other affairs, yet now that they had set about it in good earnest, he would bless them, and give them success, v. 10-19. In the third, he assures Zerubbabel that, as a reward of his pious zeal and activity herein, he should be a favourite of Heaven, and one of the ancestors of Messiah the Prince, whose kingdom should be set up on the ruins of all opposing powers, v. 20-23.

1. IN the seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the word of the Lord by the prophet Haggai, saying, 2. Speak now to Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and to the residue of the people, saying, 3. Who is left among you that saw this house in her first glory? and how do ye see it now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing? 4. Yet now be strong, O Zerubbabel, saith the Lord; and be strong, O Joshua son of Josedech, the high priest; and be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work: for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts. 5. According to the word that I covenanted with you, when ye came out of Egypt, so my Spirit remaineth among you: fear ye not. 6. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land; 7. And I will shake all nations and the Desire of all nations shall come; and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts. 8. The silver is mine and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts. 9. The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the Lord of hosts: and in this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of hosts.
Here is,
I. The date of this message, v. 1. It was sent on the twenty-first day of the seventh month, when the builders had been about a month at work, (since the twenty-fourth day of the sixth month,) and had got it in some form for us. Nely those that are heard of; the voice of God shall remove all disconsolations from him to proceed in it, as their case calls for them. Set the wheels agoing, and God will oil them.

II. The direction of this message, v. 2. The encouragements here are sent to the same persons to whom the reproofs in the foregoing chapter are directed; for they that are condemned by the conviccions of their consciences, shall be healed and brought up by his consolations. Speak to Zerubbabel and Joshua, and the residue of the people, the very same that obeyed the voice of the Lord, (ch. i. 12.) and whose spirits God stirred up to do so; (ch. i. 14.) to them are sent these words of comfort.

III. The message itself. In which observe,
1. The discouragements which they laboured under, who were employed in this work; that which was such a damp upon them, and an alloy to their joy, when the foundation of the temple was laid, was still a clog upon them—that they could not build such a temple now as Solomon built, not so large, so stately, so sumptuous a one as that was. This fetched tears from the eyes of many, when the dimensions of it were first laid; (Ezra iii. 12.) and still the work go on heavily—that the glory of this house, in comparison with that of the former, was as nothing, v. 3. It was now about seventy years since Solomon's temple was destroyed, (for that was in the nineteenth year of the captivity, and this about the nineteenth after the captivity,) so that there might be some yet alive who could remember to have seen it, and still they would be upbraiding themselves and their brethren with the great disparity between this house and that; one could remember the gold with which it was overlaid; another the precious stones with which it was garnished; one could describe the magnificence of the porch, another of the pillars—and where are these now? This weakened the hands of the builders; for though our gracious God is pleased with us, if we do in sincerity as well as we can in his service, yet if we are not pleased with ourselves, unless we do as well as others, whose abilities far exceed ours. And it is sometimes the fault of old people, to discourage the services of the present age, by crying up too much the performances and attainments of the former age; with which others should be provoked to emulation, but not exposed to contempt. Say not thou, that the former days were better than these, (Eccles. vii. 10.) but thank God that there is any good in these, bad as they are. 2. The encouragement that is given them to go on in the work, notwithstanding; (v. 4.) Yet now, though this house is likely to be much inferior to the former, yet be strong, O Zerubbabel, and be strong, O Joshua. Let not these leading men give way to this suggestion, or be disheartened by it, but do as well as they can, when they cannot do so well as they would; and let all the people of the land be strong too, and work; and if the leaders have but a good heart on it, it is hoped that the followers will have the better heart. Note, Those that work for God ought to exert themselves with vigour, and then to encourage themselves with hope that it will come well.

3. The grounds of these encouragements. God himself says to them, Fear ye not; (v. 5.) and he gives good reason for it.
(1.) They have God with them, his Spirit and his special presence; Be strong, for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts, v. 4. This he had said before; (ch. i. 13.) I am with you. But we need to have these assurances repeated, that we may have strong consolation. The presence of God with us, as the Lord of hosts, is enough to silence all our fears, and to help us over all the discouragements that may meet our way. Those that have had sojourned with them, but they had the Lord of hosts with them, to take their part and plead their cause. He is with them, for, [1.] He adheres to his promise; his covenant is inviolable; and he will be always theirs, and will appear and act for them, according to the words that he covenanted with them when they came out of Egypt. Though he had sometimes restrained them from it, and they might not make his faithfulness to fail. [2.] He dwells among them by his Spirit, the Spirit of prophecy; when he first formed them into a people, he gave his good Spirit to instruct them; (Neh. ix. 20.) and still the Spirit, though often grieved, and provoked to withdraw, remained among them. It was the Spirit of God that stirred them up their spirits to come out of Babylon, (Ezra i. 2.) and now to build the temple, Hag. i. 14. Note, We have reason to be encouraged as long as we have the Spirit of God remaining among us to work upon us, for so long we have God with us to work for us.

(2.) They shall have the Messiah among them shortly—him that should come. To him bare all the prophets witness, and this prophet particularly (Ps. cxlii. 3.) and he that doth the work, and laboured with their work, and did with hismight, his coming, that it should not be long ere he came; Yet once, it is a little while, and he shall come. The Old Testament church has but one stage more (if we may so say) to travel; five stages were now past, from Adam to Noah, thence to Abraham, thence to Moses, thence to Solomon's temple, thence to the capacity, and now yet one stage more, its sixth stage—its journey, and the consummation of the time, the Messiah's kingdom. Let the Son of man, when he comes, find faith on the earth, and let the children of promise continue still looking for him, for now it is but a little while, and he will come; hold out, faith and patience, yet awhile, for he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry. And as he then said of his first appearance, so now of his second, Surely I come quickly.

[1.] That it shall be introduced by a general shaking; (v. 6.) I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land. This is applied to the setting up of Christ's kingdom in the world, to make way for which, he will judge among the heathen, Ps. cxv. 6. God will once again do for his church as he did when he brought them out of Egypt; he then shook the heavens and earth at mount Sinai; with thunder and lightnings and earthquakes he shook the sea and the dry land, when lanes were made through the sea, and streams fetched out of the rock. This shall be done again, when, at the sufferings of Christ, the sun shall be darkened, the earth shake, the rocks rend; when, at the birth of Christ, Herod and all Jerusalem are troubled, (Matt. ii. 8.) and he is set for the fall and rising again of many. When his kingdom was set up, it was with a shock to the nations; the oracles were silenced, idols were destroyed, and the powers of the kingdoms were moved and removed, Heb. xii. 27. It speaks the removing of the things that are shaken. Note, The shaking of the nations is often in order to the settling of the church, and the establishing of the things that cannot be shaken.

[2.] That it shall issue in a general satisfaction. He shall come, as the Desire of all nations—desirable to all nations, for in him shall all the families of the earth be blessed with the best of blessings—long expected and desired by the good people in all nations, that had any intelligence from the Old Testament predictions concerning him. Balaam, in the land of Moab, had spoken of a Star that should arise out of Jacob, and Job, in the land of Uz, of his living Redeemer; the concourse of devout men from all parts at Jerusalem, (Acts ii. 5,) was in expectation of the setting up of the Messiah's kingdom about that time. All the nations that are brought into Christ, and discipled in his name, have called him, and will call him, all their Salvation, and all their Desire. This glorious title of Christ seems to refer to Jacob's prophecy, (Gen. xli. 10.) that is, he shall be the gathering of the people be.

(3.) The house they were now building shall be filled with glory, to that degree, that its glory shall exceed that of Solomon's temple. The enemies of the Jews followed them with reproach, and cast contempt upon the house they were building; but they might very well endure that, when God undertook to fill it with glory. It is God's prerogative to fill with glory; the glory that comes from him, is satisfying, and not vain glory. Moses's tabernacle and Solomon's temple were filled with glory, when God in a cloud took possession of them; but this house shall be filled with glory of another nature.

[1.] Let them not be concerned that this house had not so much silver and gold about it as Solomon's temple had, v. 8. God needs not the silver and gold that was in his temple; (speak we, in exalted times,) the silver is mine, and the gold is mine. All the silver and gold in the world are his; all that is hid in the bowels of the earth, for the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof. All that is laid up in the exchequers, banks, and treasuries of the children of men, and all that circulates for the maintenance of trade and commerce; it is the Lord's. Every penny been, or to be bequeathed to his Church, is his; therefore, when gold and silver are dedicated to his honour and service, and employed in his service, no addition is made to him, for it was his before. When David and his princes offered vast sums for the service of the house of God, they acknowledge, It is all thine own, and of thine own, Lord, have we given thee, 1 Chron. xxix. 14, 16. Therefore God needs not sacrifice, for every beast of the forest is his, Ps. I. 10. Note, If we have silver and gold, we must serve and honour God with it, for it is all his own, we have but the use of it, the property remains in him; but if we have not silver and gold to honour him with, we must honour him with such as we have, and he will accept us, for he needs it not; all the silver and gold in the world are his already. The earth is full of his glory, so is the heaven and wide sea also. So [2.] Let them be comforted with this, that though this temple had less gold in it, it should have more glory than Solomon's; (v. 9.) The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former. This was never true in respect of outward glory; this latter house was indeed in its latter times very much beautified and enriched by Herod, and we find the disciples of Christ and of his Church in and about this temple, how fine they were; (Mark xiii. 1.) but it was nothing in comparison with Solomon's temple; and besides, the Jews own that several of the divine glories of the first temple were wanting in this — the Ark, the Urim and Thummim, the fire from heaven, and the Shechinah; so that we cannot conceive how the glory of this latter house should in any way exceed the glory of the former in that, which would indeed excel all the glories of the first house — the presence of the Messiah in it, the Son of God, his being presented there the Glory of his people Israel, his attending there at twelve years old, and afterward his preaching and working miracles there, and his driving the buyers and sellers out of it. It was necessary, then, that the Messiah should come while the second temple stood; but that being long since destroyed, we must conclude that our Lord Jesus is the Christ, he that should come, and we are to look for no other. It was also the glory of this latter house, First, That, before the coming of Christ, it was always kept free from idols and idolatries, and never polluted with those abominable things, as the first temple often was, (2 Kings xxiii. 11, 12,) and in this its glory excelled all the glory of that. Note, The purity of the church, and the strict adherence to divine institutions, are much more its glory than external pomp and splendour. Secondly, That, after Christ, the gospel was preached in it by the apostles, even all the words of this life, Acts xx. 20. In the temple Jesus Christ was daily preached, Acts v. 42. Now the ministration of righteousness and life by the gospel was unspeakably more glorious than the law, which was a ministration of death and condemnation, 2 Cor. iii. 9, 10. Note, That is the most valuable glory, which arises from our relation to Christ, and our interest in him. As where Christ is, behold, a greater than Solomon is there, so the heart in which he dwells, and makes a living temple, behold, it is more glorious than Solomon's temple, and will be so to eternity.

(4.) They should see a comfortable end of their present troubles, and enjoy the pleasure of a happy settlement; In this place will I give peace, saith the Lord; and his glory shall be seen with his people in his ordinances secured from their enemies. Note, That of God be with us, peace is with us. But the Jews under the latter temple had so much trouble, that we must conclude this promise to have its accomplishment in that spiritual peace which Jesus Christ has by his blood purchased for, and by his last will and testament bequeath'd to all believers, (John xiv. 27.) that peace which Christ himself preached, and the Prince of peace, and gives, is the Prince of peace. God will give peace in this place; he will give his Son to be the Peace, Eph. ii. 14. 10. In the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying, 11. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Ask now the priests concerning the law, saying, 12. If one bear holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be holy? And the priests answered and said, No. 13. Then said Haggai, If one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean. 14. Then answered Haggai, and said, So is this people, and so is this nation before me, saith the Lord; and so is every work of their hands; and that which they offer there is unclean. 15. And now, I pray you, consider from this day and upward, from before a stone was laid upon a stone in the temple of the Lord; 16. Since those days were, when one came to a heap of twenty measures, there were but ten: when one came to the press-fat, for to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty. 17. I smote you with blasting, and with mildew, and with hail, in all the labours of your hands; yet ye HAGGAI, II.

18. Consider now from this day forward, from the fourteenth day of the sixth month, even from the day that the foundations of the Lord's temple were laid, consider it. 19. Is the seed yet in the barn? as yet the vine, and the fig-tree, and the pomegranate, and the olive-tree, hath not brought forth: from this day will I bless you.

This sermon was preached two months after that in the former part of the chapter. The priests and Levites preached constantly, but the prophets preached occasionally: both were good and needful; we have need to be taught our duty in season, and out of season. The people were now going on vigorously with the building of the temple, and in hopes shortly to have it ready for their use, and to be employed in the services of it; and now God sends them a message by his prophet, which would be of use to them.

I. By way of conviction and caution. They were now engaged in a very good work, but they are concerned 'to see to it, not only that it be good for the matter of it, but that it be done in a right manner, for otherwise it would not be accepted of God. God sees there are many among them that spoil this good work, by going about it with unsanctified hearts, and which prove little or no advantage to themselves by it; these are here convicted, and all are warned thereby to purify the hands they employ in this work, for to the pure only all things are pure, and from the pure only that comes which is pure. This matter is here illustrated by the established rules of the ceremonial law, in putting a difference between the clean and the unclean, about which many of the appointments of the law were concerned. Hereby it appears that a spiritual use is to be made of the ceremonial law, and that it was intended, not only as a divine ritual to the Jews, but for instruction in righteousness to all, even to us upon whom the ends of the world are come, to discover to us both sin and Christ, both our disease and our remedy. Now observe here,

1. What the scope of the law was. The Prophet is ordered to inquire of the priest concerning it; (v. 11.) for their lips should keep this knowledge, and the people should inquire the law at their mouth, Mal. ii. 7. Haggai himself, though a prophet, must ask the priest concerning the law. His business, as an extraordinary messenger, was, to expound the provisions of God, and to give directions concerning particular duties, as he had done, ch. 1. 8. 9. But he would not take the priests' work out of their hands, who were the ordinary ministers, and whose business it was to expound the ordinances of God, and to teach the people the meaning of them, and to give the general rules for the observation of them. In a case of that nature, Haggai must himself consult them. Note, God has given to his ministers diversities of gifts, and calls them out to do divers services, so that they have need one of another, should make use one of another, and be helpful one to another. The prophet, though divinely inspired, cannot say to the priest, I have no need of thee, nor can the priest say so to the prophet. Perhaps Haggai was therefore ordered to consult the priests, that out of their own mouths he might judge both them and the people concerning, and convict them of worse than ceremonial pollution. See Lev. x. 10, 11.

Now the rules of the law, in the cases pronounced, are,

1. That he that has holy flesh in his clothes, cannot by the touch of his clothes communicate holiness; (v. 12.) if one bear holy flesh in the skirt of his garments, though the garment is thereby so far made a devoted thing, as that it is not to be put to common use till it has first been washed in the holy place, (Lev. vi. 27.) yet it shall by no means transmit a holiness or devotedness to them that make it good to those that use them.

2. That he that is ceremoniously unclean by the touch of a dead body, does by his touch communicate the uncleanliness. The law is express, (Numb. xix. 22.) whatsoever the unclean person touches shall be unclean; yet this Haggai will have from the priest's own mouth; for concerning these things we find in the law, that the high priest in holy things must have the advice of our ministers. The sum of these two rules is, that pollution is easier communicated than sanctification; that is, (says Grotius,) there are many ways of vice, but only one of virtue, and that a difficult one. Bonum ortur ex integris, mater ex guilobet defectu—Good implies perfection, evil commences with the slightest defect.

Let not men think that living among good people will recommend them to God, if they are not good themselves, but let them fear that touching the unclean thing will defile them, and therefore let them keep at a distance from it.

2. How it is here applied; (v. 14.) so is this people, and so is this nation, before me. He does not call them his people, and his nation, (they are unworthy to be owned by him,) but this people, and this nation; and he reminds them of their former backslidings, in the time of the first temple, and thought their offering of sacrifices on the altar would sanctify them, and excuse their neglect to build the temple, and remove the curse which by that neglect they had brought upon their common enjoyments; "No," says God, "your holy flesh and your altar will be so far from sanctifying your meat and drink, your wine and oil, to you, that your contempt of God's temple will bring in judgments; not only on your common enjoyments, but even on your sacrifices too; so that while you continued in that neglect, all was unclean to you, nay, and so is this people still: and so they will be; on these terms they will still stand with me, and on no other—that if they be profane and sensual, and morally impure, if they have wicked hearts, and live wicked lives, though their prayers and their sacrifice at the temple while it is building, and though they offer ever so many and costly sacrifices there when it is built, yet that shall not serve to sanctify their meat and drink to them, and to give them a comfortable use of it; nay, the impurity of their hearts and lives shall make even that work of their hands, and all their offerings, unclean, and an abomination to God." And the case is the same with us. They whose devotions are plausible, but whose conversation is wicked, will find their devotions unable to sanctify their enjoyments, but their wickedness prevailing to pollute them. Note, When we are employed in any good work, we should be jealous over ourselves, lest we render it unclean by our corruptions and mismanagements.

II. By way of comfort and encouragement. If their hearts be right with God, and their eye single in his service, they shall have the benefit of it. God will take away the judgment of famine wherewith they have been corrected for their remissness, and will restore them great plenty. This they are called to consider, and to observe whether God would not be to the utmost as good as his word, and by his providence remarkably counteract and recom pense their iniquities in this matter. To make this the more signal, let them set down the day when they began to work at the building of the temple, to raise the structure upon the foundations that had been laid some time before. On the twenty-fourth day of the sixth month, they began to prepate materials, (ch. i. 13) and now on the twentieth day of the ninth month, they began to lay a stone upon a stone in the temple of the Lord; let them take notice of this day, and observe, 1. How they were gone behind in their estates before this day. Let them remember the time when there was a sensible waste and decay in all they had, v. 16. A man came to his garner, expecting to find a heap of twenty measures of corn, so much he used to have from such a piece of ground, or so much used to be left at that time of the year, or so much he took it for granted there was when he fetched the last from it; but he found it unaccountably diminished, and when he came to measure it, there were but ten measures; it was run in, and dried away, in the keeping; or vermin had eaten it, or it was stolen. In like manner he went to the wine-press, expecting to draw fifty vessels of wine, for so much he used to have from such a quantity of grapes; but they did not yield as usual, for he could get but twenty. This agrees with what we had, ch. i. 9. Ye looked for much, and it came to little. Note, It is our folly that we are apt to raise our expectation from the creature, and that we find no end to our wants in this world, and much more abundant, but we are commonly disappointed, and the more we expect, the more grievous the disappointment is. In the stores and treasures of the new covenant we need not fear being disappointed, when we come by faith to draw from them.

2. When this was not all; God did visibly contend with them in the weather; (v. 17.) I smote you with blizzards, winds and frosts, which made every green thing to wither, and with mildew, which choked the corn when it was knitting, and with hail, which battered it down, and brake it, when it was grown to some maturity; thus they were disappointed in all the labour of their hands, while they neglected to lay their hand to the work of God, and to labour in that. Note, While we take care of God's interest, we cannot expect he should take care of ours. And when he thus walks contrary to us, he expects that we should return to him, and to our duty. But this people either saw not the hand of God in it, (imputing it to chance,) or saw not their own sin as the provoking cause of it, and therefore turned not to him. They were hereby taught to account for all these rebukes, so that God's hand was stretched out still, for the people turned not to him that smote them, Isa. ix. 12, 13. They might easily observe, that as long as they continued in neglect of the temple-work, all their affairs went backward. But, 2. Let them now observe, and they should find that from this day forward God would bless the Israelites and the temple, and the consecration of this day, v. (18, 19.) Consider now, whether when you begin to change your way toward God, you do not find God changing his way toward you; from this day, when you fall to work about the temple, consider it, I say, and you shall find a remarkable turn given for the better to all your affairs. Is thy seed yet in the barn? Yes it is, and not yet thrown into the ground; the fig-trees do not as yet bud, the vine and the olive-tree have not as yet brought forth, so that nothing appears to promise a good harvest and vintage next year; nature does not promise it: but now that you begin to apply yourselves in good earnest to your duty, the God of nature promises it; he has said, From this day I will bless you. It is the best day's work you ever did in all your lives, for from hence you may date the return of your prosperity. He does not say what they shall be, but, in general, I will bless you; and those that know what are the fruits flowing from God's blessing, know they can desire no more to make them happy. "I will bless you, and then you shall soon recover all your losses, shall thrive as fast as before you went backward; for the blessing of the Lord, that maketh rich; and those whom he blesseth, are blessed indeed." Note, When we begin to make conscience of our duty to God, we may expect his blessing: and this tree of life is so known by its fruits, that one may discern almost to a day a remarkable turn of Providence, in favour of those that return in a way of duty; so that they and others may say that from this day they are blessed. See Mal. iii. 10. And whose in wise will observe these things, and understand by them the loving-kindness of the Lord.

20. And again the word of the Lord came unto Haggai, in the four and twentieth day of the month, saying, 21. Speak to Zerubbabel, governor of Judah, saying, I will shake the heavens and the earth; 22. And I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms; and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother. 23. In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, will I take thee, O Zerubbabel my servant, the son of Shealtiel, saith the Lord, and will make thee as a signet: for I have chosen thee, saith the Lord of hosts.

After Haggai's sermon ad populum—to the people, here follows one, the same day, ad magistratum—to the magistrates; a word directed particularly to Zerubbabel, the governor of Judah, who was a leading, active man in this good work which the people now set about, and therefore he shall have some particular marks put upon him; (v. 21.) Speak to Zerubbabel, governor of Judah, speak to him by himself; he has thoughts in his head, far above those of the common people, as wise princes are wont to have, who move in a higher and larger sphere than others. The people of the land are in care about their corn-fields and vineyards; God has assured them that they shall prosper, and he hope that will make them easy; but Zerubbabel is concerned about the community and its interests, about the neighbouring nations, and the revolutions of their governments, and what will become of the few and feeble Jews in those changes and convulsions, and how such a poor prince as he is, should be able to keep his ground, and serve his country. "Go to him," says God, "and tell him it shall be well with him and his remnant, and let that make him easy." 1. Let him expect to hear of great commotions in the nations of the earth, and let them not be a surprise to him; behold, he is told of them before; (v. 21, 22.) I will shake the heavens and the earth. This he had said before, (v. 6, 7,) and now says it again to Zerubbabel; let him expect earthquakes, universal concussions; the world is like the sea, like the wheel, always in motion, but sometimes in a special manner turbulent. But, blessed be God, if the earth be shaken, it is to shake the wicked out of it, Job xxxviii. 13. In the apocalyptic visions, earthquakes bode no ill to the church. Here the heavens, or the higher regions, are spoken of; possibly the expressions may be broken and brought down; I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms. The Chaldean monarchy, which had been the throne of kingdoms, a great while, was already overthrown, and the powers that are, and are yet to come, shall in like...
(1.) Though they be ever so powerful, the strength of their kingdoms shall be destroyed; they trust in chariots and horses, (Ps. xx. 7.) but their chariots shall be overthrown, and those that ride in them, so that they shall not be able to attack the people of God, whom they persecute, or to escape the judgments of God, which persecute them. (2.) Though there appear none likely to be the instruments of their destruction, yet God will bring it about, for they shall be brought down, every one by the sword of his brother. This reads the doom of all the enemies of God’s church, that will not repent to give him glory; it seems likewise designed as a promise of Christ’s victory over the powers of darkness; his overthrow of Satan’s throne, that throne of kingdoms, the throne of the god of this world; the taking from him all the armour wherein he trusted, and dividing the spoil. And all opposing rule, principality, and power shall be put down, that the kingdom may be delivered up to God, even the Father.

2. Let him depend upon it, that he shall be safe under the divine protection, in the midst of all these commotions, v. 23. Zerubbabel was active to build God a house, and therefore God makes the same promise to him as he did to David on the like occasion—that he would build him a house, and establish it, even in that day when heaven and earth are shaken; this promise refers to this good man himself and to his family. He honoured God, and God would honour him; his successors likewise in the government of Judah might take encouragement from it; though their authority was very precarious as to men, yet God would confirm it. And this would contribute to the stability of the people over whom God had set them. But this promise has special reference to Christ, who lineally descended from Zerubbabel, and is the sole Builder of the gospel-temple. (1.) Zerubbabel is here owned as God’s servant, and it is an honourable mention that is hereby made of him, as Moses and David my servants. When God destroys his enemies, he will prefer his servant. Our Lord Jesus is his Father’s Servant in the work of redemption, but faithful as a Son, Isa. xlvi. 1. (2.) He is owned as God’s elect; I have chosen thee into this office; and whom God makes choice of, he will make use of. Our Lord Jesus is chosen of God, 1 Pet. ii. 4. And he is the Head of the chosen remnant; in him they are chosen. (3.) It is promised that, being chosen, God will make him as a signet. Jeconiah had been as the signet on God’s right hand, but was plucked thence, (Jer. xxii. 24.) and now Zerubbabel is substituted in the room of him. He shall be near and dear to God, precious in his sight, and honourable, and his family shall continue till the Messiah spring out of it, who is the Signet on God’s right hand. This speaks, [1.] The delight the Father has in him; in him he once and again declared himself to be well-pleased. He is set as a seal upon his heart, a seal upon his arm, is brought near unto him, (Dan. vii. 13.) is hid in the shadow of his hand, Isa. xlix. 2. [2.] The dominion the Father has intrusted him with. Princes sign their edicts, grants, and commissions, with their signet-rings, Esth. iii. 10. Our Lord Jesus is the Signet on God’s right hand, for all power is given to him, and derived from him. By him the great charter of the gospel is signed and ratified, and it is in him that all the promises of God are yea and amen.
AN

WITH

OF THE PROPHECY OF

ZECCHARIAH.

This prophet was colleague with the prophet Haggai, and a worker together with him in forwarding the building of the second temple; (Ezra v. 1.) for two are better than one. Christ sent forth his disciples, two and two. Zechariah began to prophesy some time after Haggai. But he continued longer, soared higher in visions and revelations, wrote more, and prophesied more particularly concerning Christ, than Haggai had done; so the last shall be first: the last in time sometimes proves first in dignity. He begins with a plain, practical sermon, expressive of that which was the scope of his prophesying in the five first verses; but afterward, to the end of ch. vi. he relates the visions he saw, and the instructions he received immediately from heaven by them. At ch. vii. from an inquiry made by the Jews concerning fasting, he takes occasion to shew them the duty of their present day, and to encourage them to hope for God’s favour, to the end of ch. viii. After which there are two sermons, which are both called burdens of the word of the Lord; one begins with ch. ix. the other with ch. xii. which, probably, were preached some time after; the scope of which is to reprove for sin, and threatens God’s judgments against the impenitent, and to encourage those that feared God, with assurances of the mercy God had in store for his church, and especially of the coming of the Messiah, and the setting up of his kingdom in the world.

ZECHARIAH, I.

CHAP. I.

In this chapter, after the introduction, (v. 1.) we have, I.
An awakening call to a sinful people, to repent of their sins, and return to God, v. 2–8. II. Great encouragement given to hope for mercy. 1. By the vision of the horses, v. 7–11. 2. By the prayer of the angel for Jerusalem, and the answer to that prayer, v. 12–17. 3. By the vision of the four carpenters that were employed to cut off the four horns, with which Judah and Jerusalem were scattered, v. 18–21.

1. IN the eighth month, in the second year; of Darius, came the word of the Lord unto Zechariah, the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo the prophet, saying, 2. The Lord hath been sore displeased with your fathers. 3. Therefore say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Turn ye unto me, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will turn unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. 4. Be ye not as your fathers, unto whom the former prophets have cried, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Turn ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doings: but they did not hear, nor hearken unto me, saith the Lord. 5. Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live for ever? 6. But my words and my statutes, which I commanded my servants the prophets, did they not take hold of your fathers? and they returned, and said, Like as the Lord of hosts thought to do unto us, according to our ways, and according to our doings, so hath he dealt with us.
Here is,
I. The foundation of Zechariah's ministry; it is laid in a divine authority; The word of the Lord came to him. He received a divine commission to be God's mouth to the people, and with it instructions what to say. He received of the Lord that which was of his spirit, and was confirmed to him in the power of the Spirit.

2. The time when the word of the Lord came first to him, or, when the word that next follows, came to him: it was in the second year of Darius. Between this and the former captivity, the prophets dated their writings by the reigns of the kings of Judah and Israel; but now, by the reigns of the kings of Persia, to whom they were subjects. Such a melancholy change had sin made of their circumstances. Zerubbabel took not so much upon him as to have public acts dated by the years of his government. In things of this nature the prophets, as is fit, compiled with the usage of the time, and scrupled not to reckon by the years of the heathen kings, as Dan. vii. 1—viii. 1. Zechariah preached his first sermon in the eighth month of this second year of Darius; Haggai preached his in the sixth month of the same year, Hag. i. 1. The people being readily obedient to the word of the Lord in the mouth of Haggai, God blessed them with another prophet; for he was a faithful prophet, and uses well what he has more shall be given.

3. The name and family of the prophet to whom the word of the Lord came; he was Zechariah the son of Barachiah, the son of Iddo, and he was the prophet; as Haggai is called the prophet, Hag. i. 1. For though in former ages there was one Iddo a prophet, (2 Chron. xiii. 15,) yet we have no reason to think that Zechariah was of his prophecy; he should be denominated from him. The learned Mr. Pembell is clear of opinion, that this Zechariah, the son of Barachiah, is the same that our Saviour says was slain between the temple and the altar, perhaps many years after the rebuilding of the temple, (Matth. xxvii. 55,) and that our Saviour does not mean (as is commonly thought) Zechariah the son of Iddo, but that Zechariah was of his prophecy, or should be denominated from him. And he thinks the manner of Christ's account persuades us to think so, for, reckoning up the innocent blood shed by the Jews, he begins at Abel, and ends even in the last of the holy prophets. Whereas after Zechariah the son of Jehoiada, many prophets and righteous men were put to death by them. It is true, there is no mention made in any history of their slaying this Zechariah, or Josephus might industriously conceal that shame of his nation. Perhaps what Zechariah spake in his prophesying concerning Christ, of his being sold, his being wounded in the house of his friends, and the shepherd being smitten, was verified in the prophet himself; and so he became a type of Christ. Probably, being assaulted by his persecutors, he took sanctuary in the court of the priests, (and some think he was himself a priest,) and so was slain between the porch and the altar.

II. The first-fruits of Zechariah's ministry. Before he came to visions and revelations, and delivered his prophetical discourses, he preached that which was plain and practical; for it is best to begin with that. Before he published the promises of mercy, he published calls to repentance, for thus the way of the Lord must be prepared. Law must be first preached, and then gospel.

Now, 1. The prophet here puts them in mind of the controversy God had had with their fathers; (v. 2.) "The Lord has been sore displeased with your fathers, and has laid them under the tokens of his displeasure. You have heard with your ears, and your fathers have told you of it; you have seen with your eyes the woful remains of it. God's quarrel with you has been of long standing, and therefore it is time for you to think of taking it up." Note, The judgments of God, which those that went before us were subject to, should by reason of the warnings we are not to tread in their steps, and calls to repentance, that we may cut off the entail of the curse, and get it turned into a blessing.

2. He calls them in God's name, to return to him, and make their peace with him, v. 3. God by him says that to his backsliding people, which he had often said by his servants the prophets; "Turn ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doing; the very same that we now preach to you. He persuaded to leave your sins, resolve to have no more to do with them. A speedy reformation is the only way to prevent an approaching ruin; "Turn ye now from sin to God without delay.

3. He warns them not to persist in their impenitence, as their fathers had done; (v. 4.) Be ye not, as your fathers. Instead of being hardened in their ways, as a consequence of the example of their fathers, let them rather be deterred from them by the example of their fathers' punishment. We are apt to be governed very much by precedent, and we are well or ill governed according to the use we make of the precedents before us. The same examples to some are a savour of life unto life, to others a savour of death unto death. Some argued, "If all fathers were wicked, how could we know they were wrong?" and so the like, which they thought might muzzle the prophets, and why then shall we mind them? They made laws against them, and why should we tolerate them? But they are here taught how they should argue; "Our fathers slighted the prophets, and God was sore displeased with them for it; therefore let us the more carefully regard what God says to us by his prophets." Review what is past, and observe,

(1.) What was the message that God sent by his servants the prophets to your fathers? The former prophets cried to your fathers, cried aloud, and did not spare, not spare themselves, not spare your fathers; they cried as men in earnest, as men that would be heard; they spake not as from themselves, but in the name of the Lord of hosts; and this was the substance of what they said, the burden of every song, the application of every sermon—Turn ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doing; the very same that we now preach to you.

(2.) Have we a fixed and unchangeable regard for your fathers; But they did not hear, they did not heed. They turned a deaf ear to these calls; "They would not hearken unto me," saith the Lord.

(3.) They would not be reclaimed, would not be ruled, by the word I sent them; say not then that you will do as your fathers did, for they did amiss;" see Jer.
1. Note. We must not follow the examples of our dear fathers, unless they were God's dear children, nor any further than they were dutiful and obedient to him.

(3) What is become both of your fathers, and of the prophets that preached to them? They are all dead! (Jr. 10:21.) Where are they?

[1.] You may be right in this; but you are wrong. The generation of them is swept away, and their place knows them no more. Note, When we think of our ancestors, that are gone through the world, and gone out of it before us, we should think, Where are they? Here they were, in the towns and countries where we live, passing and repassing in the same streets, dwelling in the same houses, trading with the same merchants, and walking in the same churches with us, and in the same churches with God in the same churches. But where are they? They are somewhere still; when they died, there was not an end of them; they are in eternity, in the world of spirits, the unchangeable world, to which we are hastening apace; Where are they? Those of them that lived and died in sin, are in torment, and we are warned by Moses and the prophets, Christ and his apostles, to look to it that we come not to that place of torment, Luke xvi. 28, 29. Those of them that lived and died in Christ, are in paradise; and if we live and die as they did, we shall be with them shortly, with them eternally.

[2.] The prophets also, did they live for ever? No, they are gone too. The treasure is put into earthen vessels, the water of life into earthen pitchers, often cracked, and broken, even as Christ is a prophet that lives for ever, but all other prophets have a period put to their office. Note, Ministers are dying men, and live not for ever in this world. They are to look upon themselves as such, and to preach accordingly, as those that must be silenced shortly, and know not which sermon may be the last; people are to look upon them as such, and to hear accordingly, as those that yet a little while have the light with them, that they may walk and work while they have the light. O that this weighty consideration had its due weight given it, that we are dying ministers dealing with dying people about the concerns of immortal souls, and an awful eternity, which both they and we are standing upon the brink of! It concerns us to think of the prophets that are gone, that were before us of old, Jud. xi. 15, 16. 8. And now, this day is the glory of many withered and fell; but the word of the Lord endures for ever, 1 Pet. i. 24, 25. The prophets that are now, do we live for ever? (So some read it.) No, Haggai and Zechariah will not be long with you; and prophecy itself shall shortly cease. In another world, both we and our prophets shall live for ever; and to prepare for that world, ought to be our great care and business in this.

(4.) What were the effects of the word which God spake to them by his prophets, v. 6. The preachers died, and the hearers died, but the word of God died not; that took effect, and not one iota or tittle of it fell to the ground. As the rain and snow from heaven, it shall not return void, Isa. iv. 11. He appeals to themselves; they knew very well, 17 They that the judgments of God had threatened, were executed upon their fathers, and they were made to feel what they would not believe and fear; My statutes which I commanded my servants the prophets, the precepts, with the penalties annexed, which I charged them with the delivery of, did they not take hold of your fathers? Though God's prophets could not fasten convictions upon them, the calamities threatened twerke, they, and they could not escape them, or get out of the reach of them. God's words took hold of them, as the balliff arrests the debtor, and takes him in execution for contempt. Note, The unbelief of man cannot make the threatenings of God's word of no effect, but, sooner or later, they will take place, if the prescribed course be not taken for the prevention of them. God's anger will certainly take hold of these that will not be taken hold of by his authority; for when he judges, he will overcome. [2.] That they themselves could not but own the accomplishment of the word of God in the judgments of God that were upon them, and that therein he was righteous, and had done them no wrong; They returned and said, (they changed their mind, and when it was too late to prevent the ruin of their nation, they acknowledged,) Like as the Lord of hosts thought to do unto us according to our ways and doings, to reckon with us for them, so he dealt with us, and we must acknowledge both his truth and his justice; must blame ourselves only, and have no blame to lay to him. Sero saufiant Phryges—It is late before the Phrygians become wise. This after-while, as it is a proof of the truth of God, so it is a proof of the folly of men who will look no further than they can see. They would never be persuaded to say in time, "God will be as good as his word, for he is faithful; we will deal with us according to our deserts, for he is righteous." But now they see both plain enough, when the sentence is executed; now he that runs may read, and publish the exact agreement that appears between the present providences and the former predictions which were slighted, between the present punishments and the former sins which then were persisted in. Now they cannot but say, The Lord is righteous, Dan. xi. 11.—13.

7. Upon the four and twentieth day of the eleventh month, which is the month Sebat, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the Lord unto Zechariah, the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo the prophet, saying, 8. I saw by night, and, behold, a man riding upon a red horse, and he stood among the myrtle-trees that were in the bottom; and behind him were there red horses, speckled, and white. 9. Then said I, O my lord, what are these? And the angel that talked with me said unto me, I will shew thee what these be. 10. And the man that stood among the myrtle-trees answered and said, These are they whom the Lord hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth. 11. And they answered the angel of the Lord that stood among the myrtle-trees, and said, We have walked to and fro through the earth, and, behold, all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest. 12. Then the angel of the Lord answered and said, O Lord of hosts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation these three score and ten years? 13. And the Lord answered the angel that talked with me with good words, and comfor-for I was but a little displeased, and they helped forward the affliction. 16. Therefore thus saith the Lord, I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies: my house shall be built in it, saith the Lord of hosts, and a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem. 17. Cry yet, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, My cities through prosperity shall yet be spread abroad; and the Lord shall yet comfort Zion, and shall yet choose Jerusalem.

We now come to visions and revelations of the Lord; for in that way God chose to speak by Zechariah, to awaken the people's attention, and to engage the humble reverence of the word, and their humble inquiries into it, and to fix it the more in their minds and memories. Most of the following visions seem designed for the comfort of the Jews, now newly returned out of captivity, and their encouragement to go on with the building of the temple. The scope of this vision (which is as an introduction to the rest) is to assure the Jews of the care God took of them, and the eye of his providence that was upon them for good, now in the present state, when they seemed to be deserted, and their case deplorable. The vision is dated (v. 7.) the twenty-fourth day of the eleventh month, three months after he preached that sermon (v. 1.) in which he called them to repentance, from the consideration of God's judgments. Finding that the sermon had a good effect, and that they returned to God in a way of duty, the assurances he had given them are confirmed, that God would return to them in a way of mercy. Now observe here,

1. What the prophet saw, and the explanation of that.

1. He saw a grove of myrtle-trees; a dark shady grove, down in a bottom, hid by the adjacent hills, so that you were not aware of it, till you were just upon it. This represented the low, dark, solitary, melancholy condition of the Jewish church at this time. They were overtopped by all their neighbours, buried in obscurity; what friends they had were hidden, and there appeared no way of relief and succour for them. Note, The church has not always been visible, but sometimes hid, as the woman in the wilderness, Rev. xii. 6.

2. He saw a man mounting upon a red horse, standing in the midst of this shady myrtle-grove. This man is no other than the Man Christ Jesus; the same that appeared to Joshua, with his sword drawn in his hand as Captain of the host of the Lord, (Josh. v. 13, 14.) and to St. John, with his bow and his crown, Rev. vi. 2. Though the church was in a low condition, yet Christ was present in the midst of it. Was it hid by the hills? He was much more hid in the myrtle-grove, yet hid as in an ambush, ready to appear for theseasonal relief of his people, to their happy surprise. Compare Isa. xlv. 15. Verily, thou art a God that hidest thyself, and yet Israel's God and Saviour at the same time, their Holy One in the midst of them. He was riding, as a man on war; as a man in haste; riding on the heavens, for the help of his people, Deut. xxxiii. 26. He was attended with red horses, those that were red, or dyed red with the blood of war, as this same victorious Prince appeared red in his aphabetel, Isa. lxiii. 1, 2. Red as a fiery colour, denoting that he is jealous for Jerusalem, (v. 14.) and very angry at her enemies. Christ, on the law, appeared on a red horse, denoting the terror of that dispensation, and that he had yet his conflict before him, when he was to resist unto blood. But, under the gospel, he appears on a white horse, (Rev. vi. 2. and again, ch. xix. 11.) denoting that he has now gained the victory, and reigns in triumph; and hangs cut the white, fact the bloody, flag.

3. He saw a troop of horse attending him, ready to receive and obey his orders. Behind him there were some red horses, and some speckled, and some white; angels attending the Lord Jesus, ready to be employed by him for the service of his church, some in acts of judgment, others of mercy, others in mixed events. Note, The King of the church has angels at command, not only angels of glory, but to minister for the good of those that are his.

4. He inquired into the signification of this vision. He had an angel talking with him, as his instructor, beside those he saw in the vision; so had Ezekiel, (ch. xii. 3.) and Daniel, ch. viii. 16. Zechariah asked him, (v. 9.) O my Lord, what are these? And it should seem, this angel that talked with him, was Christ himself; the Man on the red horse, whom the rest were attendants on; to him immediately Zechariah addresses himself. Would be acquainted with the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, we must make our application, not to angels, (they are themselves learners,) but to Christ himself, who is alone able to take the book, and open the seals, Rev. v. 7. The prophet's question implies an humble acknowledgment of his own ignorance, and an earnest desire to be informed. O let me know what these are! This he desired, not for the satisfying of his curiosity, but that he might be furnished with something proper for the comfort and encouragement of the people of God, in their present distress.

5. He received from the angel that talked with him, (v. 9.) and from the man that stood among the myrtle-trees, (v. 10.) the interpretation of this vision. Note, Jesus Christ is ready to instruct those that are humbly desirous to be taught the things of God. He immediately said, I will show thee what these be. What knowledge we have, or may have, concerning the world of spirits, we are indebted to Christ for. The account given him was, These are they whom the Lord has sent, they are his messengers, his envoys, appointed (as his eyes are said to do, 2 Chron. xvi. 9.) to walk, to run, to fly swiftly, through the earth, to observe what is done in it, and to execute the divine commands. God needs them not, but he is pleased to employ them, and we need the comfort arising from the doctrine of their administration.

1. What the prophet heard, and what instructions were thereby given him. Faith comes by hearing, and, generally, in visions there was something said.

1. He heard the report or representation which the angels made to Christ of the present state of the world, v. 11. They had been out abroad, as flying posts, (being hastened by the King of kings' command,) Esth. iii. 15.) and being returned, they gave this account of the state of things among the myrtle-trees, (for to the Lord Jesus angels themselves are accountable,) We have walked to and fro through the earth, and behold, all the earth sits still, and is at rest. We are taught to pray that the will of God may be done by men on earth as it is done by the angels in heaven; and here we see what need we have to pray so, for it is far from being so. For,(1.) the things that are going on in the world are not busy. Those that are employed in the court above, rest not day nor night from praising God, which is their business there; and those that are employed in the camp below, are never idle, nor lose time, they are still ascending and descending upon the Son of man, (John i. 51. as on Jacob's ladder, Gen. xxviii. 12.) they are still walking to and fro through the earth. Thus active, thus industrious, Satan own himself to be to do mischief, Job i. 7. It is well for us that good angels bestir themselves as much to do good, and that here in this earth, we have guardians going about continually seeking to do a kind-ness, as we have adversaries which, as running li-ge about continually, seeking to devour us. Though holy angels in this earth meet with a great deal that is disagreeable, yet, while they are going on God's errands, they hesitate not to walk to and fro through it. Their own habitation, which those that fell liked not, they will like the better when they return. (2.) We find the world of mankind here in this present life, as all the earth is still in a rest, while all the church is made uneasy, tossed with tempests, and not comforted. Those that are strangers to the church, are secure; those that are enemies to it, are successful. The Chaldeans and Persians dwell at ease, while the poor Jews are con-tinually alarmed; as when the king and Haman sat down to drink, but the city Shushan was perplexed. The children of men are merry and jovial, but none grieved for the affliction of God's children. Note, It is sad to think what a deep sleep the world is cast into, what a spirit of slumber has seiz'd the generality of mankind, that are under God's wrath and Satan's power, and yet secure and unconcerned! They sit still, and are at rest! Luke xvii. 26, &c.

2. He heard Christ's intercession with the Father for the church, when he related the posture of affairs in this lower world, but we read not of any prayers they made for the redress of the grievances they had made a remonstrance of; no, it is the Angel among the myrtle-trees that is the great Intercessor. Upon the report of the an-gels, he immediately turned heavenward, and said, Lord, wilt thou not have mercy on thy church? (1.) The thing he complained of was, that the church was left without a habitation: Ps. 7. Show us thy mercy, O Lord. Note, God's mercy is all in all to the church's comfort; and all his mercy must be hoped for through Christ's me-diation. (2.) The thing he complains of is, the de-lay of his mercy; how long wilt thou not have mer-cy? He knows that mercies through him shall be built up for ever, (Ps. lxxxix. 2.) but thinks he long, because the building is deferred. (3.) The objects of compassion recommended to the divine mercies are, Jerusalem, the holy city, and the other cities of Jud-ah, that were now in ruins; for God had had in-dignation against them, now three-score and ten years. He mentions seventy years, because that was the time fixed in the divine counsels for the continuance of the captivity; and 70 years is commonly allowed for a space grace had been shown them from the Lord their God, to give them some reviving, (Ezra ix. 8.) yet the scars of those seventy years' captivity still remained so deep, so painful, that that is the melancholy string they still harp upon—the divine indignations during those seventy years. Dr. Lightfoot thinks that whereas the seventy years' captivity reckoned from Jehoiakim's fourth year, and ended in the first of Cyrus; these seventy years are to be computed from the elevation of Zedekiah, when Jerusalem and the temple were burnt, about nineteen years after the first captivity, and which ended in this se-cond year of Darius Hystaspes, about seventeen years after Cyrus's proclamation; as that seventy years made up thirty years, 70 years after the captivity went off, as it came on, gradually: Lord, we are still under the burden of the sev-enty years' wrath, and wilt thou be angry with us for ever?

3. He heard a gracious reply given to this inter-cession of Christ's for his church; for it is a prevail-ing, intercession, always acceptable, and him the Father heard always; (v. 13.) The Lord answered the Angel, this Angel of the covenant, with good words, and comfortable words, with promises of mercy and deliverance, and the perfecting of what he had begun in favour to them. These were comfortable words to Christ, who, as great as he was in God's church, was sensible to be unable to do all that was required of him by God in his service. God often answers prayer with good words, when he does not immediately appear in great works; and these good words are real answers to prayer. Men's good words will not feed the body, (Jas. ii. 16.) but God's good words will feed the soul, for saying and doing with him are not two things, as with us, but are one. He heard that reply which was given to the Angel, repeated to himself, with a commission to publish it to the children of his people, for their comfort. The revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave to him he signified to his servant John, and by him to the churches. Rev. i. 1, 4. Thus all the good words and comfortable words of the gospel we receive from Jesus Christ, as he received them from the Father, in answer to the prayer of his blood, and his ministers are appointed to preach them to all the world. Now that God would speak comfortably to Jerusalem, Zechariah is the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord. The voice said, Cry, Cry then. The prophets must now ery as loud to show God's people their need, and the way to be found by them, how they must turn from their transgressions, Isa. xl. 2, 3, 6. And if he ask, What shall I cry? He is here instructed.

(1.) He must proclaim the wrath God has in store for the enemies of Jerusalem. He is jealous for Zion with great jealousy, v. 14. He takes himself to be highly affronted by the injuries and indignities that are done to his church, as he had been formerly by the iniquities framed in his church. The earth sat still, and was at rest, (v. 11.) not rec-lenting at all, or showing the least remorse, for all the mischief they had done to Jerusalem; as Joseph's brethren, who, when they had sold him, sat down to eat bread; and this God took very ill; (v. 15.) I am very sore displeased with the heathen, that are at ease, and have no concern for the afflicted church. Much more will he be displeased with those that are at ease in Zion, (Amos vi. 1.) with Zion's own sons, that sympathize not with her in her sorrows. But this was not all; they were not only not con-cerned for her, but they were concerned against her; I was but a little displeased with my people, and designed to correct them moderately; but those that were employed as instruments of the correc-tion of them did not only do nothing for the church, and malice helped forward the affliction, and added to it, persecuting those whom God had smitten, (Ps. lix. 26.) and insulting over those whom he had troubled. See Isa. xlvi. 6.—x. 5. Ezek. lii. 15, 16. Note, God is displeased with those who help forward the affliction even of such as suffer justly; for true humanity, in such a case, is good dignity.

(2.) He must proclaim the mercy God has in store for Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, v. 16. He must cry, "Thus saith the Lord, I am return-ed to Jerusalem with mercies. I was going away in wrath, but I am now returning in love. Cry yet to the same purport, v. 17. There must now be line upon line for consolation, as formerly there had been for conviction, (v. 12.) even the Lord of hosts, assures them, [1.] That the temple shall be built, that is now but in the building. This good work which they are now about, though it meet with much discouragement, shall be perfected, and they shall have the tokens of God's presence, and oppor-tunities of conversing with him, and worshiping him, as formerly. Note, It is a comfort to any place, to hear that God will build his house in it. [2] That Jerusalem shall again be built a a city compact together, which had formerly been its glory, Ps. cxxi. 3. A line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem, in the rebuilding of it with great exactness and uniformity. [3.] That the nation shall again become populous and rich, though now diminished and impoverished; not only Jerusalem, but other cities that are reduced and lie in a little compass, shall yet spread abroad, or be diffused; their suburbs shall extend far, and colonies shall be transplanted from them; and this through prosperity; they shall be so numerous, and so wealthy, that there shall not be room for them; the city shall complain that it is too strait, Isa. xlix. 20. As they had been scattered and spread abroad, through their calamities, so they should now be so through their prosperity. Let thy fountains be dispersed, Prov. v. 16. The cities that should thus increase, God calls his cities; they are blessed by him, and they are fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the land. [4.] That all their present sorrows should not only be balanced, but for ever silenced, by divine consolations; The Lord shall yet comfort Zion. Yet, at length, though her griefs and grievances may continue long, God has comforts in reserve for Zion, and all her mourners. [5.] That all this will be the fruit of God's preventing, distinguishing favour; He shall yet choose Jerusalem, shall renew his choice, renew his covenant, and make it appear that he has chosen Jerusalem. As he first built them up into a people, when he brought them out of Egypt, so he will now rebuild them, when he brings them out of Babylon; not for any worthiness of theirs, but in pursuance of his own choice, Deut. vii. 7, 8. Jerusalem is the city he has chosen, and he will not cast it off.

18. Then lifted I up mine eyes, and saw, and beheld, four horns. 19. And I said unto the angel that talked with me, What be these? And he answered me, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem. 20. And the Lord shewed me four carpenters. 21. Then said I, What come these to do? And he spake, saying, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, so that no man did lift up his head: but these are come to fray them, to cast out the horns of the Gentiles, which lifted up their horn over the land of Judah to scatter it.

It is the comfort and triumph of the church, (Isa. lx. 19.) that, when the enemy shall come in like a flood, with mighty force and fury, then the Spirit of the Lord shall lift him up a standard against him. Now, in this vision, (the second which this prophet had,) we have an illustration of that; God's Spirit making a stand, and making head, against the formidable power of the church's adversaries.

1. We have here the enemies of the church bold and daring, daring to take away the name, to cut off the name of Israel; such the people of God had lately been insulted by; I looked, and beheld, four horns, (v. 18.) which are explained, v. 19. They are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem; that is, the Jews both in the country and in the city, because they were the Israel of God. They have tossed them, (so some read it,) as furious bulls, and their heads wherewith they are enraged at. They have scattered them, so that no man did lift up his head, v. 21. No man durst show his face, for fear of them, much less give them any opposition, or make head against them. They are horns, denoting their dignity and dominion, horns exalted; denoting also their strength and power and violence. They are four horns, for the Jews are surrounded with them on every side; when they avoid one horn that pushes at them, they run upon another. The men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, as they saw danger, joined themselves to, set about the building of the temple; but the enemies of that work from all sides pressed at them, and drove them from it. Rehum, and Shimshai, and the other Samaritans that opposed the building of the temple, were these horns, Ezra iv. 8. So were Sanballat and Tobiah, and the Ammonites and Arabsians, that opposed the building of the wall, Neh. iv. 7. Note, The church's enemies have horns, and use them to the honour and service of every good work. The great enemy of the New Testament church has seven heads and ten horns; (Rev. xvii. 3.) so that they who endeavour to do the church any service, must expect to be pushed at.

2. We have here the friends of the church active and prevailing. The prophet did himself lift up his eyes, and see the four horns, and saw them so formidable, that he began to despair of the safety of every good man, and the success of every good work; but the Lord then showed him four carpenters, or smiths, who were empowered to cut off these horns, v. 20, 21. With an eye of sense we see the power of the enemies of the church; look which way we will, the world shows us that; but it is with an eye of faith that we see it safe, notwithstanding. It is the Lord that doth this, and he opened the eyes of the prophet's servant, to see the angelic guards round about his master, 2 Kings vi. 17. Observe, Those that were to fray or break the horns of the Gentiles, and to cast them out, were, (1.) Carpenters, or smiths, (for they are supposed by some to have been horns of iron,) men who had skill and ability to do it; whose proper business it was, and who understood it; they were masters of the business, and had tools at hand, to do it with. Note, God calls those to serve the interests of his church, whom he either finds, or makes, fit for it. If there be horns against the church, by which are denoted the force and fury of beasts, there are carpenters for the church, by whom are denoted the wisdom and forecast of men, by which they find ways to master the strongest beasts, for every kind of beasts in tamed, and has been tamed, by wits, much kinder than by force. These were four carpenters: as many horns, so many hands to saw them off. Note, Which way soever the church is threatened with mischief, and opposition given to its interests, God can find out ways and means to check the force, to restrain the wrath, and make it turn to his praise. Some by these four carpenters understand Zerubbabel and Joshua, Ezra and Nehemiah, who carried on the work of God in despite of opposition given to it. Those horned beasts broke into God's vineyard, to tread it down; but the good magistrates and the good ministers whom God raised up, took the realm; and though they had not power to cut off the horns of the wicked, (as David did, Ps. lxxv. 5, 10.) yet they frightened them, and cast them out.

Note, When God has work to do, he will raise up some to do it, and others to defend it, and protect those that are employed in the doing of it.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter, we have, I. Another vision which the prophet saw, not for his own entertainment, but for his satisfaction, and the edification of the seer to whom he was sent, v. 1, 2. II. A sermon upon it in the rest of the chapter; I. By way of application. Here is, (1.) A use of exhortation to the Jews that were carried away into Babylonia, to wait in Enoch for their return to their own land, v. 6, 9. (2.) A use of consolation to those that were returned, in reference to the many difficulties they had to struggle with, v. 10.
A use of caution to all not to prescribe to God, or limit him, but patiently to wait for him, v. 13.

1. I LIFTED up mine eyes again, and looked, and, behold, a man with a measuring-line in his hand. 2. Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me,
To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof. 3. And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him, 1. And said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein.

5. For I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her.

This prophet was ordered, in God's name, to assure the people, (ch. 1. 16.) that a line should be stretched forth upon Jerusalem: now here we have that promise illustrated and confirmed. It is part of his message to the people with the more clearness and assurance.

1. He sees, in a vision, a man going to measure Jerusalem; (v. 1, 2.) He lifted up his eyes again, and looked. God had showed him that which was very encouraging to him, ch. 1. 20. and therefore now he lifted up his eyes again, and looked. Note, The comfortable sights which by faith we have had of God's goodness made to pass before us should engage us to lift up our eyes again, and to search further into the discoveries made us of the divine grace; for there is still more to be seen. In the close of the foregoing chapter, he had seen Jerualem's enemies buffed and broken, so that now he begins to hope she shall not be ruined. But that is not enough to make her happy, and therefore that is not all that is promised. Here is more carpenter's work to be done. When David had resolved to cut off the horns of the wicked, he engaged likewise that the horns of the righteous should be exalted, Ps.
xxv. 10. And so does the Son of David here; for he is the man, even the Man Christ Jesus, whom the prophet sees with a measuring-line in his hand;
for he is the Master-Builder of his church, (Heb.
vi. 4.) and to him be the lines of it. How could Zechariah took the boldness to ask him whither he was going, and what he designed to do with that measuring-line? And he readily told him that he was going to measure Jerusalem; to take a particular account of the dimensions of it each way; that it might be computed what was necessary for the making of a wall about it, and that it might appear, by comparing its dimensions with the vast numbers that should inhabit it, what additions were necessary to be made for the receiving and containing of them; when multitudes flock to Jerusalem, (Isa.
1x. 4.) it is time for her to enlarge the place of her tent, Isi. liv. 2. Note, God takes notice of the extent of his church, and will take care that, whenever so many guests are brought in to the wedding-supper, still there shall be room, Luke xiv. 22. In the New Jerusalem, my Father's house above, there are many mansions.

II. He is informed that this vision means well to Jerusalem; that the measuring-line he saw was not a line of confusion, (as that, Isa. xxxii. 11.) not a line to mete out for destruction, as when God pur-poused to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion, he stretched out a line; (Lam. ii. 8.) but it is as when he divided the inheritance by line, Ps. lxxviii.
55. The angel that talked with the prophet went forth, as he designed, to measure Jerusalem, but another angel went out to meet him, to desire that he would first explain this vision to the prophet, that it might not occasion him any uneasy speculations; Run, and speak to this young man; (for, it seems, the prophet entered upon his prophecy when he was young, yet no man ought to despise his youth, when God thus highly honoured it;) he is a young man, not experienced, and may be ready to run, and speak. It was this that caused the other to run, run, and speak to him that Jerusalem shall be both safe and great.

1. As safe and great as numbers of men can make it;
(ch. 4. 7.) Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls; the inhabitants of it shall increase and multiply and replenish it, to admiration, so as to extend itself far beyond the present dimensions, which now there is an account taken of. The walls of Jerusalem are, (ch. 4. 8.) the city shall be a service wall, and奇特 shall not confine it, and keep its inhabitants from multiplying beyond such a pitch; but Jerusalem, even when it is walled, to keep off the enemy, shall be inhabited as towns without walls; the city shall be in a maner lost in the suburbs, as London is, where the out-parishes are more populous than those within the walls; so shall it be with Jerusalem; it shall be expanded, as God has shown that he will be. And shall be as safe as if it had the strongest walls, such a multitude of men (which are the best walls of a city) shall there be therein; and of cattle too, to be not only food, but wealth too, for those men. Note, The increase of the numbers of a people is a great blessing, is a fruit of God's blessing on them, and an earnest of further blessings; (Ps. cvii. 38.) They are multiplied, for he blesses them.

2. As safe and great as the presence of God can make it, v. 5. (1.) It shall be safe, for God himself will be a Wall of fire round about it. Jerusalem had no walls about it at this time, but lay naked and exposed; formerly, when it had walls, the enemies not only broke through them, but broke them down; but now God will be unto her a Wall of fire. Some think it alludes to shepherds that made fires about their flocks, or travellers that made fires about their tents in desert places, to frighten wild beasts from them. God will not only make a hedge about them as he did about Job, (ch. ii. 10.) not only make walls and bulwarks about them, Isa. xxvi. 1. (those may be battered down,) not only as the mountains round about them, Ps. cxxvi. 2. (mountains may be got over,) but he will be a Wall of fire round them, which can neither be broken down, nor overthrown; no wall can be so strong, nor nor undermed, nor the foundations of it sapped, nor can it be attempted, or approached, without danger to the assailants. God will not only make a wall of fire about her, but he will himself be such a Wall; for our God is a consuming Fire to his and his church's enemies. He is a Wall of fire, not on one side only, but round about on every side. (2.) It shall be great, for God himself will be the Glory in the midst of it. His temple, his altar, shall be set up and attended there, and his institutions observed, and there then shall the tokens of his special presence and favour be, which will be the glory in the midst of them, will make them truly admirable in the eyes of all about them. God will have honour from them, and put honour upon them. Note, These tokens were designed to make all the people that were gathered into the city hourly recall his Glory; those that have him in the midst of them, have glory in the midst of them, and thence the church is said to be all glorious within. And those persons and places that have God to be the Glory in the midst of them, have him for a Wall of fire round about them, for upon all that glory there is, and shall be, a defence, Isa. iv. 5. Note, This was fulfilled in part, in that Jerusalem, in process of time, became a very flourishing city, and made a very great figure in those parts of the world, much

Beyond what could have been expected, considering how low it was brought, and how long it was ere it recovered itself. But it was to have its full accomplishment in the gospel-church, which is extended far, as towns without walls, by the admission of the Gentiles into it; and which has God, the Son of God, for its Prince and Protector.

6. Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the Lord: for I have spread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, saith the Lord. 7. Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon. 8. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, After the glory hath he sent me unto the nations which spoiled you; for he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye. 9. For, behold, I will shake my hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants: and ye shall know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me.

One would have thought that Cyrus's proclamation, which gave liberty to the captive Jews to return to their own land, should have sufficed to bring them all back, and that, as Pharaoh gave them leave to quit Egypt and their house of bondage there, they should not have left a hoof behind; but it seems it had not that effect; there were about 40,000 whose spirits God stirred up, and they went; but many, perhaps the greater part, stayed behind; the land of their captivity was as much a country to them as their own; 'Patris patriaeque hinc est aegro, My country is every spot where I feel myself happy.' They had no great affection to their own land, and apprehended the difficulties in their way to it insuperable. This proceeded from a bad cause—a distrust of the power and promise of God, a love of ease and worldly wealth, and an indifference to the religion of their country, and to the God of Israel himself; and it had a bad effect, for it was an implicit censure of those as fools that went, and given to changes, that did return, and a weakening of their hands in the work of God; such as these could not sing, (Ps. cxxxvii.) in their captivity, for they had forgotten thee, O Jerusalem, and were so far from preferring thee before their chief joy, that they preferred any joy before thee. Here is therefore another proclamation issued out by the God of Israel, strictly charging and commanding all his free-born subjects, wherever they were dispersed, speedily to return into their own land, and render themselves at their respective posts there. They are loudly summoned, (v. 6.) Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the Lord. This fifty follows upon the promise of the rebuilding and enlarging of Jerusalem. If God will build it for them and their comfort, they must come and inhabit it for him and his glory, and not continue in Babylon. Note, The promises and privileges with which God's people are blessed, should engage us, whatever it cost us, to join ourselves to them, and cast our lot among them. When Zion is enlarged, to make room for all God's Israel, it is the greatest madness imaginable for any of them to stay in Babylon. The captivity of a sinful state is by no means to be continued in, though a man be ever so easy upon temporal accounts; no, come forth, and flee with all speed, and lose no time! Escape for thy life, look not behind thee.

To induce them to hasten their return, let them consider,

1. They are now dispersed, and were concerned to incorporate themselves for their mutual common defence; (v. 6.) "I have spread you abroad as the four winds of heaven, sent some into one corner of the world, and some into another; this has been your condition a long time, and therefore you should now gather together, and take care, not to be scattered before the Lord." God owns that his scattering them was in wrath, and therefore they must take this invitation as a token of God's being willing to be reconciled to them again; so that they kicked at his kindness, in refusing to accept the call.

2. They are now in bondage, and were concerned to assert their own liberty; and therefore, Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon, to the best of thy way. Let us see some such bold efforts and struggles to help thyself as become the generous, gracious seed of Abraham," v. 7. Note, When Christ has proclaimed that deliverance to the captives, which he has himself wrought out, it then concerns each of us to deliver ourselves, to loose ourselves from the bonds of our necks, (Isa. li.) and, if we are under grace to live, sin shall not have dominion over us. Zion herself is here said to dwell with the daughter of Babylon, because many of the precious sons of Zion dwelt there; and where the people of God are, there the church of God is, for it is not tied to places. Now it is not fit that Zion should dwell with the daughter of Babylon; what communion can light have with darkness? Zion will be in danger of partaking with the daughter of Babylon, both in her sions, and in her plagues; and therefore, 'Come out of her, my people, Rev. xviii. 4. Deliver thyself, O Zion, by a speedy return to thy own land, and do not destroy thyself by continuing in that polluted, devoted land.' Those that would be found among the generation of God's children, must save themselves from the ungodly generation of this world; it was St. Peter's charge to his new converts, Acts li. 40.

3. They have seemed to be forsaken and forgotten of God; but God will now make it to appear that he espouses their cause, and will pled it with jealousy, v. 8. 9. It was a discouragement to those who remained in Babylon, to hear of the difficulties and oppositions which their brethren met with, that were returned, by which they were still in danger of being overpowered. "And we might as well sit still" (think they) "as rise up and fall." In answer to this objection, the Angel that talked with the prophet, that is, Jesus Christ, tells him what he had commission to do for their protection; and the perfecting of their salvation, and herein he has an eye to the great redemption which, in the fulness of time, he was to be the Author of. Christ, who is Jehovah, and the Lord of hosts, of all the hosts of heaven and earth, in both which he has a sovereign power, says He, the Father, has sent me. Note, What Jesus has done, and does, for his church against his enemies, he was sent and commissioned by the Father to do. With great satisfaction he often speaks of the Father that sent him.

(1.) He is sent after the glory. After the glorious beginning of the deliverance, and the doing for him, he is the Finisher of that work which he is the Author of. Christ is sent, in the first place, to the nation and people of the Jews, to whom pertained the glory, Rom. ix. 4. And he was himself the Glory of his people Israel. But after the glory, after his care of them, he is sent to the nations, to be a Light to lighten the Gentiles, by the power of his gospel to captivate them from the heathen, and to carry great things among them, into obedience to himself.

(2.) He is sent to the nations that spoiled them, to take vengeance on them for the wrongs done to Zion.
When the year of his redeemed comes, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion, Is. xxxiv. 8. He is sent to shake his hands upon them, to lift up his eyes, and to put on them his heavy hand, to bruise them with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel, Ps. ii. 9. Some think it intimates how easily God can subdue and humble them with the turn of his hand; it is but shaking his hand over them and the work is done. They shall be a spoil to their servants, shall be enslaved to those whom they had enslaved, and blasphemed by them, and hand-ed. In Esther's time this was fulfilled, when the Jews had rule over them that hated them; (Esth. ix. 1.) and often in the time of the Maccabees. And the promise is further fulfilled in Christ's victory over our spiritual enemies, his spoiling principalities and powers, and making a show of them openly, Col. ii. 15. And it is still in force to the gospel-church. Christ will reckon with all that are enemies to it, and, sooner or later, will make them his footstool, Ps. cx. 1. Rev. iii. 9.

(3.) What he will do for his church, shall be an evident proof of God's tender care of it, and affection to it; He that toucheth you, touches the apple of his eye. This is a high expression of God's love to his church. By his resentment of the injury done to her, it appears how dear she is to him, how he interests himself in all her interests, and takes what is done against her, not only as done against himself, but as done against the very apple of his eye, the tenderest part, which nature has made very fine, has put a double guard upon, and taught us to be in a special manner careful of, and which the least touch is a great offence by. This encourages the people of God to pray, (with David, Ps. xvii. 8.) Keep me as the apple of thine eye; and engages them to do as Solomon directs, (Prov. vii. 2.) to keep his law as the apple of their eye. Some understand it thus; "He that toucheth you, touches the apple of your eye; whoever do you an injury, will prove in the issue, to have done the greatest injury to them-selves."

(4.) It shall be an evident proof of Christ's mission; Ye shall know that the Lord of hosts has sent me to be the Protector of his church; that the promises made to the church are yea and amen in him. Christ's victory over our spiritual enemies proves that the Father sent him, and was with him.

10. Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord. 11. And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the midst of thee; and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee. 12. And the Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again. 13. Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord: for he is raised up out of his holy habitation.

Here is,

1. Joy proclaimed to the church of God; to the daughter of Zion, that had separated herself from the daughter of Babylon. The Jews that were returned, were in distress and danger, their enemies in the neighbourhood were spiteful against them, their friends that remained in Babylon were cool toward them, shy of them, and declined coming in to their assistance; and yet they are bid to sing, and to rejoice even in tribulation. Note, Those that have recovered their purity, and integrity, and spri-and not laid in common. (2.) Judah shall be in this holy land, shall inhabit it, and enjoy the comfort of it, and no longer be lost and scattered in Babylon. (3.) Judah shall be God's portion, which he will delight in, which shall be dear to him, by which he will be served, and in which he will be glorified. The Lord's portion is his people. (4.) God will inherit Judah again as his portion; will claim his interest, and take possession of all the honors of that which had invaded his right. He will protect his people and govern them as a man does his inheritance, and will be at home among them. (5.) He will choose Jerusalem again, as he had chosen it formerly, to put his name there; he will renew and confirm the choice, and continue it a chosen place, till it must resign its honors to the Jerusalem that is from the creation of the world, the city of the great King being set aside for awhile, yet it shall obtain.

II. Here is silence proclaimed to all the world besides, v. 13. The daughter of Zion must sing, but all flesh must be silent. Observe here, 1. A very awful description of God's appearances for the relief of his people. He is raised up out of his holy habitation; as a man out of sleep, (Is. xlv. 25. — xlviii. 63.) or as a man entering into a habit or resolution upon a happy meeting with. Heaven is his holy habitation above, thence we must expect him to appear, Isa. lxiv. 1. His temple is so in this lower world, thence from between the cherubim he will shine forth, Ps. lixxi. 1. He is about to do something unusual, unexpected, and very surprising, and to plead his people's cause, which had long seemed neglected. 2. A reasonable caution and direction, Do not make such a time: Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord — before Christ and his grace; let not flesh object against the methods he takes — before God and his providence; the enemies of the church shall be silenced, all iniquity shall stop her mouth, the friends of the church must be silent. Leave it to God to take his own way, and neither prescribe to him what he should do, nor quarrel with him whatever he does. Be still, and know that he is God. Stand still, and see his salvation. See Heb. ii. 20.

Zeph. i. 7. Silently acquiesce in his holy will, and patiently wait the issue, as those who are assured that when God is raised up out of his holy habitation, he will not retreat, or sit down again, till he has accomplished his whole work.

CHAP. III.

The vision, in the foregoing chapter, gave assurances of the Messiah's coming, the still intentions of the Jewish nation, the promises of which terminated in Christ. Now, the vision, in this chapter, concerns their church-state, and their ecclesiastical interests, and assures them that they shall be put into a good posture again and the mines of this also have an eye to Christ, who is not only our Prince, but the High Priest of our profession, of whom Joshua was a type. Here is, 1. A vision relating to Joshua, as the representative of the church in his time, representing the disadvantages he laboured under, and the people in him, with the redress of the grievances of both. 1. He is accused by Satan, but is brought off by Christ, v. 1, 2. He appears in filthy garments, but is clothed by Christ, v. 3. He is assured of being established in his office, if he conduct himself well, v. 6. 7. II. A sermon relating to Christ, who is here called the Branch, who should be enuced with all perfections for his undertaking, and who should triumphantly pass through it, and by whom we should have pardon and peace, v. 8-10.

And he shewed me Joshua the high priest standing before the angel of the Lord, and Satan standing at his right hand to resist him. 2. And the Lord said unto Satan, The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan; even the Lord that hath chosen Jeruaccusation, and if any thing be amiss, especially with the priests, Satan will be sure to aggravate it, and mix the charge into his scheme, to oppose the service he was doing for the public good. He stood at his right hand, the hand of action, to discourage him, and raise difficulties in his way. Note, When we stand before God, to minister to him, or stand up for God, to serve his interests, we must expect to meet with all the resistance that Satan’s subtlety and malice can give us. Let us then resist the devil, as strong and mighty as he is, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the power of the Holy Ghost. 2. A victorious defence is made for him; (v. 2.) The Lord, the Lord Christ, said unto Satan, The Lord rebuke thee. Note, It is the happiness of the saints, that the Judge is their Friend; the same that they are accused to, is their Patron and Protector, and an Advocate for them, and he will be sure to bring them off. (1.) Satan is here checked by one that has authority, that has conquered him, and many a time silenced him. The accuser of the brethren, of the ministers and the ministry, is cast out, his indictments are quashed, and his suggestions against them, as well as his suggestions to them, showed to be malicious, frivolous, and vexatious; The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan. The Lord saith to the Lord: Surely, Lord; The Lord rebuke thee, the Lord the Creator. The power of God is engaged for the making of the grace of Christ effectual. “The Lord restrain thy malicious rage, reject thy malicious charge, and revenge upon thee thine enmity to a servant of his.” Note, Those that belong to Christ, have him ready to appear vigorously for them, then when Satan appears most vehement against them. He does not confound him, but stops his mouth immediately with this sharp reprimand; The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan. This is the best way of dealing with that furious enemy; Get thee behind me, Satan. (2.) Satan is here argued with. He resists the priest, but let him know that his resistance, [1.] Will be fruitless; it will be to no purpose to attempt any thing against Jerusalem, for the Lord has chosen it, and he will abide by his choice. Whatever is objected against God’s people, God saw it, he foresaw it when he chose them, and yet he chose them; and therefore that can be no inducement to him now to reject them; he knew the worst of them when he chose them; and his election shall obtain. [2.] It is unreasonable: for is not this a brand plucked out of the fire? The Lord has removed from the priesthood, the people, whose representative he is. Christ has not that to say for them, for which they are to be punished, but that for which they are to be justified. Note, Christ is ready to make the best of his people, and takes notice of every thing that is pleadable in excuse of their infirmities; so far is he from being extreme to mark what they do amiss. They have been lately brought out of great affliction; and is Satan so barbarous as to desire to have them cast away? No wonder that they are black and smoked, and have the smell of the fire upon them, but they are therefore to be excused, not to be accused. One can expect no other than that those who but the other day were captives in Babylon, should appear very mean and desppicable. They have been lately brought out of great affliction; and is Satan so barbarous as to desire to have them cast away? No wonder that they are black and smoked, and have the smell of the fire upon them, that God might be glorified in them; and will he then cast them off, and abandon them? No, he will not quench the smoking flax, the smoking fire-brand; for he snatched it out of the fire, because he intended to make use of it. Note, Narrow escapes from imminent danger are happy presages of future favours. A converted soul is a brand plucked out of the fire by a miracle of free grace, and therefore shall not be left to be a prey to Satan.

II. Joshua appears as one polluted, but is justified; for he represents the Israel of God, who are all as an unclean thing, till they are washed and sanctified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. Now observe here,

1. The impurity wherein Joshua appeared; (v. 3.) He was clothed, not only in coarse but in filthy garments, such as did very ill become the dignity of his office, and the sanctity of his work. By the law of Moses the garments of the high priest were all for grace, and not for form. But Joshua’s garments were a shame and reproach to him; yet in them he stood before the Angel of the Lord; he had no clean linen wherein to minister and do the duty of his place. Now this intimates, not only that the priesthood was poor and despised, and loaded with contempt, but that there was a great deal of iniquity cleaving to the holy things. The returned Jews were so taken up with their troubles, that they thought they needed not complain of their sins, and were not aware that those were the great hindrances of the progress of God’s work among them; because they were free from idolatry, they thought themselves chargeable with no iniquity, but God shows them there were many things amiss in them, which retarded the advances of God’s favours among them. And they were worse keeping up the burden against them, more dangerous than any of the neighbouring nations. The Chaldee Paraphrase says, Joshua had sons who took unto them wives, which were not lawful for the priests to take; and we find it was so, Ezra x. 18. And, no doubt, there were other things amiss in the priesthood; (Mal. iii. 10.) yet such were omitted to stand before the Angel of the Lord. Though his children did not as they should, yet the covenant of priesthood was not broken. Note, Christ bears with his people, whose hearts are upright with him, and admits them into communion with himself, notwithstanding their manifold infirmities.

2. The provision that was made for his cleansing. Christ gave orders to the angels that attended him, and were ready to do his pleasure, to put Joshua into a better state. Joshua presented himself before the Lord in his filthy garments, as an object of his pity; and Christ graciously looked upon him with compassion, and not, as justly he might have done, with indignation. Christ loathed the filthiness of Joshua’s garments, yet did not put him away. Thus God, by his grace, reconciles him to those of whom he chose to be priests to himself; he accepts between them and their sins, and so prevents their sins parting between them and their God; he reconciles himself to the sinner, but not to the sin. Two things are here done for Joshua, representing a double work of divine grace wrought in and for believers.

(1.) His filthy garments are taken from him; (v. 4.) the meaning of this is given us in what Christ said, and he said it as one having authority, Behold, I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee. The guilt of it is taken away by pardoning mercy, (the stench and stain of it by peace spoken to the conscience,) and the power of it broken by renewing grace. When God forgives our sins, he causes our iniquity to pass from us, that it may not appear against us, to condemn us; it passes from us as far as the cast is from the west. When he sanctifies the nature, he enables us to put off the old man, to cast away from us the filthy rags of our corrupt affections and lusts, as things we will never have any thing more to do with, will never gird us to, or apply in. Joshua washes those from his sins in his own blood, who were numbered God known and priests, Rev. i. 5, 6. Either we must be cleansed from the pollutions of sin, or we shall, as polluted, be put from that priesthood, Ezra ii. 62
(2.3) He is clothed anew, has not only the shame of his filthiness removed, but the shame of his nakedness covered, I will clothe thee with change of raiment. Joshua had no clean linen of his own, but Christ will provide for him, for he will not let a priesthood of his own instituting be lost, be either contemptible before men, or unacceptable before God. The change of raiment here is rich, costly raiment, such as is worn on high days. Joshua shall appear as lovely as ever he appeared loathsome: they that minister in holy things, shall not only cease to do evil, but learn to do well; God will make them wise, and humble, and diligent, and faithful, and examples of every thing that is good; and then Joshua is clothed with change of raiment. Thus those whom Christ makes spiritual priests, are clothed with the graces of his Spirit, and with the graces of his Spirit, which are ornaments to them. The righteousness of saints, both imputed and implanted, is the fine linen, clean and white, with which the bride, the Lamb’s wife, is arrayed, Rev. xix. 8.

III. Joshua is in danger of being turned out of office; but, instead of that, he is re-installed and estab-lished in the holy priesthood, and all that was done, and all that has appeared, is for his own good, and for the honour of God. The crown of the priesthood is put upon him, v. 3. This was done at the special instance and request of the prophet; I said, “Let them set a fair mitre upon his head, as a badge of his office. Now the time is come, and it is necessary the consecration of Joshua for the future time be performed, and he let be dressed up in all the garments of the high priest.” Note, When God designs the restoring and reviving of religion, he stirs up his prophets and people to pray for it, and does it in answer to their prayers. Zechariah prayed that the angels might be ordered to set the mitre on Joshua’s head, and they did it immediately, and clothed him with the priestly garments; for no man took this honour to himself, but he that was called of God to it. The Angel of the Lord stood by, as having the oversight of the work which the created angels were employed in. He stood by, as one well pleased with it, and resolved to send by the orders he had given for the doing of it, and to continue his presence with that priesthood.

The covenant of the priesthood is renewed with him, which is called God’s covenant of peace, Num. xxv. 12. Mr. Pembell calls it the patent of his office, which is here declared and delivered to him before witnesses, v. 6, 7. The angel of the Lord, having taken care to make him fit for his office, and all that God calls to any office he either finds fit, or makes so, invests him in it. And though he is not made a priest with an oath, (that honour is reserved for him who is a Priest as upon order of Melchesidek, Heb. vii. 21.) yet being a type of him, he is introduced with a solemn declaration of the terms upon which he held his office. The angel of the Lord protested to Joshua, that if he would be sure to do the duty of his place, he should enjoy the dignity and reward of it. Now see,

(1.) What the conditions are, upon which he entered: The change of raiment here is rich, costly raiment, such as is worn on high days. Joshua shall appear as lovely as ever he appeared loathsome: they that minister in holy things, shall not only cease to do evil, but learn to do well; God will make them wise, and humble, and diligent, and faithful, and examples of every thing that is good; and then Joshua is clothed with change of raiment. Thus those whom Christ makes spiritual priests, are clothed with the graces of his Spirit, which are ornaments to them. The righteousness of saints, both imputed and implanted, is the fine linen, clean and white, with which the bride, the Lamb’s wife, is arrayed, Rev. xix. 8.

8. Hear now, O Joshua the high priest, thou and thy fellows that sit before thee: for they are men wondered at; for behold, I will bring forth my servant, The Branch. 9. For, behold, the stone that I have laid before Joshua; upon one stone shall be seven eyes: behold, I will engrave the gravings thereof, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day. 10. In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, shall ye call every man his neighbour under the vine and under the fig-tree.

As the promises made to David often slide insensibly into promises of the Messiah, whose kingdom David’s was a type of, so the promises here made to Joshua immediately rise as far upward, and look as far forward, as to Christ, whose priesthood Joshua’s was now a shadow of; not only in general as it kept up the line of Aaron’s priesthood, but especially as it was the reviving of that happy method of correspondence between heaven and earth, to which a great interruption had been given by the iniquity and captivity of Israel. Christ is a High Priest, as Joshua was, for sinners and sufferers, to meditate for them, and to provide for them. As Joshua, so Christ, was an high priest, and ministered amongst sinners; he was performed in the holy gifts of the holy order; and in all things fulfilled what was said of him. It is fit that Joshua should understand the priest- hood of Christ, because all the virtue of his priesthood, its value and usefulness to the church, depend ed upon, and was derived from the priesthood of Christ. Sec.

1. To whom this promise of Christ is directed; (v. 8.) *Hear now, O Joshua. Thou hast heard with pleasure what belongs to thyself; but behold, a greater than Joshua is at hand, hear now concerning him; that, and the row of the priests, the laying of the stones, are men wondered at. They are set for signs, for types and figures of Christ's priesthood: what God now did for Joshua and his fellows, was a happy omen of that which would appear when the Messiah should be so interpreted, with a pleasing wonder, by all that had understanding at the times: or, they are men wondered at for their singularity, hooted at as strange sort of people, because they ran not with others to the same excess of riot; (1 Pet. iv. 4.) or for their strange affections, and surprising deliverance out of them, as Ps. lxxi. 7. I am as a wonder unto many. They are men of wonder, they are a wonder to themselves, are amazed to think how happily their condition is altered. God's people and ministers are, upon many accounts, men wondered at. The high priest and his fellows here, (as the prophet and his children, Isa. viii. 18.) are for signs and for wonders. But men's wonder at them will cease when the Messiah comes, as the stars are called the children of the sun; for his name shall be called Wonderful.

II. The promise itself, which consists of several parts, all designed for the comfort and encouragement of Joshua and his friends, in that great and good work of building the temple, which they were now engaged in. An eye to Christ, and a believing dependence upon him, Previous to that time, and as long as he lived, in heaven, would carry them through the difficulties they met with in that and their other services.

1. The Messiah shall come; Behold, I will bring forth my servant the Branch. He has been long laid, but the fulness of time is now at hand, when he shall be brought forth into the world, brought forth among his people Israel. God himself undertakes to bring him forth, and lays upon him his own glory, and stand by him. He is God's Servant, employed in his work, obedient to his will, and entirely devoted to his honour and glory. He is the Branch; so he was called, Isa. iv. 2. The Branch of the Lord, (Isa. xi. 1.) A Branch out of the roots of Jesse, (Jer. xxiii. 5.) A righteous Branch; and, Jer. xxxiii. 15. The Branch of righteousness; whose beginning was small as a tender branch, but in time should become a great tree, and fill the earth, Isa. liii. 2. He is the Branch from which all our fruit must be gathered.

2. Many eyes shall be upon him. He is the Stone laid before Joshua, alluding to the foundation, or chief corner-stone, of the temple, which, probably, was laid, with great solemnity, in the presence of Joshua and his fellows; (v. 8.) This is the beginning of a tree, but the Foundation, which is the beginning of a building; and, when he shall be brought forth, seven eyes shall be upon him. The eye of his Father was upon him, to take care of him, and protect him, especially in his sufferings: when he was buried in the grave, as the foundation-stones are under ground, the eyes of Heaven were still upon him; buried out of men's sight, shall not out of God's. The eyes of all the prophets and Old Testament saints were upon this one stone; Abraham rejoiced to see Christ's day, and he saw it, and was glad. The eyes of all believers are upon him, they look unto him, and are saved, as the eyes of the sting Israhelites were upon the brazen serpent. Some understand this one stone to have the seven eyes in it, as the wheels had in Ezekiel's vision, and thinks it denotes that perfection of wisdom and knowledge which Jesus Christ was endued with, for the good of his church; his eyes run to and fro through the earth.

3. God himself will be partial, and put honour upon him; I will engrave the graving thereof, saith the Lord of hosts. This stone the builders refused, as rough and unsightly; but God undertakes to smooth and polish it, nay, and to carve it so that it shall be the Head Stone of the corner, the most beautiful in all the building. Christ was God's Workmanship; and abundance of his wisdom appears in the contrivance of our redemption, which stone is a precious stone, though laid for a Foundation; and the graving of it seems to allude to the precious stones in the breastplate of the high priest, which had the names of the tribes graven upon them; as the engraving of a signet, Exod. xxviii. 21, 22. In that breastplate there were twelve stones laid before Aaron, and for that which appears, those were lost: but there shall be one worth them all laid before Joshua; and that is Christ himself; this precious Stone shall sparkle as if it had seven eyes; there shall appear a perfection of wisdom and prudence in the oracles that proceed from the breastplate of judgment; and God will engrave the graving thereof; he will inrust Christ with all his elect, and he shall appear as a precious Stone.

But the high priest did when he went in before the Lord, with the names of all Israel engraved in the precious stones of his breastplate. When God gave a remnant to Christ, to be brought through grace to glory, then he engraved the graving of this precious stone.

4. By him sin shall be taken away, both the guilt and the iniquity of that land in one day. When the high priest had the names of Israel engraved on the precious stones he was adorned with, he is said to bear the iniquity of the holy things; (Exod. xxviii. 38.) but the law made nothing perfect, Heb. x. 1. He bore the iniquity of the land, as a type of Christ; but he could not remove it, the doing of that was reserved for Christ, that blessed and glorious Saviour, who is the sin of the world; and he did it in one day, that day in which he suffered and died; that was done by the sacrifice offered that day, which could not be done by the sacrifices of ages before, no, by not all the days of atonement which from Moses to Christ returned every year. This agrees with the angel's prediction, (Dan. x. 24.) He shall finish transgressions, and make an end of sin. And some make the engravings where with God engraved him, to signify the wounds and stripes which were given to his blessed body, which he underwent for our transgression, for our iniquity, and by which we are healed.

5. The effect of all this shall be the sweet enjoyment which all believers shall have of themselves, and the sweet communion they shall have with one another; (v. 12.) That the man his neighbour under the vine, and the fig-tree, which yields most pleasant fruit, and whose leaves also afford a refreshing shade for arbour. When iniquity is taken away, (1.) We reap precious benefits and privileges from our justification, more precious than the products of the vine or the fig-tree, Rom. v. 1. (2.) We repose ourselves in a sweet tranquillity; we will enquire from the fear of evil. What should terrify us when iniquity is taken away, when nothing can hurt us? We sit down under Christ's shadow with delight, and by it are sheltered from the scorching heat of the curse of the law. We live as Israel in the peaceable reign of Solomon; (1 Kings iv. 24, 25.) for he is the Prince of peace. (3.) We ought to invite others to come to partake with us in the enjoyment of these privileges, to call every man his neighbour to come and sit with him, for mutual converses, under the vine and fig-tree, and to share with him in the fruits he is surrounded with. Gospel-grace, as far as it comes with power, makes men neighbours; and those that have the comfort of acquaintance with Christ themselves, and communion with God through him, will be forward to court others to it. Let us go unto the house of the Lord.

CHAP. IV.

In this chapter we have another comfortable vision, which, as it was explained to the prophet, had much in it for the encouragement of the people of God in their present straits, which were so great, that they thought their case helpless, that their temple could never be rebuilt nor their city replenished; and therefore the scope of the vision is to show that God would, by his own power, perfect the work, though the assistance given to it by its friends were ever so weak, and the resistance given to it by its enemies were ever so strong. Here is, I. The awakening of the prophet to observe the vision, v. 1, 2. The vision itself, of a candlestick with seven lamps, which were supplied with oil, and kept burning, immediately from two olive-trees that grew by it, one on either side, v. 3, 4. III. The general encouragement hereby imparted to the people of God to go on in that good work, assuring them that it should be brought to perfection at last, v. 4. 10. IV. The particular explication of the vision, for the illustration of these assurances, v. 11. 14.

1. AND the angel that talked with me came again and waked me, as a man that is wakened out of his sleep, 2. And said unto me, What seest thou? And I said, I have looked, and beheld a candlestick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and his seven lamps thereon, and seven pipes to the seven lamps which were upon the top thereof; 3. And two olive-trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof; 4. So I answered and spake to the angel that talked with me, saying, What are these, my lord? 5. Then the angel that talked with me answered and said unto me, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my lord. 6. Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts. 7. Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain: and he shall bring forth the head-stone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace, unto it. 8. Moreover, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 9. The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house, his hands shall also finish it; and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto you. 10. For who hath despised the day of small things? for they shall rejoice, and shall see the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel with those seven; they are the eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth.

Here is, 1. The prophet prepared to receive the discovery that was to be made him; The angel that talked with him came and waked him, v. 1. It seems, though he was in converse with an angel, and great matters of public and private concern, yet he grew dull, and fell asleep, as it should seem, while the angel was yet talking with him. Thus the disciples, when they saw Christ transfigured, were heavy with sleep, Luke ix. 32. The prophet's spirit, no doubt, was willing to have attended to that which was to be seen and heard; but the flesh was weak; he could not for a long time keep his mind from these contemplations; the strangeness of the visions perhaps stupefied him, and so he was overcome with sleep, or perhaps the sweetness of the visions composed him, and even sung him asleep. Daniel was in a deep sleep when he heard the voice of the angel's words, Dan. x. 9. We shall never be fit for converse with spirits till we are got clear of these bodies of flesh. It should seem, the angel let him lose himself a little, that he might be fresh to receive new discoveries; but then waked him, to his surprise, as a man that is waked out of his sleep. Note, We need the Spirit of God, not only to make known to us divine things, but to make us take notice of them. He wakens morning by morning, he wakens mine ear, Isa. i. 4. We should beg of God that, whenever we are not apt to it, he would awaken us, and would then stir up ourselves.

II. The discovery that was made to him, when he was thus prepared. The angel asked him, What seest thou? v. 2. When he was awake, perhaps he had not taken notice of what was presented to his view, if he had not thus been excited to look about him. When he observed, he saw a golden candlestick; such a one as was in the temple formerly, and which like this temple should be supplied with due time be furnished. The church is a candlestick, set up for the enlightenment of this dark world, and the holding forth of the light of divine revelation to it; the candle is God's, the church is but the candlestick, but all of gold, denoting the great worth and excellence of the church of God. This golden candlestick had seven lamps branching out from it, so many sockets, in each of which was a burning and shining light. The Jewish church was but one, and though the Jews that were dispersed, it is probable, had synagogues in other countries, yet they were but as so many lamps belonging to one candlestick; but now, under the gospel, Christ is the Centre of unity, and not Jerusalem, or any place; and therefore seven particular churches are represented, not as seven lamps, but as seven several golden candlesticks, Rev. i. 20. This candlestick had one bowl, or common receiver, on the top, into which oil was continually dropping, and from it, by seven secret pipes, or passages, it was diffused to the seven lamps. So that, without any further care, they received oil as fast as they wasted it; (as in those which we call fountain ink-horns, or fountain-pens) they never wanted, nor were ever empty. And then, as in oil and vinegar, all the lamp-oil diffused itself, and the bowl too was continually supplied, without any care or attendance of a man; for (v. 3.) he saw two olive-trees, one on each side the candlestick, that were so fat and fruitful, that of their own accord they poured plenty of oil continually into the bowl, which by two larger pipes (v. 12.) dispersed the oil to the lesser ones, and so to the lamp-oil, as was above, to furnish it with oil, it tarryed not for man, nor waited for the sons of men; the scope of which is to show that God easily can, and often does, accomplish his gracious purposes concerning his church by his own wisdom and power, without any art or labour of man; and that though sometimes he makes use of instruments, yet he neither needs them, nor is tied to them, but can do his work without them, and will, rather than it should be hindered.

III. The inquiry which the prophet made concerning the meaning of these, and the gentle reproof given him for his dulness; (v. 4.) I answered and spake to the angel, saying, What are these, my lord? Observe how respectfully he speaks to the angel; he called him my lord; those that would be taught, must give honour to their teachers; he saw what was taught, with the eyes of a learner. Note, It is very desirable to know the meaning of God's manifestations of himself and his mind, in his word, by his ordinances and providences; What mean ye by these services, by these signs? And those that would understand the mind of God, must be inquisitive—Then shall we know, if we follow on to know, if we not only hear, but, as Christ, ask questions upon what we hear; Luke ii. 46. The angel answered him with a question, Knowest thou not what these be? Intimating that if he had considered and compared spiritual things with spiritual, he might have guessed at the meaning of these things; for he knew that there was a golden candlestick in the tabernacle, which it was the priests' constant business to supply with oil, and to keep it burning; and this the prophet saw; but the other was a candlestick, with lamps always kept burning, and yet no priest to attend it, nor any occasion for them, he might discern the meaning of this to be, that though God had set up the priesthood again, yet he could carry on his own work for, and in, his people, without them. Note, We have reason to be ashamed of ourselves, that we do not more readily apprehend the meaning of divine discoveries. The angel asked the prophet this question, to draw from him an acknowledgment of his own dulness and darkness, and slowness to understand, and he had it immediately; I said, No, my lord; I know not what these be. Visions had their significance, but often dark, and hard to be understood, and the prophets themselves were not always aware of it at first. But those that would be taught of God, must see and acknowledge their own ignorance, and their need to be taught, and must apply themselves to God for instruction. To him that gave us the cabinet we must apply ourselves for the key wherein to unlock it. God will teach the meek and humble, not those that are conceited of themselves, and lean on the broken rod; and they shall do what? Shall they come into Ezek. i. 26. 12. to Ezek. xii. 6. The general intention of this vision. Without a critical descent upon every circumstance of the vision, the design of it is to assure the prophet, and by him the people, that this good work of building the temple should, by the special care of Divine Providence, and the immediate influence of divine grace, be brought to a happy issue, though the enemies of it were strong, and the difficulties and furtherers of it few and feeble. Note, In the explication of visions and parables, we must look at the principal scope of them, and be satisfied with that, if that be clear, though we may not be able to account for every circumstance, or accommodate it to our purpose. The angel lets the prophet know, in general, that this vision was designed to illustrate and confirm the long promise of the Lord to Zerubbabel, who encouraged him to go on with the building of the temple. Let him know that he is a worker together with God in it, and that it is a work which God will own and crown.

1. God will carry on and complete this work, as he had begun their deliverance from Babylon, not by external force, but by secret operations and internal influences upon the minds of men. He says this, who is the Lord of hosts, and could do it eti et armis—by force; has legions at command; but he will do it, not by human might or power, but by his own Spirit. What is done by his Spirit is done by might and power, but that of the flesh is weak and feeble. Israel was brought out of Egypt, and into Canaan, by might and power, in both these works of wonder great slaughter was made; but they were brought out of Babylon, and into Canaan, the second time, by the Spirit of the Lord of hosts working upon the spirit of Cyrus, and inclining him to proclaim liberty to them, and working upon the spirits of the captives, and inclining them to take the liberty offered them. It was by the Spirit of the Lord of hosts that the people were excited and animated to build the temple; and therefore they are said to be helped by the prophets of God, because, as the Spirit's mouth shake to their hearts, Ezra v. 2. It was by the same Spirit that the hearts of Dans were inclined to the Father and further that good work, and that the sworn enemies of it were intimidated in their counsels, so that they could not hinder it as they designed. Note, The work of God is often carried on very successfully, when yet it is carried on very silently, and without the assistance of human force; the gospel-temple is built, not by might or power, (for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal,) but by the Spirit of the Lord of hosts, whose work on men's consciences is mighty to the pulling down of strong holds; thus the excellency of the power is of God, and not of man. When instruments fail, let us therefore leave it to God to do his work himself by his own Spirit.

2. All the difficulties and oppositions that he in the way, shall be got over and removed, even those that seem insuperable; (v. 7.) Who art thou, 0 great mountain,Before Zerubbabel shalt thou become a plain. See here, (1.) How the difficulty is represented; it is a great mountain, impassable and immovable. A heap of rubbish, like a great mountain, which must be got away, or the work cannot go on. The enemies of the Jews are proud and hard as great mountains; but when God has work to do, the mountains that stand in the way of it, shall dwindle into mole-hills; for see here, (2.) How these difficulties are despised; Who art thou, 0 great mountain, that thou shouldest stand in God's way, and think to stop the progress of his work? Who art thou that lookest so big, that thus threatenest, and art thus feared? Before Zerubbabel, when he is God's agent, thou shalt become a plain. All the difficulties shall vanish, and all the objections be got over; every mole-hill and hill shall be brought down, and the way of the Lord is to be prepared, Isa. xl. 4. Faith will remove mountains, and make them plains. Christ is our Zerubbabel; mountains of difficulty were in the way of his undertaking, but before him they were all levelled; nothing is too hard for his grace to do.

3. The same hand that has begun this good work, will perform it; He shall bring forth the head-stone; (v. 7.) and again, (v. 9.) The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house, be it spoken to his honour; perhaps with his own hands he laid the first stone, though it has been long retarded, and is still much opposed, yet it shall be finished at last, he shall live to see it finished, and, his hands shall also finish it; herein he is a type of Christ, who is both the Author and the Finisher of our faith; and his being the Author of it is an assurance to us that he will be the Finisher, for, as for God, his work is perfect; has he begun, and shall he not make an end? Zerubbabel shall himself bring forth the head-stone with shoutings, and loud acclamations of joy, among the spectators. The acclamation of the people, The Lord's hand is on us; Grace, great that is the burden of the triumphal songs which the church sings. It may be taken, (1.) As magnifying true grace, and giving to that all the glory; of what is done; when the work is finished, it must be thankfully acknowledged that it was not by any policy or power of our own that it was brought to perfection, but that it was grace that did it—God's good will towards us, and his good work in us and for us. Grace, grace, must be cried, not only to the head-stone, but to the foundation-stone, the cornerstone, and indeed to every stone in God's building; from first to last it is nothing of works, but all of grace, and all our crowns must be cast at the feet of free grace. Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us. (2.) As depending upon free grace, and desiring the continuance of it, for what is yet to be done. Grace, grace, is the language of prayer as well as of praise; now that this building is finished, all happiness attend it! Peace be within its walls, and in order to the grace. Let the beauty of the Lord, our God be upon it! Note, What comes from the grace of God, may, in faith, and upon good grounds, be committed to the grace of God, for God will not forsake the work of his own hands.

Vol. IV. 7 B

4. This shall be a full ratification of the prophecies which went before concerning the Jews' return, and their settlement again. When the temple is finished, then thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts is with thee. Note, 1. When the accomplishment of scripture-prophecies is a convincing proof of their divine original. Thus God confirms the word of his servant, by saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built, Is. xliv. 26. No word of God shall fall to the ground, nor shall there fail one iota or tittle of it; Zechariah's prophecies of the approaching day of deliverance to the church, would soon appear, be a convincing accomplishment of them, to be of God.

5. This shall effectually silence those that looked with contempt upon the beginning of this work, v. 10. Who, where, is he now that despised the day of small things, and thought his work would never come to any thing? The Jews themselves despised the foundation of the second temple, because it was likely to be so far inferior to the first, Ezra iii. 12. Their enemies despised the wall, when it was in the building, Neh. ii. 19.—iv. 2, 3. But let them not do it. Note, In God's work, the day of small things is not to be despised. Though the instruments be weak and unlikely, God often chooses such, by them to bring about great things. As a great mountain becomes a plain before him, when he pleases, so a little stone, cut out of a mountain without hands, comes to fill the earth, Dan. ii. 35. Though the beginnings be small, God enables the lesser to grace to bring the greatest. A small grain of mustard-seed may become a great tree. Let not the dawning light be despised, for it will shine more and more to the perfect day. The day of small things is the day of precious things, and will be the day of great things.

6. This shall abundantly satisfy all the hearty well-wishers to God's interest, who will be glad to have the work advanced, and may be often happy in small things. They that despised the finishing of the work, shall rejoice, when they see the florinmet in the hand of Zerubbabel, when they see him busy among the builders, giving orders and directions what to do, and taking care that the work be done with great exactness, that it may be both fine and firm. Note, It is matter of great rejoicing to see builders in earnest, and men engaged active for the edifying of the house of God, to see the florinmet in the hand of those who have power to do much, if they have but a heart according to it; we see not Zerubbabel with the trowel in his hand, (that is left to the workmen, the ministers,) but we see him with the florinmet in his hand, and it is no disarrayment, but an honour, to him. Magistrates are to inspect ministers' work, and to speak comfortably to the Levites that do their duty:

7. This shall highly magnify the wisdom and care of God's providence, which is always employed for the good of his church. Zerubbabel does his part, does as much as man can do to forward the work, but it is with those seven, those seven eyes of the Lord, which we read of, ch. iii. 9. He could do nothing, if the watchful, powerful, gracious providence of God did not go before him, and go along with him in it. Except the Lord had built this house, Zerubbabel and the rest had laboured in vain, Ps. cxxvii. 1. These eyes of the Lord are they that run to and fro through the whole earth, that take cognizance of all the creatures and all their actions, (2 Chron. xvi. 9,) and inspire and direct all, according to the divine counsels. Note, We must not think that God is so taken up with the affairs of his church as to prevent the work that it is a comfort to us, that the same all-wise, almighty Providence that governs the nations of the earth, is in a particular manner conversant about the church. Those seven eyes that run through the earth, are all upon the stone that Zerubbabel is laying straight with his florinmet, to see that it be well laid. And those that have the plummet in their hand, must look up to these eyes of the Lord, must have a constant regard to Divine Providence, and act in dependence upon its guidance, in submission to its dispositions.

11. Then answered I, and said unto him, What are these two olive-trees upon the right side of the candlestick, and upon the left side thereof? 12. And I answered again, and said unto him, What be these two olive-branches, which, through the two golden pipes, empty the golden oil out of themselves? 13. And he answered me and said, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my lord. 14. Then said he, These are the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth.

Enough is said to Zechariah, to encourage him, and to enable him to encourage others, with reference to the good work of building the temple which they were now about, and that was the principal intention of the vision he saw; but still he is inquisitive about the particulars, which we will ascribe, not to any vain curiosity, but to the value he had for them; he desires to know what these two olive-trees? (v. 11.) these two olive-branches, v. 12. Observe here, (1.) He asked. Note, Those that would be acquainted with the things of God, must be inquisitive concerning those things. Ask, and you shall be told. (2.) He asked twice; his first question having no reply given to it. Note, If satisfactory answers be not given to our inquiries and requests quickly, we must renew them again and again, until we are satisfied, and the matter be clear in our minds, and important in them, and the vision shall at length speak, and not lie. (3.) His second query varied somewhat from the former. He first asked, What are these two olive-trees; but afterward, What are these two olive-branches? Those boughs of the tree, that hung over the bowl, and distilled oil into it. When we inquire concerning the grace of God, it must be rather as it is communicated to us by the fruitful boughs of the word and ordinances, for that is one of the things revealed, which belong to us and to our children, than as it is resident in the good Olive where all our springs are, for that is one of the secret things, which belong not to us. (4) In his inquiry, he mentions the observations he had made upon the vision; he took notice not only of what was obvious at first sight, that the two olive-trees grew, one on the right side, and the other on the left side, of the candlestick, (so nigh, so ready, is divine observation,) but he went further, upon a more narrow inspection, that the two olive-branches from which in particular the candlestick did receive of the root and fatness of the olive, (as the apostle says of the church, Rom. xi. 17,) did empty the golden oil, the clear bright oil, the best in its kind, and of great value, as if it were aurum potebit-liquid gold, oil, as of themselves through the two golden fishes. Or, as the margin reads it, which by the hand of the two golden fishes empty out of themselves oil into the gold, into the golden bowl on the head of the candlestick. Our Lord Jesus emptied himself, to fill us; his precious blood is the golden oil in which we are supplied with all we need. So what a valuable answer was given to his inquiry. Now again the angel obliged him expressly to own his ignorance, before he informed him; (v. 13.) 'Knowest thou not what these be? If thou knowest the church to be the candlestick, canst thou think the olive-trees, that supply it with oil, to be any other than the grace of God?' But he owned he either did not fully understand it, or was afraid he did not rightly understand it. (v. 14.) 'May the Lord, in whom I have put my trust, direct some one to guide me?' And then he told him, (v. 14.) 'These are the two sons of oil, (so it is in the original,) the two anointed ones, (so we read it,) rather, the two oily ones. That which we read (Isa. v. 1) a very fruitful hill, is, in the original, the horn of the son of oil, a fat and fattening soil. (1.) If by the candlestick we understand the visible church, particularly that of the Jews at that time, for whose comfort it was primarily intended, these sons of oil, that stand before the Lord of the whole earth, are the two great ordinances and offices of the magistracy and ministry, at that time lodged in the hands of those two great and good men, Zerubbabel and Joshua. Kings and priests were anointed; this prince, this priest, were oily ones, endowed with the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, fit and ready for the work to which they were called. They stood before the Lord of the whole earth, to minister to him, and to receive direction from him; and a great influence they had upon the affairs of the church at that time; their wisdom, courage, and zeal were continually emptying themselves into the golden bowl, to keep the lamps burning; and when they are gone, others shall be raised up to carry on the same work; Israel shall no longer be without prince and priest. Good magistrates and good ministers, that are themselves anointed with the grace of God, and stand by the Lord of the whole earth, as faithful adherents to his cause, contribute very much to the maintaining and advancing of religion, and the shining forth of the word of life. (2.) If by the candlestick, others shall be raised up to carry on the first-born, of true believers, these sons of oil may be meant of Christ and the Spirit, the Redeemer and the Comforter. Christ is not only the Messiah, the Anointed One himself, but he is the Good Olive to his church; and from his fulness we receive, John i. 16. And the Holy Spirit is the Unction or Anointing which we have received, 1 John ii. 20, 27. From the root and fatness of the Olive-Tree, by the Spirit, the Olive-Branch, all the golden oil of grace is communicated to believers, which keeps their lamps burning, and without a constant supply of which they would soon go out. They stand by the Lord of the whole earth, who is in a special manner the church's Lord; for the Son was to be sent by the Father, and so was the Holy Ghost, in the time appointed, and they stand by him ready to go.

CHAP. V.

Hilberto, we have seen visions of peace only, and all the words we have been able to translate were admirable and comfortable words. But the pillar of cloud and fire has a black and dark side toward the Egyptians, as well as a bright and pleasant side toward Israel; so have Zechariah's visions; for God's prophets are not only his and passers, to treat of peace with the sons of peace, but heralds, to proclaim war against those that delight in war, and persist in their rebellion. In this chapter, we have two visions, both of which the wrath of God is extended from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. God will do great and kind things for his, which the faithful sons of Zion shall rejoice in; but let the sinners of Zion be afraid; for, I. God will get severely with those particular persons among them that were wicked and profane, and that hated to be reformed in these times of reformation; while God is showing kindness to the body of the nation, and loading them with his blessings; they and their families shall, notwithstanding that, lie under the curse, which the prophet sees in a flying roll, v. 1-4. II. If the body of the nation be laborer, conqueror, and wickedness prevail among them, it shall be carried off and hurried away with a swift destruction, under the pressing weight of divine wrath, represented by a talent of lead, upon the mouth of an empti, carried upon the wing I know not where, v. 5-11.

1. THEN I turned, and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and beheld, a flying roll. 2. And he said unto me, What seest thou? And I answered, I see a flying roll; the length thereof is twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof ten cubits. 3. Then said he unto me, This is the curse that goeth forth over the face of the whole earth: for every one that stealeth shall be cut off as on this side, according to it; and every one that swareth shall be cut off as on that side, according to it. 4. I will bring it forth, saith the Lord of hosts, and it shall enter into the house of the thief, and into the house of him that sweareth falsely by my name: and it shall remain in the midst of his house, and shall consume it, with the timber thereof, and the stones thereof.

We do not find that the prophet now needed to be awakened, as he did, ch. iv. 1. Being awakened, then, he kept wakeful after; nay, now he needs not only much as called to look about him, for on his own accord he turns, and lifteth up his eyes. This good men sometimes get by their infirmities, they make them the more careful and circumspect afterwards. Now observe, 1. What it was that the prophet saw; he looked up into the air, and behold, a flying roll; a vast large scroll of parchment which had been rolled up, and is therefore called a roll, we know nothing of, and expanded; this roll was flying upon the wings of the wind, carried swiftly through the air in open view, as an eagle that shoots down upon her prey; it is a roll like Ezekiel's, that was written within and without, with lamentations, and mourning, and too, Ezek. ii. 9, 10. As the command of the Lord is in writing, for certainty and perpetuity, so is the curse of this roll, it writeth bitter things against the sinner; "What I have written, I have written, and what is written remains." The angel, to engage the prophet's attention, and to raise him in a desire to have it explained, asks him what he seest?
And he gives him this account of it, I see a flying roll, and as near as he can guess by his eye, it is twenty cubits long, that is, ten yards, and ten cubits broad, that is, five yards. The scriptures of the Old Testament and the New are rolls, in which God has written to us the great things of his law and gospel. Christ is himself, and all the preachers of the New Testament, the flying rolls, have much in them; they are flying rolls, the angel that had the everlasting gospel to preach, flew in the midst of heaven, Rev. xiv. 6. God's word runs very swiftly, Ps. cxliv. 15. Those that would be led into the meaning of these rolls, must, first tell what they see, must go as far as they can themselves; What is written in the law, how readest thou this? and thou shalt be made to understand what thou readest.

II. How it was expounded to him, vs. 3, 4. This flying roll is a curse; it contains a declaration of the righteous wrath of God against those sinners especially who by swearing affront God's majesty, or by stealing invade their neighbour's property. Let every Israelite rejoice in the blessings of his country with trembling; for if he swear, if he steal, if he live in an evil way, and shall see with his eyes, but shall not have the comfort of them, for against him the curse is gone forth. If I be wicked, wo to me for all this. Now observe here,

1. The extent of this curse; the prophet sees it flying; but which way does it steer its course? It goes forth over the face of the whole earth; not only of the land of Israel, but the whole world; for those that are in it will be judged. To hurt any of this land, and to consume the curse only, shall by that law be judged, though they have not the book of the law. Note, All mankind are liable to the judgment of God; and, wherever sinners are, any where upon the face of the whole earth, the curse of God can and will find them out, and seize them. O that we could with an eye of faith see the flying rolls of God's curse hanging over the guilty world as a thick cloud, not only concealing, but rolling off the sun-beams of God's favour from them, but big with thunders, lightnings, and storms, ready to destroy them! How welcome then would the tidings of a Saviour be, who came to redeem us from the curse of the law, by being himself made a curse for us, and, like the prophet, eating this roll! The vast length and breadth of this roll intimate us, that a multitude of curses sinners lie exposed to; God will make their plagues wonderful, if they turn not.

2. The criminals against whom particularly this curse is levelled. The world is full of sin in great variety, so was the Jewish church at this time; but two sorts of sinners are here specified as the objects of this curse. (1.) Thieves; it is for every one that steals, that by fraud or force takes that which is not his own, especially that robs God, and converts to his own use what was devoted to God and his honour, which was a sin much complained of among the Jews at this time. Mal. iii. 8. Neh. xiii. 10. Sacrilege is, without doer, the worst kind of thiev ery. He also that robs his father or mother, and saith, It is no transgression, (Prov. xxviii. 24.) let him know that against him this curse is, which is not for his own, but for every one that steals. The letter of the eighth commandment has no penalty annexed to it; but the curse here is a sanction to that command. (2.) Swearers. Sinners of the former class offend against the second table, these against the first; for the curse meets those that break either table. He that swears rashly and profanely, shall be shown to be guilty, much less he that swears falsely, (v. 4.) but he that purports to swear by the name of God, and proceeds upon himself by his perjury, and so shall his doom be; God will say Amen to his imprecation, and turn it upon his own head. He has appealed to God's judgment, which is always according to truth, for the confirming of a he, and to that judgment he shall go, which he has so impiously affronted.

3. The enforcing of this curse, and the equity of it; I will bring it forth, saith the Lord of hosts, v. 4. He that pronounces the sentence, will take care to see it executed. His bringing it forth denotes,

(1.) His giving it command to be brought forth, that is, no sooner is it brought forward, so is or was the curse against all sinners, from the land of the living. The curse of God is a cutting thing, a killing thing. He shall be cut off as on this side, cut off from this place, from Jerusalem, and so he that steals from this side; (it is the same word;) from this place; God will not spare the sinners he finds among his own people; nor shall the holy city be a protection to the ungodly; or, they shall be cut off from hence, from the face of the whole earth over which the curse flies. Or, He that steals shall be cut off on this side, and he that swears on that side; they shall all be cut off, one as well as another, and both according to the curse; for the judgments of God's hand are exactly agreeable with the judgments of his mouth. (2.) Upon his family; It shall enter into the house of the thief, and him that swears. God's curse comes with a warrant, a commission; and shall not be removed out by bars or locks. There where the sinner is more secure, and thinks himself out of danger, there where he promises himself refreshment by food or sleep, there, in his own house, shall the curse of God seize him; nay, it shall fall not upon him only, but upon all about him for his sake. Cursed shall he be his basket and his store, and cursed the fruit of his body. Deut. xxvii. 17, 18. The curse of the Lord is in the house of the wicked, Prov. iii. 33. It shall not only beset his house, or lie at the door, but shall remain in the midst of his house, and diffuse its malignant influences to all parts of it; it shall dwell in his tabernacle because it is none of his, Job xvii. 15. It shall dwell where he dwells, and be his constant companion at bed and board, to make him most uncomfortable. Having got possession, it shall keep it, and unless he repent and reform, there is no way to throw it out, or cut off the entail of it. Nay, it shall so remain in it as to consume it with the timber thereof, and the stones thereof, which, though ever so strong, though the timber be heart of oak, and the stones hewn out of the rocks of adamant, yet they shall not be able to stand before the curse of God. We have heard the stone and the timber complaining of the owner's extortion and oppression, and grumbling under the burthen of it, Hab. ii. 11. Now here we have them delivered from that bondage of corruption. While they were in their strength and beauty, they supported, sordely against their will, the sinner's pride and security; but, when they are consumed, their ruins will, to the satisfaction of being stoning punishments of God's justice, and lasting witnesses of the sinner's injustice. Note, Sin is the ruin of houses and families; especially the sins of injury and perjury. Who knows the power of God's anger, and the operations of his curse? Even timber and stones have been consumed by them; let us therefore stand in awe, and not sin.

5. Then the angel that talked with me went forth, and said unto me, Lift up now thine eyes, and see. That is this that goeth forth. 6. And I said, What is it? And he said, This is an ephah that goeth forth. He said moreover, This is their resemblance through all the earth. 7. And, behold, there was lifted up a talent of lead: and this is a woman that sitteth in the midst of the ephah. 8. And he said, this is wickedness. And he cast it into the midst of the ephah, and he cast the weight of lead upon the mouth thereof. 9. Then lifted I up mine eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came out two women, and the wind was in their wings; (for they had wings like the wings of a stork;) and they lifted up the ephah between the earth and the heaven. 10. Then said I to the angel that talked with me, Whither do these bear the ephah? 11. And he said unto me, To build it a house in the land of Shinar; and it shall be established, and set there upon her own base. The foregoing vision was very plain and easy, but in this are things dark, and hard to be understood; and some think that the scope of it is to foretell the final destruction of the Jewish church and nation, and the dispersion of the Jews, when, by crucifying Christ and persecuting his gospel, they should have filled up the measure of their iniquities; therefore it is industriously set out in obscure figures and expressions, lest the plain denunciation of the second overthrow of temple and state, might discourage them too much from going forward in the present restoration of both.” So Mr. Pembile. The prophet was contemplating the power and terror of the ephah. He compares than the dammings of his sight, could not well tell what it was, but asked, What is it? v. 6. And the angel tells him both what it is, and what it means.

1. He sees an ephah; a measure wherewith they measured corn; it contained ten omers, (Exod. xvi. 36,) and was the tenth part of a homer; (Ezek. xiv. 11,) it is put for any measure used in commerce, Deut. xxv. 14. And this is their resemblance, the resemblance of the Jewish nation, over all the earth, wherever they are now dispersed, or, at least, it will be so when their ruin draws near. They are filling up the measure of their iniquity, which God has set them; and when it is full as the ephah of corn, they shall be delivered into the hands of those to whom God had sold them for their sins; they are meted to destruction, as an ephah of corn measured to the market, or to the mill. And some think that the mentioning of an ephah, which is used in buying and selling, intimates that fraud and deceit, and extortion in commerce, was a sin abounding much among them, that people are known to be notoriously guilty of it at this day. This is a proper representation of them through all the earth. There is a measure set them, and they are filling it up. See Matt. xxvii. 32. 1 Thess. ii. 16.

2. He sees a woman sitting in the midst of the ephah; representing the sinful church and nation of the Jews in their latter and degenerate age, when the faithful city became a harlot. He that weighs the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance, measures nations and churches as in an ephah; so exact is he in his judicial dealings with them. God’s people are called, The corn of his floor, Isa. xxi. 10. And here he puts this corn into the bushel, in order to his parting with it. The angel says of the woman in the ephah, This is wickedness, it is a wicked nation, else God would not have rejected it; it is an incalculable wickedness, it is abominably wicked. How is the gold become dim! Israel was holiness to the Lord; (Jer. ii. 3.) but now this is wickedness; and wickedness is no where so scandalous, so odious, and, in many instances, so outrageous, as when it is found among professors of religion.

3. He sees the woman thrust down into the ephah, as a talent, or large weight of lead, cast upon the mouth of it, by which she is secured, and made a close prisoner in the ephah, and utterly disabled to get out of it. This is designed to show that the wrath of God against impenitent sinners is, (1.) Unavoidable, and what they cannot escape; they are bound over to it, concluded under sin, and shut up under the curse, as this woman in the ephah; he would fain fly from it, and put his hand, (Job xxvii. 22,) but he cannot. (2.) It is insupportable, and what they cannot bear up under. Guilt is upon the sinner as a talent of lead, to sink him to the lowest hell. When Christ said of the things of Jerusalem’s peace, Now they are hid from thine eyes, that threw a talent of lead upon them. He was with the woman thus pressed to death in it, carried away into some far country. (1.) The instruments employed to do it were, two women, who had wings like those of a stork, large and strong, and, to make them fly the more swiftly, they had the wind in their wings, denoting the great violence and expedition with which the Romans destroyed the Jewish nation. God has not winged messengers of the heavens, but he employs the wings to those also whom he employs in his lower world; and when he does so, he forwards them with the wind in their wings; his providence carries them on with a favourable gale. (2.) They bore it up in the air; denoting the terrors which pursued the wicked Jews, and their being a public example of God’s vengeance to the world. They performed it after the method of the heathens, who were unworthy of either, and abandoned by both; for the Jews, when this was fulfilled, pleased not God, and were contrary to all men, 1 Thess. i. 12. This is wickedness, and this comes of it; heaven thrust out wicked angels, and earth spewed out wicked Canaanites. (3.) When the prophet inquired whether they carried their prisoner whom they had now in captivity, (v. 10.) he was told that they desired to build it a house in the land of Shinar. This intimates that the punishment of the Jews should be a final destruction; they should be hurried out of their own country, as the chaff which the wind drives away, and should be forced to dwell in far countries, particularly in the country of Babylon, whither many of the scattered Jews went, after the destruction of their city; but the heathens would also to other countries, especially in the Levant parts; not to sojourn, as in their former captivity, for seventy years, but to be nailed down for perpetuity. There the ephah shall be established, and set upon her own base. Which intimates, [1.] That their calamity shall continue from generation to generation, and that they shall be so dispersed, thus, they shall never unite Romans, as they did they shall settle in a perpetual unsatellite, and Cain’s doom shall be theirs, to dwell in the land of shaking. [2.] That their iniquity shall continue too, and their hearts shall be hardened in it; blindness is happened unto Israel, and they are settled upon the lees of their own unbelief; their wicked ness is established upon its own basis. God has given them a spirit of slumber, (Rom. xi. 8.) lest at time they should convert, and be healed.

CHAP. VI.

The two kingdoms of providence and grace are what we are all very nearly interested in, and therefore are concerned to acquaint ourselves with all our temporal affairs being in a necessary subjection to Divine Provdence, and all our spiritual and eternal concerns in a necessary dependence upon divine grace; and these two are represented to us in this chapter—the former by a vision, the latter by a type. Here is, 1. God, as King of nations, ruling the world by the ministry of angels, in the vision of the four chariots, v. 1. – 8. 2. God, as King of saints, visiting the church by the mediation of Christ, in the figure of Joshua the high priest crowned, the ceremony performed, and then explained concerning

1. And I turned, and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and behold, there came four chariots out from between two mountains; and the mountains were mountains of brass. 2. In the first chariot were red horses, and in the second chariot black horses. 3. And in the third chariot white horses, and in the fourth chariot grisled and bay horses. 4. Then I answered and said unto the angel that talked with me, What are these, my lord? 5. And the angel answered and said unto me, These are the four spirits of the heavens, which go forth from standing before the Lord of all the earth. 6. The black horses which are therein go forth into the north country: and the white go forth after them; and the grisled go forth toward the south country.
7. And the bay went forth, and sought to go, that they might walk to and fro through the earth: and he said, Get ye hence, walk to and fro through the earth. So they walked to and fro through the earth. 8. Then cried he upon me, and spake unto me, saying, Behold, these that go toward the north country have quitted my spirit in the north country. The prophet is forward to receive this vision, and, as if he expected it, he turned, and lifted up his eyes, and looked. Though this was the seventh vision he had had, yet he does not think he has had enough; for the more we know of God and his will, if we know it aright, the more desirous we shall be for to get a further acquaintance with God. Now observe here,

1. The sight that the prophet had of four char-riots drawn by horses of divers colours; together with the explication of the sight, v. 1. – 5. He did not look long, but he discovered that which was worth seeing, and which would serve very much for the elucidating of this vision. These chariots stand in this dark day. We are very much in the dark concerning the meaning of this vision. Some by the four chariots understand the four monarchies; and then they read, (v. 5.) These are the four winds of the heavens, and suppose that therein reference is had to Dan. vii. 2. where Daniel saw, in vision, the four winds of the heavens stirring upon the great sea, representing the four monarchies. The Babyloniian monarchy, they think, is here represented by the red horses, which are not afterward mentioned, because that monarchy was now extinct. The second chariot with the black horses, is the Persian monarchy, which went forth northward against the Babylonians, and quieted God's Spirit in the north country, by executing his judgments on Babylon, and freeing the Jews from their captivity. The white, the Grecians, go forth after them in the north, for they overthrew the Persians. The grisled, the Romans, who conquered the Grecian empire, are wild to go forth; and because Egypt, which lay southward, was the last branch of the Grecian empire that was subdued by the Romans. The byl horses had been with the grisled, but afterward went forth by themselves; and by these they understand the Goths and Vandals, who with their victorious arms walked to and fro through the earth; or the Seleucides and Lagiide, the two branches of the Grecian empire. Thus Grotius and others.

But I incline rather to understand this vision more generally, as designed to represent the administration of the kingdom of providence in the government of this lower world. The angels are often called the chariots of God, as Ps. lxxxviii. 17. – xviii. 10. The various providences of God concerning nations and churches, are represented by the different colours of horses. Rev. vi. 2, 4, 5, 8. And so we may observe here,

1. That the counsels and decrees of God are the spring and original of all events, and they are immoveable, as mountains of brass. The chariots came from between two mountains; for God performs the thing that is appointed for us; his appointments are the originals, and his performances are but copies from them; he does what is according to the counsel of his will. We could as soon grasp the mountains in our arms, as comprehend the divine counsels in our finite understandings; and as soon remove mountains of brass as alter any of God's purposes; for he is in one mind, and who can turn him? Whatever the providences of God are concerning us, as to public or private affairs, we should see them all coming from between the mountains of brass, and therefore see it as much our folly to quarrel with them as it is our duty to acquiesce in them. Who may say to God, What dost thou, or

2. That God executes his decrees in the works of providence, which are as chariots, in which he rides as a Prince in an open chariot, to show his glory to ancient nations; in which he rides to show that he rides forth conquering, and to conquer, and triumphing over all the enemies of his glory and government. God is great and terrible in his doings;
(Ps. lxvi. 3.) and in them we see the goings of our God, our King, Ps. lxviii. 24. His providences move swiftly and strongly as chariots, but all directed and governed by his infinite wisdom and power; or, as he employs them, according to his counsels.

3. That the holy angels are the ministers of God's providence, and are employed by him, as the armies of heaven, for the executing of his counsels among the inhabitants of the earth; they are the chariots, or, which comes all to one, they are the horses that draw the chariots, great in power and might, and who, like the horse that God himself describes, (Job xxx. 9.) is the power of his wrath; and such for chariots;
and terrible, but cannot be terrified, or made afraid, they are chariots of fire, and horses of fire, to carry one prophet to heaven, and guard another on earth.
They are so observant of, and obsequious to, the will of God, as well managed horses are to their rider or driver. Not that God needs them or their services, but he is pleased to make use of them, that he may put honour upon them, and encourage our trust in his providence.

4. That the events of providence have different aspects, and the face of the times often changes. The horses in the first chariot were red, signifying war and bloodshed, blood to the horse-bridles, Rev. xiv. 20. Those in the second chariot were black, signifying the dismal, melancholy consequences of war; it puts all into mourning, lays all waste, introduces famines, multitudes, and desolations, and makes whole lands to languish. Those in the third chariot were white, signifying the return of comfort, and peace, and prosperity, after these dark and dismal times; though God cause grief to the children of men, yet will he have compassion. Those in the fourth chariot were of a mixed colour, grisled and bay; some speckled and spotted, and ash-coloured, signifying events of different complexions interwoven and counterchanged; a day of prosperity, and a day of adversity, set the one over against the other; the cup of providence in the hand of the Lord is full of mixture, Ps. lxxv. 8.

5. That all the instruments of Providence, and all the events of it, come from God, and from him they receive their commissions and instructions; (v. 3.) These are the four spirits of heaven, the four winds, (so some,) which seem to blow as they list, from the various points of the compass; but God has them in his hands, and brings them out of his treasury. Or, rather, These are the angels that go forth from standing before the Lord of all the earth, to attend upon him, and minister to him: to behold his glory in the upper world, that he might reveal his mystery, and set forth his glory in this lower world, which is their business. They stand before him as the Lord of the whole earth, to receive orders from him, and give up their accounts to him concerning their services on this earth, it is for all within his jurisdiction. But, when he appoints, they go forth as messengers of his counsels, and ministers of his justice, and by the secret motions and influences upon the spirits of men, by which the designs of Providence are carried on, some think, are these four spirits of the heavens, which go forth from God, and fulfil what he appoints, who is the God of the spirits of all flesh.

6. That there is an admirable beauty in providence, and one event serves for a balance to another; The white went forth long after they, to show them very dark and melancholy events, such as made every person and every thing look black; but presently the white went forth after them, carrying joy to them that mourned, and by a new turn given to affairs, making them to look pleasant again. Such are God's dealings with his church and people; if the black horses go forth, the white ones presently go after them, for as affliction abounds, consolation much more abounds.

7. That the common, general aspect of providence is mixed and compounded. The grisled and bay horses were both in the fourth chariot; (v. 8.) and though they went forth, at first, toward the south country, yet, afterward, they sought to walk to and fro through the earth, and were directed to do that. The mixture of providence, rejoicing in our comforts as though we rejoiced not, because they have their allays, and weeping for our afflictions as though we wept not, because there is so much mercy mixed with them.

8. That God is well pleased with all the operations of his own providence; (v. 8.) These have quieted my spirit, these black horses which speak extraordinary judgments, and the white ones which speak extraordinary deliverances, both which went toward the north country, while the common mixed providences went all the world over. These have quieted my spirit in the north country, which had of late been the most remarkable, and first, with reference to the church; that is, by these uncommon appearances and actings of providence God's wrath is executed upon the enemies of the church, and his favours are conferred upon the church, both which had long been deferred, and in both God had accomplished his will, accomplished his word, and so quieted his Spirit. The Lord is well pleased for his righteousness' sake: and, as he speaks, Isa. l. 24, made himself easy.

9. And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 10. Take of them of the captivity, even of Hekdai, of Tobijah, and of Jedeliah, which are come from Babylon, and come thou the same day, and go into the house of Josiah the son of Zephaniah; 11. Then take silver and gold, and make crowns, and set them upon the head of Joshua the son of Josedeck, the high priest; 12. And speak unto him, saying, Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, Behold the man, whose name is THE BRANCH; and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord: 13. Even he shall build the temple of the Lord, and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a priest upon his throne: and the counsel of peace shall be between them both. 14. And the crowns shall be to Helem, and to Tobijah, and to Jedeliah, and to Hen the son of Zephaniah, for a memorial in the temple of the Lord. 15. And they that are far off shall come and build in the temple of the Lord; and ye shall know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto you. And this shall come to pass, if ye will diligently obey the voice of the Lord your God.

God did not only at sundry times, but in divers manners, speak in time past by the prophets to his church. In the former part of this chapter, he spake by a vision, which the prophet only saw himself; here, in this latter part, he speaks by a sign, or type, which many saw, and which, as it was explained, was an illustrious prediction of the Messiah, as the Priest and King of his church. Here is,

1. The significant ceremony, which God appointed—and, and the high priest, v. 10, 11. It is observable that there should be two eminent types of Christ in the Old Testament, that were both named Joshua, the same name with Jesus; and by the LXX, and in the New Testament, rendered Jesus, Acts vii. 45. Joshua, the chief captain, a type of Christ, the Captain of our salvation, and Joshua, the chief priest, a type of Christ, the high priest of our profession, and both, in their day, saviours, and leaders into Canaan. And this is peculiar to Joshua the high priest, that here was something done to him by the divine appointment, on purpose that he might be a type of Christ; a priest after the order of Melchizedek, who was both a king and a priest. Joshua was far from being ambitious of a crown, and the people of...
ZECHARIAH, VI.

1. Here were some Jews come from Babylon, that brought an offering to the house of God; some of the captives were not able to set forth the offering that came from Babylon on a visit to Jerusalem: they ought to have bid a final farewell to Babylon, and to have come and settled with their brethren in their own land; and for their remissness and indifference in not doing so, they thought to atone by this visit. Perhaps they came as ambassadors from the body of the Jews that were in Babylon, who lived there in ease and fulness; and hearing that the building of the temple went on slowly for want of money, they sent them with an offering of gold and silver for the service of the house of God. Note, Those that by reason of distance, or otherwise, cannot forward a good work by their persons, must, as they are able, forward it by their purses; if some find hands, let others fill them.

2. Those that have place are appointed for the prophet to meet them. They thought to bring their present to the priest, God's ordinary minister; but God has a prophet, an extraordinary one, ready to receive them and its; which would be an encouragement to them, who, in their captivity, had so often complained. We see not our signs, there is no more any prophet; and would invite them and others to settle in their own land, in which then began to look, as it were, for the people's concurrence, when the Spirit of prophecy was revivified in it. Zechariah was ordered to give them the meeting, the same day they came, (for when they arrived, they would lose no time, but present their offering immediately,) and to bid them welcome, assuring them that God now accepted their gifts. He was to meet them in the house of Josiah, the son of Zechariah, who, probably, was under age, when, as the Spirit of prophecy was revivified, the treasures of it. They brought their gold and silver, to be employed about the temple; but God ordered it to be used in honour of One greater than the temple, Matth. xii. 6.

3. Crowns are to be made, and put upon the head of Josiah, v. 11. It is supposed that there were two crowns provided, one of silver, and the other of gold; the former (as some think) denoting his proper dignity, the latter his kingly dignity; or, rather, he being a priest already, and having a crown of gold, of pure gold, already, to signify his honour and power as a priest, these crowns of silver and gold both signify the royal dignity; the crown of silver being, perhaps, designed to typify the kingdom of the Messiah, when he was here on earth, for then he was there; and when forty-five years after, as it were, crowned with gold his kingdom in his exalted state, the glory of which as far exceeded that of the former as gold does silver. The sun shines as gold, when he goes forth in his strength; and the beams of the moon, when she walks in brightness, we call silver beams. Those that had worshipped the sun and moon; shall now fall down before the golden and silver crowns of the exalted Redeemer, before whom the sun shall be ashamed, and the moon confounded, being both outshone.

II. The signification which God gave of this ceremony. Every one would be ready to ask, "What is the meaning of Josiah's being crowned thus?" And the prophet is as ready to tell them the meaning of it. Upon this speaking sign is granted a prediction, and the sign was used, to make it the more taken notice of; and the better remembered. Now the promise is,

1. That God would in the fulness of time, raise up a Great King, who, much like Josha, Tell Josha that he is but the figure of one that is to come, a faint shadow of him; (v. 12.) Speak unto him in the name of the Lord of hosts, that Man whose name is, The BRANCH, shall grow up out of his place, out of Bethlehem the city of David, the place appointed for his birth; though the family be a root in a dry ground, yet this Branch shall spring out of it as, the waters out of the rock that issued from the seven springs of the desert, springing out of the reeds, in which they lay buried out of sight, and out of mind. He shall grow up for himself, (so some read it,) proiitía virtute—by his own vital energy; shall be exalted in his own strength.

2. That as Josha was an active, useful instrument in building the temple, so the Man, the Branch, shall be the Master-Builder, the sole Builder of the spiritual temple, the gospel-church. He shall build the temple of the Lord; and it is repeated again, (v. 13.) Even he shall build the temple of the Lord: he shall grow up to do good, to be an instrument of God's glory, and a great Blessing to mankind. Note, The church is the temple of the Lord, a spiritual house, (1 Pet. ii. 5.) a holy temple, Eph. ii. 21. In the temple God made disciples, and that without the blood of others, that we might receive the service and homage of his people; so, in the church-gospel, the light of divine revelation shines by the word, and the spiritual sacrifices of prayer and praise are offered. Now Christ is not only the Foundation, but the Founder, of this temple, by his Spirit and grace.

3. That Christ shall bear his glory. Glory is a burden, but more like for him to bear, who uphold all things. The cross was his glory, and he bore that; so was the crown an exceeding weight of glory, and he bears that. The government is upon his shoulders, and in it he bears the glory, Isa. ix. 6. They shall hang upon him all the glory of his Father's house, Is. xxi. 24. It becomes him, and he is far negatio—well able to bear it. The glory of the priesthood and royalty had been divided between but one house of Aarun and that of David; but now he alone shall bear all the glory of both. That which he shall bear, which he shall undertake, shall be the glory of Israel; and they must wait for that, and, in prospect of it, must be content in the want of that external glory which they formerly had. He shall bear such a glory as shall make the glory of this latter house far greater than that of the former. He shall lift up the glory; (so it may be read;) the glory of Israel had been thrown down and depressed, but he shall raise it out of the dust.

4. That he should have a throne, and be both Priest and King upon his throne. A throne denotes both dignity and dominion, an exalted honour, with an extensive power. (1.) This Priest shall be a King, and shall sit in his glory, and in the brightness of his kingdom, and in the glory of the former, Ex. xlv. 17. (2.) He is to sit in the temple of God, with all the services of the temple, and in the midst of the tribe of Judah, to which he belonged, and in the midst of the house of Aarun; Isa. v. 1. He shall sit and rule upon his throne. Christ, as a Priest, ever lives to make intercession for us; but he does it sitting at his Father's right hand, as one having authority, Heb. viii. 1. We have such a High Priest as Israel never had, for he is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, which puts a prevailing weight to all his intercession. (3.) He is to set up his house within the vail, one that sits and rules there. Christ, who is ordained to offer sacrifices for us, is authorized to give law to us. He will not save us unless we be willing that he should govern us. God has prepared him a throne in the heavens; and if we would have any benefit by that, we must prepare him a throne in our hearts, and be willing and glad that he should sit and rule upon that throne; and to him every thought within us must be brought into obedience. (2) This King shall be a Priest: a Priest upon his throne; with the majesty and power of a King, he shall have the tenderness and simplicity of a Priest, who, being taken from among men, is ordained unto the Most High; and can have connexion on the ignorant, Heb. v. 1, 2. In all the acts of his government as a King, he prosecutes the intentions of his grace as a Priest. Let not therefore those that are his, look upon his throne, though a throne of glory and a throne of judgment, with terror and amazement; for as there is a rainbow about the throne, so he is a Priest upon the throne.

7. That accomplishment of this would be a strong confirmation of the truth of God's word; Ye shall know that the Lord of hosts has sent me unto you. That promise, that those that were afar off should come, and assist in building the temple of the Lord, was, as it were, the giving of the sign; by this then might be assayed the Esther. Other promises should be fulfilled in due time; this should be fulfilled now very speedily; it was so, for those that had been their enemies and accusers, in obedience to the king's edict, became their helpers, and did speedily what they were ordered to do for the furtherance of the work, and by that means the work went on. Esth. viii. 14. Now by this surprising assistance which they had from afar off in building the temple, they might know that Zechariah, who told them of it before, was sent of God, and that therefore his word concerning the Man, the Branch, should be fulfilled.

8. That these promises were strong obligations to obedience; "For this shall come to pass—you shall have help in building the temple, if you will diligently obey the voice of the Lord your God. You shall have the help of foreigners in building the temple, if you will but set about it in good earnest yourselves." The assistance of others, instead of being an excuse for our slothfulness, should be a spur to our industry. "You shall have the benefit and comfort of all these promises, if you make conciliations and good offices, that the promises that are upon their good behaviour; and though their God is coming toward them in a way of mercy, they cannot expect him to proceed in it, unless they conform to his laws. Note, That which God requires of us, to qualify us for his favour, is, obedience to his revealed will; and it must be a diligent obedience. We cannot obey the voice of God without a great deal of care and watchfulness, and the obedience be accepted of God unless it be laboured by us.

III. The provision that was made to preserve the remembrance of this. The crowns that were used in this solemnity, were not given to Joshua, but must be kept for a memorial in the temple of the Lord, v. 14. Either they were laid up in the temple-treasury, or, (as the Jew's tradition is,) they were hung upon the doors of the temple, in the view of all, in perpetuam rei memoriam—for a perpetual memorial; for a traditional evidence of the promise of the Messiah, and this typical transaction used for the confirmation of that promise. The crowns were delivered to them who found the materials, (and some think their names were engraved on the crowns,) to be preserved as a public testimony of their pious liberality, and an encouragement to others in like manner to bring presents to the house of God. Note, Various means were used for the support of the faith of the Old Testament saints, who waited for the consolation of Israel, till the time, the set time, for it came.

CHAP. VII.

We have done with the visions, but not with the revelations, of this book; the prophet sees no more such signs as he had seen, but all the Lord of the future is to him. In this chapter, we have, I. A case of conscience proposed to the prophet by the children of the captivity concerning fasting; whether they should continue their solemn fasts which they had religiously observed during the 70 years of their captivity. v. 1. II. The answer to this question; which is given in this and the next chapter, and this answer was given, not all at once, but in parts; and, it must be owned, at several times, for here are four distinct discourses, which have a distinct reference to this case, each of them prefixed with the word of the Lord came, in this chapter, v. 4, 8. and ch. vii. 1, 18. The method of them is very observable. In this chapter, we have commendations of their integrity, and some disapprobations of the mismanagements of their fasts, v. 4, 7. 2. He exerts them to reform their lives, which would be the best way of fasting, and to take heed of those sins which brought those judgments upon them, which they kept these fasts in memory of, v. 8, 14. And then, in the next chapter, having searched the wound, he binds it up, and heals it, with gracious assurances of great mercy. God had yet in store for them, by which he would turn their fasts into feasts.

1. And it came to pass, in the fourth year of king Darius, that the word of the Lord came unto Zechariah in the fourth day of the ninth month, even in Chislev; 2. When they had sent unto the house of God, Sherezer and Regem-melech, and their men, to pray before the Lord. 3. And to speak unto the priests which were in the house of the Lord of hosts, and to the prophets, saying, Should I weep in the fifth month, separating myself, as I have done these so many years? 4. Then came the word of the Lord of hosts unto me, saying, 5. Speak unto all the people of the land, and to the priests, saying, When ye fasted and mourned in the fifth and seventh month, even those seventy years, did ye at all fast unto me, even to me? 6. And when ye did eat, and when ye did drink, did not ye eat for yourselves, and drink for yourselves? 7. Should ye not hear the words which the Lord hath cried by the former prophets, when Jerusalem was inhabited and in prosperity, and the cities thereof round about her, when men inhabited the south and the plain?

This occasional sermon, which the prophet preached, and which is recorded in this and the next chapter, was above two years after the former, in which he gave them an account of his visions, as appears by comparing the date of this, (v. 1,) in the ninth month of the fourth year of Darius, with the date of that, (ch. i. 1,) in the eighth month of the second year of Darius; not that Zechariah was told all that while, (it is expressly said that he and Haggai continued prophesying till the temple was finished in the sixth year of Darius, Ezra vi. 14, 15,) but during that time he did not preach any sermon that was afterward published, and left upon record, as this is. God may be honoured, his work done, and his interests served, by word of mouth as well as by writing; and by inculcating and pressing what has been taught, as well as by advancing something new. 1. A case proposed concerning fasting. Some persons were sent to inquire of the priests and prophets, whether they should continue to observe their yearly fasts, particularly that in the fifth month, as they had done. It is uncertain whether the case was put by those that yet remained in Babylon, who, being deprived of the benefit of the solemn feasts which God's people had appointed them, made up the want by the solemn fasts which God's providences called them to; or by those that were returned, but lived in the country, as some rather incline to think, because they are called the people of the land, v. 5. But as to that, the answer given to the messengers of the captive Jews, might be directed, not to them only, but to all the people. Observe,—

1. Who they were, that came with this inquiry—Sherezer and Regem-melech; persons of some rank and figure; for they came with their men, and did not think it below them, or any disparagement to them, to be sent on this errand, but rather an addition to their honour, to be, (1.) Attendants in God's house, there to do duty, and receive orders. The greatest of men are less than the least of the ordinances of Jesus Christ. (2.) Agents for God's people, to negotiate their affairs. Men of estates, living among the Gentiles, were more than the times and place of business, thought it meet to employ their time in the service of the Lord. 2. What the errand was, upon which they came. They were sent, perhaps, not with gold and silver, (as those, ch. vi. 10, 11,) or if they were, that is not related; but upon the two great commands, which should bring us all to the house of God, (1.) To intercede with God for his mercy. They were sent to pray before the Lord, and, some think, (according to the usage then,) to offer sacrifice, with which they offered up their prayers. The Jews, in captivity, prayed toward the temple; (as appears, Dan. vi. 10,) but now that it was in a fair way to be restored, they sent their representatives to pray in it, remembering what God had done. His house should be called a house of prayer for all people, Isa. lxi. 7. In prayer, we must set ourselves as before the Lord, must see his eye upon us, and have our eye up to him. (2.) To inquire of God concerning his mind. Note, When we offer up our requests to God, it must be with a readiness to receive his answers from him; for if we turn away our ear from hearing his law, we cannot expect that our prayers should be acceptable to him. We must therefore desire to dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of our life, that we may inquire there, (Ps. xxvi. 4,) asking, not only, Lord, what wilt thou do for me? but, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?

3. Whom they consulted. They spake to the priests that were in the house of the Lord, and to the prophets; the former were an oracle for ordinary cases, the latter for extraordinary; they were blessed with both, and would try if either could acquaint them with the mind of God in this case. Note, God having given diversities of gifts to men, and all to profit with, we should make use of all as there is occasion. They were not so wedded to the priests, their stated ministers, as to distrust the prophets, who appeared, by the gifts given them, well qualified to serve the church; nor yet were they so much enamoured with the prophets as to despise the priests, but they spake both to the priests and to the prophets, and, in consulting both, gave glory to the God of Israel, and that one Spirit who works all in all. God might speak to them either by Urim, or by prophets, (1 Sam. xxviii. 6,) and therefore they would not neglect either. The prophets were not jealous one of another, nor had any difference among themselves; let not the people then make differences between them, but thank God they had both. The prophets did indeed reprove what was amiss in the priests, but at the same time told the people that the priests' lips should keep knowledge, and they must inquire the law at his mouth. They were ministers of God's word, Isa. viii. 20. Observe, (1.) What the prophetsplicestpractice, not only during the seventy years of the captivity, but to this time, which was twenty years after the liberty proclaimed them; they kept up so lemm, stated fasts for humiliation and prayer, which they religiously observed, according as their opportunities were, in their closets, families, or such assemblies for worship as they had. In the case here, they mentioned only one, that of the fifth month; but it appears by ch. viii. 19. that they observed four anniversaries fasts. One in the fourth month, (June 17.) in remembrance of the breaking up of the bride-chamber; (Jer. lii. 6.) another in the fifth month, (July 4.) in remembrance of the burning of the temple; (Jer. lii. 13.) another in the seventh month, (September 5.) in remembrance of the killing of Gedaliah, which completed their dispersion; and another in the tenth month, (December 18.) in remembrance of the beginning of the siege of Jerusalem by the Kings of Babylon, and the first tokens of the prevalent commemboration in them to keep those fasts, thus to humble themselves under those humbling providences, by which God called them to weeping and mourning; thus to accommodate themselves to their troubles and prepare themselves for deliverance. It would likewise be a means of possessing their children betimes with a due sense of the hand of the Lord gone out against them in the way that was then very commemborably in them to keep those fasts, thus to humble themselves under those humbling providences, by which God called them to weeping and mourning; thus to accommodate themselves to their troubles and prepare themselves for deliverance. it refers to their common meals; they did no more design the honour of God in their fasting and praying than they did in their eating and drinking; but self was still the centre in which the lines of all their actions, natural, civil, and religions, met.
They needed not be in such care about the continuance of their fasts, unless they had kept them better.
Note, We miss our end in eating and drinking, when we eat our ease as we wish to do, and for ourselves; therefore they should eat and drink to the glory of God, (1 Cor. x. 31.) that our bodies may be fit to serve our souls in his service.

2. The principal good thing they should have done was left undone; (v. 7.) "Should you not hear the words which the Lord has cried by the for-er prophets? Yes, that you should have done on your fast-days; it was not enough to weep and rejoice, yourselves, on your fast-days, in token of your sorrow for the judgments you were under, but you should have searched the scriptures of the prophets, that you might have seen what was the ground of God's controversy with your fathers, and might have taken warning by their miseries not to tread in the steps of their iniquities. You ask, Shall we do as we have done, in fasting? No, you must do that which you have not yet done, you must work; and prepare your sins, and reform your lives, that it is that we now call you to, and it is the same that the former prophets called your fathers to." To affect them the more with the mischief that sin had done them, that they might be brought to repent of it, he puts them in mind of the former flourishing estate of their country; Jerusalem was then inhabited, and in prosperity, that is now desolate and in distress;
the cities round about, that are now in ruins, were then inhabited too and in peace; the country likewise was very populous. Men inhabited the south of the plain, which was not at all fortified, and yet they lived safely, and which was fruitful, and so they lived plentifully; but then God by the prophetts cried to them, as one in earnest, and importunate with them, to amend their ways and dealings, or else their prosperity would soon be at an end. "Now," says the prophet, "you should have taken notice of that, and have inferred that what was required of them for the preventing of the judgments, and which they did not, is required of you for the removal of the judgments; and if you do it not, all your fasting and weeping signify nothing." Note, The words of the latter prophets agree in their
the first: that is, whether people are in prosperity or adversity, they must be called upon to leave their sins, and do their duty; this must still be the burden of every song.

8. And the word of the Lord came unto Zechariah, saying, 9. Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, Execute true judgment, and shew mercy and compassions every man to his brother: 10. And oppress not the widow, nor the fatherless, the stranger, nor the poor; and let none of you imagine evil against his brother in your heart.
11. But they refused to hearken, and pulled away their shoulder, and stopped their ears, that they should not hear. 12. Yea, they made their heart as an adamant-stone, lest they should hear the law, and the words which the Lord of hosts hath sent in his Spirit by the former prophets: therefore came a great wrath from the Lord of hosts.
13. Therefore it is come to pass, that, as he cried, and they would not hear; so they cried, and I would not hear, saith the Lord of hosts. 14. But I scattered them with a whirlwind among all the nations whom they knew not: thus the land was desolate after them, that no man passed through nor returned
for them to the pleasant land desolate.

What was said, v. 7. that they should have heard the words of the former prophets, is here enlarged upon, for warning to these hypercritical inquirers, who continued their sins, when they very precisely asked, whether they should continue their fasts.
This prophet had before put them in mind of their fathers' disobedience to the calls of the former prophets, and the same of it; (ch. i. 4.-6.) and now here again, for others harms should be our warnings.
God's judgments upon Israel of old for their sins were written, for admonition to us Christians; (1 Cor.
10. 11.) and the same use we should make of the like providences in our own day.

1. This prophet here repeats the heads of the sermons which the former prophets preached to their fathers; (v. 10.) and then the very same things were required of them now. Thus does the Lord of hosts speak to you now, and thus he spoke to your fathers, saying, Execute true judgment. The duties here required of them, which would have been the lengthening of the tranquillity of their fathers, and must be the restoring of their tranquillity, are, not keeping fasts and offering sac-ristic sacrifices, but doing justly and loving mercy; duties which they were bound to by the light and law of nature, though there had been no prophets sent to insist upon them; duties which had a direct tendency to the public welfare and peace, and which they themselves would be the gainers by, and not God.
1. (1.) Magistrates must administer justice impartially, according to the maxims of the law, and the merits of the cause, without respect of persons; "Judge judgment of truth, and execute it when you have judged it." (2.) Neighbours must have a tender concern for one another, and must not only do one another no wrong, but be ready to do one another all the good offices that lie in their power. They must shew mercy and compassion, every man to his brother, as the case called for it. The infirmities of men, and their wrongs, must be met with, and ought to be removed with compassion. Hanc veniam ped simul das amicus. Hanc veniam ped simul damaspex victimas—This kindness we ask and exercise. (3.) They must not bear hard upon those whom they have advantage against, and who, know, are not able to help themselves. They must not, either in commerce, or in course of law, oppres
the widow, the fatherless, the stranger, and the poor, with the knowledge of our power; and oppose what we ought to do. 4. (4.) They must not only not do wrong to any, but they must not so much as desire it, or think of it;
"Let none of you imagine evil against his brother in your heart. Do not project it, do not wish it, but not do so much as plesse yourself with the fanc of it." The law of God lays a restraint upon the heart, and forbids the spirit of malice, and the hungry, reproaching, prayer-making man, with the memory of his mischiefs, sinful, ill-natured thought; (Deut. xv. 9.) Beware that there be not o thought in thy heart against thy brother.
2. He describes the wilfulness and disobedience of their fathers, who persisted in all manner of wickedness and injustice, notwithstanding these exhortations and admonitions frequently given them in God's name; various expressions to this purport are here heaped up, (v. 11, 12.) setting forth the stubbornness of that carnal mind which is enmity against God, and is not in subjection to the law of God, neither indeed can be. They were obstinate and refractory, and persisted in their transgressions of the law, purely from a spirit of contradiction to the law. (I.) They would not, if they could help it, come within hearing of the prophets, but kept at a distance; or, if they could mind what he said to them, they resolved they would not heed it; they refused to hearken, and looked another way as if they had not been spoken to. (II.) If they did hear what was said to them, and, as it seemed, inclined at first to comply with it, yet they flew off when it came to the setting of, and, like a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke, they hied away the shoulder, and would not submit to the easy yoke and light burden of God's commandments. They gave a withdrawing shoulder; (so the word is;) they seemed to lay their shoulder to the work, but they presently withdrew it again, as those, Jer. xxxiv. 10, 11. They were like a deceitful bow, as that son that said, I go, Sir; but went not. (3.) They filled their own minds with prejudices against the word of God; they were so set upon their own vanity, and so disposed to rely upon that wherewith to fortify themselves against every sermon they heard. They stopped their ears, that they should not hear, as the deaf adder; (Ps. liii. 4.) and none are so deaf as those that will not hear, that make their own ear heavy, as the word is. (4.) They resolved that nothing which was said to them, for the enforcing of these injunctions, might make any impression on the hearts of the people, so that they should not be made to divide their land, as an adamant-stone, as a diamond, the hardest of stones to be wrought upon; or as a flint, which the mason cannot hew into shape as he can other stone out of the quarry. Nothing is so hard, so unmelangeable, so inoffensive, as the heart of a presumptuous sinner; and whose hearts are hard, may thank themselves, they are of their own hardening; and it is just with God to give them over to a reprobate sense, to the hardness and impenitence of their own hearts. These stubborn sinners hardened their hearts on purpose, lest they should hear what God said to them by the written word, by the law of Moses, and by the words of the prophets that preached to them; they had Moses and the prophets, but resolved they would hear neither, nor would they have been persuaded, though one had been sent to them from the dead. The words of the prophets were not regarded by them, though they were words which the Lord of hosts sent and directed to them, though he sent them immediately by his Spirit in the prophets; so that in despising them they affronted God himself, and resisted the Holy Ghost. Note, The reason why men are not good, is, because they will not consider, they will not consider what they are doing; and therefore if thou scoriest, thou alone shall bear it.

3. He shows the fatal consequences of it to their fathers; Therefore came great wrath from the Lord of hosts. God was highly displeased with them, and justly; he required nothing of them but what was reasonable in itself, and beneficial to them; and yet they refused, and in the most insolent manner. What master could bear to be so abused by his own servant? Such an implacable enmity to the gospel as this was to the law and the prophets, was that which brought wrath to the uttermost upon the last generation of the Jewish church, 1 Thess. ii. 16. Great sins against the Lord of hosts, whose authority is incontestable, bring great wrath from the Lord of hosts, whose power is irresistible. And the effect was, (1.) As they had turned a deaf ear to God's word, so God turned a deaf ear to their prayers, v. 13. As he cried to them in their prosperity, to leave their sins, and they would not hear, but persisted in their iniquity, so he cried to them in the day of their trouble, to remove his judgments, and he would not hear, but lengthened out their calamities. Even they that set God at defiance in the height of their pride, when pangs came upon them cried unto him. Lord, in trouble have they visited thee. But God has said it, and will abide by it. He that turns away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be an abomination, Prov. xxvii. 9. — 24, &c. Iniquity, regarded in the heart, will certainly spoil the success of prayer, Ps. lxvi. 18. (2.) As they flew off from their duty and allegiance to God, and were of desultory and unsettled spirits, so God disdained them, and threw them about as chaff before a whirlwind; he scattered them among all the nations whom they knew not, and whom therefore they could not expect to receive any kindness from, v. 14. (3.) As they violated all the laws of their land, so God took away all the glories of it; Their land was desolate after them, and no man passed through or returned. All that country that was the kingdom of the two tribes, after the dispersion of the remaining Jews, upon the slaughter of Gedaliah, was left utterly uninhabited; there was not a man, woman, or child left behind; it was desolated at the end of seventy years' captivity; nay, it should seem, the very roads that lay through the country, were deserted; none passed or repassed; which, as it had an intimation of mercy in it, (though they were cast out of it, yet it was kept empty for their return,) so, for the present, it made the judgment appear much the more dismal; for what a horrid wilderness of desolation was it, which for many years uninhabited! And they might thank themselves; it was they that by their own wickedness laid the pleasant land desolate. It was not so much the Chaldeans that did it, no, they did it themselves; the desolations of a land are owing to the wickedness of its inhabitants, Ps. cvii. 14. This came of their wilful disobedience to the law of God. And the present generation saw how desolate sin had made that pleasant land, and yet would not take warning.

CHAP. VIII.

The work of ministers is, rightly to divide the word of truth, and to give every one his portion. So the prophet is here instructed to do, in the further answer he gives to the case of conscience proposed about continuing the public fasting. His answer in the foregoing chapter, is by way of reproof to those that were disobedient, and would not obey the truth. But here he is ordered to change his argument, and to speak by way of encouragement to the willing and obedient. There are two words here from the Lord of hosts, and they are both good words, and comfortable words. In the first of these messages, (v. 1.) God says, Therefore I will not cause my anger to boil in my bosom, because I have heard thy words. And, that he would reformed, replenished; (v. 2. - 8.) that the country shall be rich, and the affairs of the nation shall be successful their reputation retrieved, and their state in all respects the reverse of what it had been for many years past; (v. 9. - 15.) he then exhorts them to reform what was amiss among them, that they might be ready for these favours designed them, v. 16, 17. In the latter of these messages, v. 18. - 22., the same encouragement is repeated, and GOD will be superceded by the return of mercy, v. 19. And thereupon they should be replenished, enriched, and strengthened by the accession of foreigners to them, v. 20. - 23.

1. AGAIN the word of the Lord of hosts came to me, saying, 2. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, I was jealous for Zion with great jealousy, and I was jealous... for her with great fury. 3. Thus saith the Lord, I am returned unto Zion, and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem; and Jerusalem shall be called, A city of truth; and the mountain of the Lord of hosts, The holy mountain. 4. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, There shall yet old men and old women dwell in the streets of Jerusalem, and every man with his staff in his hand for very age. 5. And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof. 6. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, If it be marvellous in the eyes of the remnant of this people in these days, should it also be marvellous in my eyes? saith the Lord of hosts. 7. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will save my people from the east country, and from the west country; 8. And I will bring them, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem; and they shall be my people, and I will be their God, in truth and in righteousness.

The prophet, in his foregoing discourses, had left his hearers under a high charge of guilt and a deep sense of wrath; he had left them in a melancholy view of the desolations of their pleasant land, which was the effect of their fathers' disobedience: but, because he designed to bring them to repentance, not to drive them to despair, he here sets before them the great things God had in store for them, encouraged them to hope that their case of conscience would shortly determine itself, and that God's providence would as loudly call them to joy and gladness as ever it called them to fasting and mourning.

I. It is here promised that God will appear for Jerusalem, and will espouse and plead her cause. 1. He will be revenged on Zion's enemies; (v. 2.) I vowed for thee, O Zions; and of that which is, "I have of late been heartily concerned for her, and have interests, with great jealousy. The great wrath that was against her, (ch. vii. 12.) now turns against her adversaries. I am now jealous for her with great fury, and can no more bear to have her abused in her afflictions than I could bear to be abused by her provocations." This he had said before, (ch. i. 14, 15.) that they might promise themselves as much from the power of his anger, when it was turned to them, as they had felt from it, when it was against them. The sins of Zion were her worst enemies, and had done her the most mischief; and therefore God, in his jealousy for her honour and comfort, will take away her sins, and then, whatever other enemies injured her, it was at their peril. 2. He will be resident in Zion, (v. 3.) I am returned unto Zion, after I had seemed so long to stand and a distance, and I will again dwell in the midst of Jerusalem as formerly." This secures to them the tokens of his presence in his ordinances, and the instances of his favour in his providences.

II. That there shall be a wonderful reformation in Jerusalem, and religion, in the power of it, shall prevail and flourish there, Jerusalem, that had dealt treacherously both with God and man, shall become so famous for fidelity and honesty, that it shall be called and known by the name of a city of truth, and the inhabitants of it shall be called children that will not lie. The faithful city had become a harlot, (Is. i. 21.) but shall now become a faithful city again; faithful to the God of Israel, and to the worship of him only. This was fulfilled; for the Jews, after the captivity, though there was much amiss among them, were never guilty of idolatry. Jerusalem shall be called the mountain of the Lord of hosts, owning him and owned by him, and therefore the holy place, the city, the temple, the courts, dedicated to God, and not, as it had been, the mount of corruption, 2 Kings xxiii. 13. Note, The city of God ought to be a city of truth, and the mountain of the Lord of hosts a holy mountain. Those that profess religion and relation to God, must study to adorn their profession by all instances of godliness and holiness.

III. That there shall be in Jerusalem a great increase of people, and all the marks and tokens of a profound tranquillity. When it is become a city of truth, and a mountain of holiness, it is then peaceable and prosperous, and every thing in it locks bright and pleasant. 1. You may look with pleasure upon the generation that is going off the stage, and see them fairly quitting it in the ordinary course of nature, and not driven off by war, famine, or pestilence; (v. 4.) In the streets of Jerusalem, that had been filled with the bodies of the slain, or deserted and left desolate, shall now dwell old men, and old women, who have not been cut off by untimely deaths, (either through their own intemperance or God's vengeance,) but have the even thread of their days spun out to full length; they shall feel no discernible change or progression of any kind, but labour along in a full age, as a shock of corn in his season. They shall have every one his staff in his hand, for very age, to support him, as Jacob, who worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff, Heb. xii. 21. Old age needs a support, and should not be ashamed to use it, but should furnish itself with divine graces, which will be the strength of the heart, and a better support than a staff in the hand. Note, The holy city, as it is a crown of glory in the cause of God, so is it to the places where they live. It is a graceful thing to a city, to see abundance of old people in it; it is a sign, not only of the healthfulness of the air, but of the prevalence of virtue, and the suppression and banishment of these many vices which cut off the number of men's months in the midst; it is a sign, not only that the climate is temperate, but that it is temperate and pure for the good of the people, and a pleasure upon the generation that is rising up in their room; (v. 5.) The streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets. This intimates, (1.) That they shall be blessed with a multitude of children; their families shall increase and multiply, and replenish the city, which was an early product of the divine blessing, Gen. i. 28. Happy is the man, happy the nation, whose quiver is full of these arrows! They shall have of both sexes, boys and girls, in whom their families shall afterward be joined, and another generation raised up. (2.) That their children shall be healthful, and strong, and active; their boys and girls shall not lie sick in bed, or sit pluming in the corner, but (which is a pleasant sight to parents) shall be hearty and cheerful, and play in the streets. It is their pleasure playing age, let us not grudge it them, much good may it do them, and no harm; evil days will come time enough, and years of which they will say that they have no pleasure in them; in consideration of which, they are concerned not to spend all their time in play, but to remember their Creator. (3.) That they shall have great plenty, and meat enough for all their months. In time of famine, when other children are the despair of mothers, and beggary is their portion, this city, Lam. ii. 11, 12. If they are playing in the streets, it is a good sign that they want for nothing. (4.) That they shall not be terrified with the alarms of war, but enjoy a perfect security. There shall be no breaking in of invaders, no going out of desert ers, no complaining in the streets; (Ps. cxliv. 14.) for when there is playing in the streets, it is a sign that there is little care or fear there. Time was, when the enemy hunted their steps so close, that they could not go in their streets (Lam. iv. 19); but now they shall play in the streets, and fear no evil. (5.) That they shall have love and peace among themselves. The boys and girls shall not be fighting in the streets, as sometimes in cities, that are divided into factions and parties, the children soon imitate and express the mutual resentments of the parents; but they shall be innocently and lovingly at play together, without jealousy or fretting, doing, day by day, another. (6.) That the sports and diversions used, shall be all harmless and inoffensive; the boys and girls shall have no other play than what they are willing that persons should see in the streets, no play that seeks corners, no playing the fool, or playing the wanton, for it is the mountain of the Lord, the holy mountain, but honest and modest recreations, which they have no reason to be ashamed of. (7.) That childish, youthful sports shall be confined to the age of childhood and youth. It is pleasing to see the boys and girls playing in the streets, but it is ill-favoured to see men and women playing there, who should fill up their time with work and business. It is well enough for children to be sitting in the market-place, answering questions; (Matth. xix. 14.) but this is not so, v. 17.) but this is not so; that men, who are able to work in the yard, should stand all the day idle there, Matth. xx. 3. 4. That the scattered Israelites should be brought together again from all parts whither they were dispersed; (v. 7.) "I will save my people from the east country, and from the west; I will save them from being lost, or losing themselves in Babylon, or Egypt. In any country whither they were driven; they shall neither be detained by the nations among whom they sojourn, nor shall they incorporate with them; but I will save them, will separate them, and will bring them to their own land again; by the prosperity of their land I will invite them back, and at the same time incline them to return; and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem, shall choose to dwell there, because it is the holy city, though upon many other accounts, it was more eligible to dwell in the country; and therefore we find (Neh. xi. 2.) that the people blessed all the men who willingly offered themselves to dwell at Jerusalem. 5. That God would renew his covenant with them, and be faithful to them, and make them so to him; They shall be my people, and I will be their God. That is the foundation and crown of all these promises, and is inclusive of all happiness. They shall obey God's laws, and God will secure and advance all their interests. This contract shall be made, shall be new-made, in truth, and in righteousness. Some think that the former speaks God's part of the covenant; he will be their God in truth, he will make good all his promises of favour to them; the latter, it is thought, speaks man's part of the covenant; they shall be his people in righteousness, they shall be a righteous people, and shall abound in the fruits of righteousness, and shall not, as they have done, deal treacherously and unjustly with their God. See Hos. ii. 19, 20. God will never leave them in a way of mercy, as he has promised them; and they shall never leave or forsake him in a way of duty, as they have promised him. These promises were fulfilled in the flourishing state of the Jewish church, for some ages, betwixt the captivity and Christ's time; they were to have a further and a fuller accomplishment in the gospel-church, that heavenly Jerusalem, which is from above, never, and is the mother of us all; but the fullest accomplishment of all will be in the future state. All these precious promises are here ratified, and the doubts of God's people silenced, with that question, (v. 6.) "If it be marvellous in the eyes of this people, should it be marvellous in mine eyes?" It seem unlikely to you that ever Jerusalem should be thus repaired, should be thus replenished, is it therefore impossible with God?" The remnant of this people, (and God's people in this world are but a remnant,) being few and feeble, thought all this was too good news to be true, especially in these days, these difficult days, these cloudy and dark days. Considering how the times are, it is highly improbable, it is not possible that God should ever come to be so good as the prophet speaks. How can these things be? How can dry bones live? But should it therefore appear so in the eyes of God? Note, We do both God and ourselves a deal of wrong, if we think that, when we are nonplussed, he is so, and that he cannot get over the difficulties which to us seem insuperable. With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible; so far are God's thoughts and ways above ours. 9. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Let your hands be strong, ye that hear in these days these words by the mouth of the prophets, which were in the day that the foundation of the house of the Lord of hosts was laid, that the temple might be built. 10. For before these days there was no hire for man, nor any hire for beast; neither was there any peace to him that went out or came in, because of the affliction: for I set all men every one against his neighbour. 11. But now I will not be unto the residue of this people as in the former days, saith the Lord of hosts. 12. For the seed shall be prosperous; the vine shall give her fruit, and the ground shall give her increase, and the heavens shall give their dew; and I will cause the remnant of this people to possess all these things. 13. And it shall come to pass, that as ye were a curse among the heathen, O house of Judah, and house of Israel; so will I save you, and ye shall be a blessing: fear not, but let your hands be strong. 14. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, As I thought to punish you, when your fathers provoked me to wrath, saith the Lord of hosts, and I repented not; 15. So again have I thought in these days to do well unto Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah: fear ye not. 16. These are the things that ye shall do, Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbour; execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates: 17. And let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbour; and love not false oath: for all these are things that hate, saith the Lord. God, by the prophet, here gives further assurances of the mercy he had in store for Judah and Jerusalem. Here is line upon line for their comfort, as before there was for their conviction. These verses contain strong encouragements, with reference to the difficulties they now laboured under. And we may observe, 1. Who they were, to whom these encourage ments did belong—to those who, in obedience to the call of God by his prophets, applied themselves in good earnest to the building of the temple; (v. 9.)

"Let your hands be strong, that are busy at work for God; you that hear in these days these words by the mouth of the people which the Lord hath sent, and told of disbelieving to them as your fathers were, in the former days, to the words of those prophets that were sent to them; you may take the comfort of the promises, and shall have the benefit of them, who have obeyed the precepts given you in the day that the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid, when you were told that, having begun with it, you must go on; that the temple of the Lord hath been established, and the temple must go on with it, and you have laboured hard at it for some time, in obedience to the heavenly vision: now you are they whose hands must be strengthened, and whose hearts must be comforted, with these precious promises; to you is the word of this consolation sent."

Note, Those, and those only, that are employed for God, may expect to be encouraged by him; those who lay their hands to the plough of duty, shall have them strengthened with the promises of mercy; and those who avoid their fathers' faults, not only cut off the entail of the curse, but have it turned into a blessing.

II. What the discouragements were, which they had litten to labour under, v. 10. These are mentioned as a foil to the blessings God was now about to bestow upon them. The words which follow, are more strange—to the glory of God, and the more sweet—to their comfort. The truth was, the times had long been very bad, and the calamities and difficulties of them were many and great. 1. Trade was dead; there was nothing to be done, and therefore nothing to be got. Before these days of reformation began, there was no hire for man, nor any hire for beasts. The fruits of the earth (though it had lain fallow, and therefore, you might think, should be more fertile) were thin and poor; so that the husbandman had no occasion to hire harvest-people to reap his corn, or teams to carry it home, for he could be scarcely said to have any. Merchants had no goods to import or export, so that they needed not to hire either men or beasts; hence the poor people, who lived by their labour, had no way of getting bread for themselves and their families.

2. Travelling was dangerous, so that all commerce both by sea and land was cut off; nay, none durst stir abroad so much as to visit their friends; for there was no peace to him that went out, or came in, because of the affliction. The Samaritans, and Ammonites, and their other evil neighbours, made inroads upon them in small parties, and seized all they could lay their hands on; the roads were infested with highwaymen, and both city and country with house-breakers, so that neither men's persons nor their goods were safe at home or abroad.

3. There was no such thing as friendship or good neighbourliness among them; I set all men every one against his neighbour. In this there was a great deal of sin, for these wars and fightings came from men's flesh against men's flesh. And God was justly anger of; but there was in it a great deal of misery also, and so God was in it a just Avenger of their disobedience to him; because they were of an evil spirit toward him, a spirit of contradiction to his laws, God sent among them an evil spirit, to make them vexations one to another; those that threw off the love of God, forfeit the comfort of brotherly love. Men's men's anger against them shall be a check on them, to proceed in the good work they are about, and to hope that it shall yet be well with them; "Thus and thus you have been harassed and afflicted, but now God will change his way towards you, v. 11.

Now that you return to your duty, God will comfort you according to the time that he has afflicted you; the ebb and tide shall flow again." 1. God will not proceed in his controversy with them; I will not be to them as in my former days. Note, It is with us well or ill, according as God is to us; for every creature is that to us, which he makes it to be. And if we are evil, he shall do evil to us for ever, not only for necessity, but for ornament and delight. The heavens shall give their dew, without which the earth would not yield her increase; which is a constant intuition to us of the beneficence of the God of heaven to men on earth, and of their dependence upon him. It is said of a sweeping rain, that it leaves no food; (Prov. xxviii. 3.) but here the gentle dew waters the earth, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater. And thus God will cause the remnant of this people to possess all these things. They are but a remnant, a residue, very few, one would think scarcely worth looking after; but now that they are at work for God, he will take care that they shall want nothing which is fit for them. This confirms what the prophet's colleague had said about them, (Hag. ii. 17.) and may well be taken, "From this day will I bless you. Note, God's people that serve him faithfully, have great possessions; "All is yours, for you are Christ's." 3. They shall recover their credit among their neighbours; (v. 13.) Ye were a curse among the heathen. Every one censured and condemned them, spake ill of them, and wished ill to them, upon the account of the great disgrace that they had got by their separating themselves from the unbelievers, and despising the ways of their God and his people. They now were for the first time a form of execution, so that if a man would load his enemy with the heaviest curse, he would say, God make thee like a Jew! "But now, I will save you, and you shall be a blessing. Your restoration shall be as much taken notice of to your honour, as ever your desolation and dispersion were to your reproach; you shall be applauded and admired as more and ever you were vilified and reviled; you shall be courted and caressed as much as ever you were slighted and abandoned." Most men smile or frown upon their neighbours, according as Providence smiles or frowns upon them; but those whom God plainly blesses as his own, shows favour to, and puts honour upon, we ought also to respect and be kind to. The blessed of the Lord are the blessing of the land, and should be so accounted by us. This is here promised to the house both of Israel and Judah; for many of the ten tribes returned out of captivity with the two tribes, and shared with them in those blessings; and, it is probable, beside what came at first, many, very many, flocked to them afterward, when they saw their affairs take this turn. 4. God himself will determine to do them good, v. 14, 15. All their enemies are at a stand at this time; this was a true representation of the case God had toward them, Jer. xxix. 11. Compare these promises with the former threatenings. 1. When they provoked him to anger with their sins, he said that he would punish them, and so he did; it was his declared purpose to bring destroying judgments upon them, and because they repeated not of their rebellions against him, he repeated not of his threatenings against them, but let the sentence of the law take its course. Note. God's punishing of sinners is never a sudden and hasty resolve, but is always the product of thought, and there is a counsel in that part of the will of God. If the sinner turn not, God will not turn. (2. Now that they pleased him with their services, he said that he do them good; and will he not be as true to as promises as he was to his threatenings? No doubt, he will; "So again have I thought to do well to Jerusalem in those days, when you begin to hearken to the voice of God speaking to you by your prophets; and these thoughts also shall be performed." 18.

1. Let them take the comfort which these promises give to them; Fear ye not, v. 15. Let your hands be strong; (v. 9.) and both together, (v. 13.) Fear not, but let your hands be strong; (1.) The difficulties they met with in their work must not drive them from it, or make them go on heavily in it, for the Lord is with them and will lead them. Let this therefore animate them to proceed with vigour and cheerfulness. (2.) The dangers they were exposed to from their enemies must not terrify them; those that have God for them, engaged to do them good, need not fear what man can do against them.

2. Let them do the duty which those promises call for from them, v. 16, 17. The very same duties which the former prophets pressed upon their fathers, from the consideration of the wrath threatened, (ch. vii. 9, 10.) this prophet presses upon them, from the consideration of the mercy promised; "Leave it to God to perform for you what he has promised, in his own way and time, but upon condition that you make conscience of your public duty. These are that you shall do; this is your part of the covenant; the articles which you are to perform, fulfill, and keep, that you may not put a bar in your own door, and stop the current of God's favours." (1.) "You must never tell a lie, but always speak as you think, and as the matter is, to the best of your knowledge. Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbour, both in business and in the church; and without fear, even in that which looks like a lie." This precept the apostles quote, (Eph. iv. 25.) and backs it with this reason, We are members one of another. (2.) Those that are intrenched with the administration of public justice, must see to it, not only that none be wronged by it, but that those who are wronged, be righted by it; Execute the judgments truth and peace in your gates. Let the judges that sit in the gates, in all their judicial proceedings have regard both to truth and to peace; let them take care to do justice, to accommodate differences, and to prevent vexations suits. It must be a judgment of truth in order to peace, and making those friends that were at variance; and a judgment of peace, as far as is consistent with truth, and no further. (3.) No man must bear malice against his neighbour, upon any account; this is the same with what we had, ch. vii. 10. We must not only keep our hands from doing evil, but we must watch over our hearts, that they imagine not any evil against our neighbour, Prov. iii. 29. Injury and mischief must be crushed in the thought, in the embryo. (4.) Great reverence must be had for an oath, and a court of law; the false oath, say, a false oath, may, love no false oath; hate it, dread it, keep at a distance from it. Love not to impose oaths upon others, lest they swear falsely; love not that any should take a false oath for your benefit, and forswear themselves, to do you a kindness." A very good reason is annexed against all these corrupt and wicked practices; thus had I hate, and therefore you must hate them, if you expect to have God your Friend." These things here forbidden are all of them found among the seven things which the Lord hates, Prov. vi. 16.—19. Note, We must forbear sin, not only because God is angry at it, and therefore it is dangerous to us, but because he hates it, and therefore it will becomes us, and is a very ungrateful thing.

18. And the word of the Lord of hosts came unto me, saying, 19. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, The fast of the fourth month, and the fast of the fifth, and the fast of the seventh, and the fast of the tenth, shall be to the house of Judah joy and gladness, and cheerful feasts: therefore love the truth and peace. 20. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, It shall yet come to pass, that there shall come people and the inhabitants of many cities: 21. And the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts; I will go also. 22. Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord. 23. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold, out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you; for we have heard that God is with you.

These verses contain two precious promises, for the further encouragement of those pious Jews that were hearty in building the temple.

1. That a happy period should be put to their fasts, and there should be more occasion for them, but they shall be converted into thanksgiving days, v. 19. This is a direct answer to the inquiry concerning the act of fasting. He answers very wisely that that which was formerly a duty, and is therefore called a fast, or fasts, must be turned into a festival, and must be changed into joyous times; for fasting, even as they are called, is frequently nothing but weeping, and frequently is become a trial, and a difficulty, and a burden. These Fast days, they say, shall be for joy and gladness, and cheerfulness; and hence they must be changed into joyous times; when the people shall not only come to the temple, but shall come to it with joy and gladness, and shall not only come to it with joy and gladness, but shall be taken with joy and gladness; for there shall come people and inhabitants of many cities.

2. They shall be taken with joy and gladness; and this shall be caused by the work of the Lord of hosts. And they shall come to the temple, and to the Lord of hosts, to pray before him, and to seek him. The Lord of hosts, as well as the temple, was the atarfall of the Jews, and therefore they shall come to the temple, and to the Lord of hosts, to seek them; and they shall come to the temple with joy and gladness. And he answers very wisely concerning the inquiry concerning the act of fasting. He answers very wisely that that which was formerly a duty, and is therefore called a fast, or fasts, must be turned into a festival, and must be changed into joyous times; for fasting, even as they are called, is frequently nothing but weeping, and frequently is become a trial, and a difficulty, and a burden. though now it was but just peeping out of its ruins. But it would be accomplished much more fully in the conversion of the Gentiles to the faith of Christ, and the incorporating of them with the believing Jews in one great body, under Christ the Head; a mystery which is made manifest by the scriptures of the prophets, (Rom. xvi. 26.) and by this among the rest, which makes it strange that, when it was accomplished, God should go before with commerce and stumbling-blocks to the Jews. Observe,

1. Who they are, that shall be added to the church; people, and the inhabitants of many cities; (v. 20.) not only a few ignorant country people that may be easily imposed upon, or some idle people that have nothing else to do; but intelligent, inquisitive citizens, men of business and acquaintance with the world, many of them Jews in Christ; good, many people and strong nations, (v. 22.) some of all languages, v. 23. By this it appears that they are brought into the church, not by human persuasion, for they are of different languages, not by external force, for they are strong nations, able to have kept their ground if they had been so attacked, but purely by the effectual working of divine truth and grace. Note, God has a peculiar interest in the posterity of Abraham, and in the church; the assembly of the church of the first-born some will be found out of all nations and kindreds, Rev. vii. 9.

2. How their accession to the church is described; They shall come to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts; (v. 21.) and, to show that this is the main matter in which their conversion consists, it is repeated, (v. 22.) They shall come with the wealth of innumerable nations, and with the spoils of many countries; to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord. No mention is made of their offering sacrifices, not only because these were not expected from the proselytes of the gate, but because, when the Gentiles should be brought in, sacrifice and offering should be quite abolished. See who are to be accounted converts to God, and members of the church: all that are converts to God are members of the church. (1.) They are such as seek the Lord of hosts, such as inquire for God their Maker, covet and court his favour, and are truly desirous to know his mind and will, and sincerely devoted to his honour and glory; this is the generation of them that seek him. (2.) They are such as pray before the Lord; such as make confession, and make a business, of the duty of prayer; such as come to him with all the world, live without it; such as by prayer pay their homage to God, own their dependence upon him, maintain their communion with him, and fetch in mercy and grace from him. (3.) They are such as herein have an eye to the divine revelation and institution; which is signified by their doing this in Jerusalem, the place which God had chosen, where his word was, where his temple was, that type of Christ and his profession, which all faithful worshippers will have a believing regard to.

3. How unanimous they shall be in their accession to the church, and how zealous in exciting one another to it; (v. 21.) The inhabitants of one city shall go to another, as formerly when they went up from all parts of the country to worship at the yearly feasts; and they shall say, Let us go speedily to pray; I will go also. This intimates, (1.) That those who are brought into an acquaintance with Christ themselves, should do all they can to bring others acquainted with him; thus Andrew invited Peter to Christ, and Philip invited Nathanael. True grace hates monopolies. (2.) That those who are rightly sensible of their need of Christ, and of the favour of God through him, stir up themselves and others without delay to hasten to him; Let us go speedily to pray; it is for our lives, and the lives of our souls, that we are petition, and therefore it concerns us to lose no time; in a matter of such moment, delays are dangerous. (3.) That our communion with God is very much assisted and furthered by the communion of saints. It is pleasant to go to the house of God in company; (Ps. lv. 14. with the multitude, Ps. xlii. 4.) and it is of good use to those that do so, to excite one another to go speedily, and lose no time; we should be glad when it was a thing for us to go to God's house, Ps. xxvii. 5. Iron sharpens iron, so may good men sharpen the countenances and spirits of another in that which is good. (4.) That those who stir up others to that which is good, must take heed that they do not turn off, or tire, or draw back themselves; he that says, Let us go, says, I will go also. What good we put others upon doing, we must see to it that we do ourselves, else we shall be judged out of our own mouths. Not, "Do you go, and I will stay at home;" but, "Do you go, and I will go with you." A singular pattern (says Mr. Pembble) of zealous charity, that neither leaves others behind, nor turns others before it.

4. Upon what induction they shall join themselves to the church; not for the church's sake, but for Christ's sake, and for the prosperity of the church. It is not enough, says the apostle, that Gentiles and Jews should be united in the church; their different nations and languages shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, begging of him not to go out of them, but to take them along with him; this speaks the great honour they have for a Jew, as one of the chosen people of God, and therefore well worthy their acquaintance; they cannot all come to take him by the hand, or embrace him in their arms, but are obliged to take hold of the skirt of his robe, to reach the height of his garments. We will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you. The gospel was preached to the Jews first, (for of that nation the apostles were,) and by them it was carried to the Gentiles. St. Paul was a Jew whose skirt many took hold of, when they welcomed him as an angel of God, and begged him to take them along with him to Christ; thus the Greeks took hold of Philip's skirt, saying, Sir, we would see Jesus, John xii. 21. Note, It is the privilege of the saints, that they have God with them, have him among them—the knowledge and fear and worship of him; they have his favour and gracious presence; and this should invite us into communion with them; it is good being with those who have God with them, and those who join themselves to the Lord, and must join themselves to him. Let us therefore, for our God, we must take his people for our people, cast in our lot among them, and be willing to take our lot with them.

CHAP. IX.

At this chapter begins another sermon, which is continued to the end of ch. xi. It is called, The burden of the word of the Lord; for every word of God has weight in it, to those who regard it, and will be a heavy weight upon them that refuse it. It doth not, a dead weight. Here is I. A prophecy against the Jews' unrighteous neighbours, the Syrians, Tyrians, Philistines, and others, (v. 1—6.) with an infirmity of mercy to some of them, in their conversion and reconciliation, and the impartial treatment of the Gentile people, in their protection, v. 8. II. A prophecy of their righteous King, the Messiah, and his coming, with a description of him, (v. 9.) and of his kingdom, the nature and extent of it, v. 10. III. An account of the obligation the Jews lay under to Christ for their deliverance out of their captivity in Babylon, v. 11, 12. IV. A prophecy of the victories and successes God would grant to the Jews, by the intercession of Christ, and by the intercession of the Gentiles, for their deliverance by Christ, v. 13—15. V. A promise of great plenty, and joy, and honour, which God had in reserve for his people, (v. 16, 17.) which was written for their encouragement.

1. THE burden of the word of the Lord in the land of Hadranch, and Damascus shall be the rest thereof: when the eyes of man, as of all the tribes of Israel, shall be toward the Lord. 2. And Hamath also shall border thereby; Tyrus, and Zidon, though it be very wise. 3. And Tyrus did build herself a strong hold, and heaped up silver as the dust, and fine gold as the mire of the streets. 4. Behold, the Lord will cast her out, and he will smite her power in the sea; and she shall be devoured with fire. 5. Ashkelon shall see it, and fear; Gaza also shall see it, and be very sorrowful; and Ekron, for her expectation, shall be ashamed; and the king shall perish from Gaza, and Ashkelon shall not be inhabited. 6. And a bastard shall dwell in Ashdod; and I will cut off the pride of the Philistines. 7. And I will take away his blood out of his mouth, and his abominations from between his teeth: but he that remaineth, even he, shall be for our God; and he shall be as a governor in Judah, and Ekron as a Jebusite. 8. And I will encamp about my house because of the army, because of him that passeth by, and because of him that turneth; and no oppressor shall pass through them any more: for now have I seen with mine eyes.

After the precious promises we had in the foregoing chapter, of favour to God's people, their persecutors, who hated them, come to be reckoned with; those particularly that bordered close upon them.

I. The Syrians had been bad neighbours to Israel, and God has a controversy with them. The word of the Lord shall be a burthen in the land of Hadhech, that is, of Syria; but it does not appear why it was so called. That that kingdom is meant, is plain, because Damascus, the metropolis of that kingdom, is said to be the rest of this burthen; that is, the judgments here threatened shall light and lie upon that city. These are miserable, upon whom the burden of the word of the Lord rests, upon whom the weight of God almighty does fall, as a burden that is a weight that they cannot shake off, nor bear up under; there are those whom God causes his fury to rest upon; whom the wrath of God makes its mark, it will be sure to hit; whom it makes its rest, it will be sure to sink. And the reason of this burthen's resting on Damascus, is, because the eyes of man, as of all the tribes of Israel, (or rather, even of all the tribes of Israel,) are toward the Lord; because the people of God by faith and prayer look up to him for succour and relief, and depend upon him to take their part against their enemies. Note, It is a sign that God is about to appear remarkably for his people, when he raises their believing expectations from him and dependence upon him; and when by his grace he turns them from idols to himself; (Isa. xviii. 7, 8.) At that time, as it is said, the Lord came to his own land, and thence the Lord will have no need any more, and thus, for the Lord has an eye upon man, and upon all the tribes of Israel; he is King of nations as well as King of saints; he governs the world as well as the church, and therefore will punish the sins of other people as well as those of his own people. God is Judge of all, and therefore all must give account of themselves to him. When St. Paul wrote to the church at Damascus and preached there, and disputed with the Jews, then the word of the Lord might be said to rest there, and then the eyes of men, of other men beside the tribes of Israel, began to be toward the Lord; see Acts xix. 22. Hamath, a country which lay north of Damascus, and which we often read of, shall border thereby; (v. 2.) it joins to Syria, and shall share in the burden of the word of the Lord, that rests upon Damascus. The Jews have a proverb, Wo to the wicked man, and wo to his neighbour, who is in danger of partaking in his sins and in his plagues; wo to the land of Hadhech, and wo to Hamath.

II. Tyre and Zidon come next to be called to an account here, as in other prophecies, v. 2.—4. Observe here.

1. Tyrus flourishing, thinking herself very safe, and ready to set God's judgments, not only at a distance, but at defiance; for, (1.) She is very wise; it is spoken ironically; she thinks herself very wise, and able to outwit even the wisdom of God; it is granted that her king is a great politician, and that her statesmen are so, Ezek. xxviii. 3. But with all their wit and policy they shall not be able to evade the judgments of God, when they come with commission; there is no wisdom or counsel against the Lord; nay, it is his honour to take the wise in their own craftiness. (2.) She has a very strong, and well fortified barrier, for nature and art; Tyrus did build herself a strong hold, which, she thought, could never be brought down, or get over. (3.) She is very rich, and money is a defence, it is the sinews of war, Ex. vii. 12. By her vast trade she has heated up silver as the dust, and fine gold as the mire of the streets; she has an abundance of it; heaps of silver as common as heaps of sand, v. 2. Solomon made silver to be in Jerusalem as the stones of the streets; but Tyre went further, and made fine gold to be as the mire of the streets. It was well if we could all learn so to look upon it, in comparison with the merchandise of wisdom and grace, and the gains thereof.

2. Tyrus falling, after all; her wisdom, and wealth, and strength, shall not be able to secure her; (v. 4.) The Lord will cast her out of that strong hold wherein she has fortified herself, will make her poor; (so some read it;) there have been instances of those that have fallen from the height of plenty to the depth of poverty, and great riches have come to nothing. God will smite her power in the sea; her being surrounded by the water shall not secure her, but she shall be devoured with fire, and burnt down by divine judgment, with her ovens, being drenched in the midst of the water, was, one would have thought, in danger of being some time or other overflowed or washed away by that; yet God chooses to destroy it by the contrary element; sometimes he brings ruin upon his enemies by those means which they least expect. Water enough was nigh at hand to have quenched the flames of Tyre, and yet by them she was threatened, for who could put out the fire which the breath of the Almighty blows up?

III. God next contends with the Philistines, with their great cities and great lords, that bordered southward upon Israel.

1. They shall be alarmed and affrighted by the word of the Lord lighting and resting upon Damascus; (v. 5.) the disgraces of Israel had many a time alarmed and affrighted Tyre; for the Lord had smote them before, and had triumphed in them; but now Ashkelon shall see the ruin of her friends and allies, and shall fear; Gaza also shall see it, and be very sorrowful, and Ekron; concluding that their own turns come next, now that the cup of trembling goes round; what will become of their house when their neighbour's is on fire? They had looked upon Tyre and Zidon as a help to them; but now, when these cities were ruined, their expectations from them were ashamed; as our expectations from all creatures will be in the issue.
2. They shall themselves be ruined and wasted. (1.) The government shall be dissolved; The king shall perish from Gaza, not only the present king shall be cut off, but there shall be no succession, no successor. (2.) The cities shall be despoiled; Ashkelon shall not be inhabited, the rightful owners shall be expelled, either slain, or carried into captivity. (3.) Foreigners shall take possession of their land, and become masters of all its wealth; (v. 6.) A bastard shall dwell in Ashdod, a spurious brood of strangers shall enter upon the inheritances of the natives, which they have no more right to than a bastard has to the estates of the legitimate children. And thus God will cut off the pride of the Philis- tines, and they shall inherit their possessions for themselves in, and which were the ground of their confidence in themselves, and their contempt of the Israel of God. This prophecy of the destruction of the Philistines, and of Damascus, and Tyre, was accomplished, not long after this, by Alexander the Great, who ravaged all these countries with his victorious army, took the cities, and planted colonies in them; which Quidnunc Curtius gives a particular account of, as the history of his conquests. And some think he is meant by the bastard that shall dwell in Ashdod, for his mother Olympia owned him begotten in adultery, but pretended it was by Jupiter. The Jews afterward got ground of the Philistines, Syrians, and their other neighbours, took some of their cities from them and possessed their countries, as appears by the histories of Josephus and Curtius. And this was foretold before, Zeph. ii. 4, &c. Obad. v. 20.

3. Some among them shall be converted and brought home to God, by his gospel and grace; so some understand v. 7. as a promise. (1.) That God would take away the sins of these nations; their blood and their abominations, their cruelties and their idolatries. God will part between them and these; and shall they have rolled under their tongue as a sweet morsel, and are as loath to part with as men are to part with the meat out of their mouths; and which they held fast between their teeth. Nothing is too hard for the grace of God to do. (2.) That he would accept of a remnant of them for his own: He that remains shall be for our God. God would preserve a remnant even of these nations, that he might use them for his glory, and make them instruments of his grace and peace, and be set apart for him; and the disadvantages of their birth shall be no bar to their acceptance with God, but a Philistine shall be as acceptable to God, upon gospel-terms, as one of Judah, nay, as a governor, or chief one, in Judah, and a man of Ekron shall be as a Jebusite, or a man of Jerusalem, as a proselyted Jebusite, as Araunah the Jebusite, 2 Sam. xxiv. 16. In Christ Jesus there is no distinction of nation, but all are one in him, all alike welcome to him.

IV. In all this, God intends mercy for Israel, and it is in kindness to them that God will deal thus with the neighbouring nations, to avenge their quarrel for what is passed, and to secure them for the future. Thus some understand the seventh verse, as intimating, 1. That thus God would deliver his people from their bloody adversaries who hated them, and to whom they were an abomination, then when they were just ready to devour them, and make a prey of them; I will take away his blood, the blood of Israel, out of the mouth of the Philistines, and from between their teeth, (Amos iii. 12.) when, in their hatred of them and enmity to them, they were greedily devouring them. 2. That he would thus give him an advantage over their enemies, that remains, the remnant of Israel, shall be for our God, shall be taken into his favour, shall own him, and be owned by him, and he shall be as a governor in Judah; though the Jews have been long in servitude, they shall recover their ancient dignity, and be victorious, as David, and other governors in Judah formerly were; and Ekron, that is, the Philistines, shall be as the Jebusites, and the rest of the devoted nations were brought into subjection under them.

However, this is plainly the sense of v. 8. that God will take his people under his special protection, and therefore will weaken their neighbours, that it may not be in their power to do them a mischief; I will encamp about my house because of the army. Note, God's house lies in the midst of an enemy's country, and his church is a little among thorns; and therefore God's power and goodness are to be observed in the special preservation of it. The camp of the saints, being in a high degree united with the numerous armies of the powers of darkness that are set against it round about, would certainly be swallowed up, if the angels of God did not encamp about it, as they did about Elisha, to deliver it, Rev. xx. 9. Ps. xxxiv. 7. When the times are unusually perilous, when armies are marching and counter-marching, and all bearing ill will to Zion, then Providence will join his angels about the church, to guard the church of God, because of him that passes by, and because of him that returns, that, whether he return a conqueror or conquered, he may do it no harm. And as none that pass by shall hurt them, so no oppressor shall pass through them any more; they shall have no enemy within themselves to rule them with rigour, and to make their lives bitter to them with some bondage, as of old in Egypt. This was fulfilled, when, for some time after the struggles of the Maccabees, Judea was a free and flourishing state; or perhaps when Alexander the Great, struck with an awe of Jaddus the high priest, favoured the Jews, and took them under his protection, at the same time when he wasted the neighbouring countries. And the reason given for all this is, For now have I seen with mine eyes, how God carefully distinguished between his people and other people, with whom before they seemed to have had their lot in common, and have made it to appear that I know them that are mine.” This agrees with Ps. xxxiv. 15. The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous; now his eyes, which run to and fro through the earth, shall fix upon them, that he may show himself tender of them, and strong on their behalf, 2 Chron. xvi. 9.

9. Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee; he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass. 10. And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the horse from Jerusalem, and the battle-bow shall be cut off: and he shall speak peace unto the heathen; and his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth. 11. As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water.

That here begins a prophecy of the Messiah and his kingdom, is plain from the literal accomplishment of the ninth verse in, and its express application to, Christ's entrance into Jerusalem, and triumphant march into Jerusalem, Matth. xxvi. 5. John xii. 15.

1. Here is notice given of the approach of the Messiah promised, as matter of great joy to the Old Testament church; Behold, thy King cometh. unto thee. Christ is a King; invested with regal powers and prerogatives; a sovereign Prince, an absolute Monarch; having all power both in heaven and on earth. He is Zion’s King; God has set him upon his holy hill of Zion, Ps. ii. 6. In Zion his glory as a King shines; thence his law went forth, even the word of the Lord; in the gospel-church, his spiritual kingdom is administered; it is by him that the ordinances of the church are instituted, and its officers commissioned; and it is taken under his protection, he fights the church’s battles, and secures its interests, as its King. “This King has been long in coming, but now behold, he cometh; he is at the door, there are but a few more ages to run out, and he that shall come, will come; he cometh to; he cometh to; (2.) cry mightily to him. Christ’s approaches ought to be the church’s assurances.

2. Here is such a description of him as renders him very amiable in the eyes of all his loving subjects, and his coming to them very acceptable. (1.) He is a righteous Ruler; all his acts of government will be exactly according to the rules of equity, for his end is not to enrich himself, but to establish his power upon his own subjects; he is the God of salvation; treasures of salvation are in him. He is servant; saved himself; (so some read it;) rising out of the grave by his own power, and so qualifying himself to be our Saviour. (3.) He is a meek, humble, tender Father to all his subjected children; he is lowly; he is poor and afflicted; (so the word signifies;) so it denotes the meanness of his condition; having emptied himself, he was despised and rejected of men. But the evangelist translates it so as to speak the temper of his spirit; he is meek, not taking state upon him, or resenting injuries, but humbling himself from first to last; condescending to the mean, compassionate to the miserable; this was according to the truth of the prophesy that was spoken by the holy Prophet; (Matt. xxv. 29.) Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and no less so as a King. It was a proof of this, that, when he made his public entry into his own city, (and it was the only passage of his life that had any thing in it magnificent in the eye of the world,) he chose to ride, not upon a stately horse, or in a chariot, as great men used to ride, but upon an ass, a beast of service indeed, but a poor silly and contemptible one, low and slow, and in those days ridden only by the meaner sort of people; nor was it an ass fitted for use, but an ass’s colt, a little, foolish, unmanageable thing, that would be more likely to disgrace his rider than be any credit to him, and that not his own neither; nor helped off, as sometimes his horse is, by good furniture, for he was a sadd’le, no harness, no trappings, indeed, no equipage, but his disciples’ clothes thrown upon the colt; for he made himself of no reputation when he visited us in great humility. His kingdom is here set forth in the glory of it; this King has, and will have, a kingdom, not of this world, but a spiritual kingdom, a kingdom of his own; and it is advanced by external force, by an arm of flesh or carnal weapons of warfare; no, he will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the horses from Jerusalem, (v. 10.) for he shall have no occasion for them while he himself rides upon an ass. He will, in kindness to his people, cut off their horses and chariots, that they may not cut themselves off from God by putting that confidence in them, which they should put in the power of God only. He will himself undertake their protection, will himself be a Wall of fire about Jerusalem, and give his angels charge concerning it; (these chariots of fire and horses of fire;) and then the chariots and horses they had hid in their cities are but needless. (2.) It shall be propagated and established by the preaching of the gospel, the speaking of peace to the heathen; for Christ came, and preached peace to them that were afar off, and to them that were nigh, and so established his kingdom by pro claiming on earth peace, and good will toward men. (3.) His kingdom, as far as it prevails in the minds of men, is a kingdom of peace, for it will bring them peaceable, and slay all enmities; it will cut off the battle-bow, and beat swords into ploughshares; it will not only command the peace, but will create the fruit of the lips, peace. (4.) It shall extend itself to all parts of the world, in defiance of the opposition given to it. The chariot and horse that came against Ephraim and Jerusalem, to oppose the progress of Zion’s King, shall be cut off; his gospel shall be preached to the world, and be received among the heathen, so that his dominion shall be from sea to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth, as was foretold by David, Ps. lxxii. 8. The preachers of the gospel shall carry it from one country, one island, to another, till some of the remotest corners of the world are enlightened and reduced to the Gospel.”

4. Here is an account of the great benefit procured for mankind by the Messiah, which is redemption from extreme misery, typified by the deliverance of the Jews out of their captivity in Babylon; (v. 11.) As for thee also, thee, O daughter of Jerusalem; or thee, O Messiah the Prince, by the blood of thy covenant, by force and virtue of the covenant made with Abrah’m, sealed with the blood of coven-}

12. Turn ye to the strong hold, ye prisoners of hope; even to-day do I declare, that I will render double unto thee; 13. When I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece, and made thee as the sword of a mighty man. 14. And the Lord shall be seen over them, and his arrow shall go forth as the lightning; and the Lord God shall blow the trumpet, and shall go with whirlwinds of the south. 15. The Lord of hosts shall defend them; and they shall devour, and subsist with stubble; and they shall drink, and make a noise as through wine; and they shall be filled like bowls, and as the corners of the altar. 16. And the Lord their God shall save them in that day as the flock of his people: for they shall be as the stones of a crown, lifted up as an ensign upon his hand. 17. For how great is his goodness, and how great is his beauty! Crown shall make the young men cheerful, and new wine the maids.

The prophet, having taught those that were returned out of captivity, to attribute their deliverance to the blood of the covenant, and to the promise of the Messiah, (for therefore they were so wonderfully helped, because that blessing was in them, was yet in the womb of their nation,) now comes to encourage them with the prospect of a joyful and happy settlement, and of glorious times before them; and such a happiness they did enjoy, in a great measure, for some time; but these promises have their full accomplishment in the spiritual blessings of the gospel which we enjoy by Jesus Christ.

1. They are invited to look unto Christ, and fly unto him, as their City of refuge; (v. 12.) Turn you to the strong hold, ye prisoners of hope. The Jews that were returned out of captivity into their own land, were yet, in effect, but prisoners; (We are servants this day, Neh. ix. 36.) yet prisoners of hope or expectation, for God had given them a little reviving in their bondage, Ezra ix. 8, 9. Those that yet continued in Babylon, detained by their affairs there, yet lived in hope some time or other to see their own land again; now both these are diverted to turn their eyes upon the Messiah, set before them in the promise as their strong Hold to shelter themselves in him and the glory, as upon his head, for the perfecting of the mercy which by his grace, and for his sake, was so gloriously begun; Look unto him, and be ye saved, Isa. xlv. 22. The promise of the Messiah was the strong hold of the faithful long before his coming; they saw his day at a distance, and were glad, and the believing expectation of this redemption in Jerusalem was long the support and consolation of Israel, Luke ii. 25, 28. Though in their disorders and distresses, were ready to turn toward this and the other creature for relief; but the prophets directed them still to turn to Christ, and to comfort themselves with the joy of their King coming to them with salvation. But as their deliverance was typical of our redemption by Christ, (v. 11.) so this invitation to the strong hold speaks the language of the gospel. Sinners are forlorn, but they are princes of hope; they are in sad, but it is not desperate; yet now there is hope in Israel concerning them, Christ is a strong Hold for them, a strong Tower, in whom they may be safe and quiet from the fear of the wrath of God, the curse of the law, and the assaults of their spiritual enemies; to him they must turn by a lively faith, to him they must fly, and trust in his name. 11. They are assured of God's favour to them; "Even to-day do I declare, when things are at the worst, and you think your case deplorable to the last degree, yet I will be double unto thee; to thee, O Jerusalem, to every one of you prisoners of hope, I will give you corn; double to the sorrows you have experienced; or, blessings double to what I ever bestowed upon your fathers, when their condition was at the best; the glory of your latter state, as well as of your latter house, shall be greater, shall be twice as great as all of your former state. Not only the time of your captivity shall be more than it was before than by the coming of the Messiah, the preaching of his gospel, and the setting up of his kingdom; these spiritual blessings in heavenly things were double to what they had ever enjoyed in their most prosperous state. As a pledge of this, in the fulness of time, God here promises to the Jews victory, plenty, and joy, in their own land, which yet should be but a type of eternal bliss; the true joy and gifts shall be in heaven, riches, and joys, in the kingdom of Christ.

1. They shall triumph over their enemies; the Jews, after their return, were surrounded with enemies on all sides, they were as a speckled bird, all the birds of the field were against them, their land lay between the two potent kingdoms of Syria and Egypt, branches of the Grecian monarchy, and was frequented by the robbers of the desert, which were, as it were,所得, was foretold, D. m. xi. But it is here promised that out of them all the Lord would deliver them; this promise had its primary accomplishment, in the times of the Maccabees, when the Jews made head against their enemies, kept their head above water, and, after many struggles and difficulties, came to be head over them. It is promised.

1. That they shall be instruments in God's hand, for the defeating and baffling of their persecutors; "I have bent Judah for me, as my bow of steel, that bow I have filled with Ephraim as my arrows, have drawn it up to its full bent, till the arrow be at the head;" for some think that this is signified by the phrase of filling the bow; the expressions here are very fine, and the figures lively; Ju dah had been taught the use of the bow, (2 Sam. x. 18.) and Ephraim had been famous for it, Ps. lviii. 9. But let them not think that they gair their successes by their own bow, for they themselves are no more than God's bow and his arrows; tools in his hands, which he makes use of, and manages, as he pleases, which he holds as his bow, and directs to the mark as his arrows. The best and bravest of men are but what God makes them, and it is he that provides them with his instruments to do his will.

The preachers of the gospel were the bow in Christ's hand, with which he went forth, he went on, conquering and to conquer, Rev. vi. 2. The following words explain this; I have raised up and spirited thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece. This was fulfilled when against Antiochus, one of the kings of the Grecian monarchy, the people that knew their God, were strong, and exploits, Dan. xi. 32. And they in the hand of an almighty God were made as the sword of a mighty man, which none can stand before; wicked men are said to be God's sword, (Ps. xvii. 13.) and sometimes good men are made so, for he employs both as he pleases.

2. That God will be Captain, and Commander in chief, over them, in every expedition and engagement; (v. 14.) The Lord shall be seen over them, he shall make it appear that he presides in their affairs, and that in all their motions they are under his direction, as apparently, though not as sensibly, as he was seen over Israel in the pillar of cloud and fire, when he led them through the wilderness. [1.] Is their army to be raised, or mustered, and brought into the field? The Lord shall blow the trumpet, to gather the forces together, to proclaim the war, to sound the alarm, and to give directions which way to march, which way to move; for if God blow the trumpet, it shall not give an uncertain sound. [3.] How it came to be known. [2.] Is the army taking the field, and entering upon action? Whatever enterprise the campaign is opened with, God shall go forth at the head of their forces, with whirlwinds of the south, which were of incredible swiftness and fierceness; and before these whirlwinds, thy sons, O Greece shall be as chaff. [3.] Is the army actually engaged? God's arrows shall go on in the air and will not fail; so strong and irresistible: his lightnings shall go forth as arrows; see Ps. lxi. 14. He sent out his arrows, and scattered them; he shot out his lightnings, and discomfited them. This alludes to that which God had done for Israel of old, when he brought them out of Egypt, and into Canaan, and had its accomplishment, partly in the wonderful successes which the Jews had against their neighbours that attacked them in the time of the Maccabees, by the special appearances of the Divine Providence for them; and perfectly in the glorious victories gained by the cross of Christ, and the preaching of the cross over Satan and all the powers of darkness, whereby we are made more than conquerors. [4.] Are they in danger of being overpowered by the enemy? The Lord of hosts shall save them, (v. 16,) so that their enemies shall not prevail over them, or prey upon them. God shall be unto them for defence as well as offence, the Shield of their help as well as the Sword of their excellency: and this as the Lord of hosts, who has power to defend them, and as their God, who is engaged by promise to defend them, and by the property he has in them. He shall save them in that day, that critical, dangerous day, as the flock of his people, with the same care and tenderness that the shepherd protects his sheep with. Those are safe whom God saves. [5.] Did their enemies hope to swallow them up? It shall be turned upon them, and they shall devour their enemies, and shall subdue with sling-stones, for want of better weapons, those that came forth against them. The stones of the brook, when God pleases, shall do as great execution as the best train of artillery; for the stars in their courses shall fight on the same side. Goliath was subdued with a sling-stone. Having subdued, they shall devour; shall drink the blood of their enemies, as it were, and, as conquerors, are wont to do, they shall make a noise as through wine, and shall sing songs of praise, huzzas and acclamations to glory in their victories, and proclaim them. We read of those that shout for mastery, and of the shout of a king among God's people. They shall be filled with blood and spoil, as the bowls and basins of the temple, or the corners of the altar, were used to be filled with the blood of the sacrifices; for their enemies shall fall as victims to divine justice.

2. They shall triumph in their God. They shall take the comfort, and give God the glory, of their successes. So some read v. 15. They shall eat, they shall quietly enjoy what they have got; God will give them power to eat it, after they have subdued the sling-stones, that is, their enemies that sling stones at them; and they shall drink, and make a noise, a joyful noise, as the Lord their Maker and Protector, as through wine, as men are merry at a banquet of wine. Being not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but filled with the Spirit, they shall speak to themselves and one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, as those that are drunk do with vain and foolish songs, Eph. v. 18, 19. And, in the fullness of his joy, they shall offer up thank-offerings, sacrifices to the honour of God, so that they shall fill both the bowls and the corners of the altar with the fat and blood of their sacrifices. And when they thus triumph in their successes, their joy shall terminate in God as their God, the God of their salvation.

(1.) In the love he has for them, and the relation wherein they stand to him; that they are the flock of his people, and he is their Shepherd, and that they are to him as the stones of a crown, which are very precious, and of great value, and which are kept under a strong guard; never was any king so pleased with the jewels of his crown, as God is, and they are precious in his sight, and shall be, and shall be to him, and in whom he glories. They are a crown of glory, and a royal diadem, in his hand, Isa. liii. 2, 3. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord, in that day, when I make up my jewels, Mal. iii. 17. And they shall be lifted up as an ensign upon his hand, as the royal standard is displayed in token of triumph and joy. God's people are his glory, so he is pleased to make of them, so he is pleased to reckon them. He sets them up as a banner upon his own land, waging war against those who hate him, to whom it is a flag of defiance, and a centre of unity to all that love him, to all the children of God, that are scattered abroad, who are invited to come, and enlist themselves under this banner, Isa. xi. 10, 12.

(2.) In the provision he makes for them, v. 15. This is the speech of his heart, and the expression of how great is his goodness, and how great is his beauty! This is the substance, this the burden, of the songs wherewith they shall make a noise before the Lord! We are here taught, [1.] To admire and praise the amiableness of God's being. How great is his beauty! All the perfections of God's nature conspire to make him infinitely lovely in the eyes of all that know him. They are to him as the stones of a crown; but what is he to them? Our business in the temple is to behold the beauty of the Lord; (Ps. xxxvi. 4.) and how great is that beauty! How far does it transcend all other beauties, particularly the beauty of his holiness. This may refer to the Messiah, to Zion's King that cometh. See that King in his beauty, (Isa. xxxiii. 17.) who is fairer than the children of men, the fairest of ten thousand, and altogether lovely. Though, in the eye of the world, he had no form or comeliness, in the eye of faith, how great is his beauty! [2.] To admire, and give thanks for, the gifts of God's favour and grace; his bounty as well as his beauty; for how great is his goodness! How rich in mercy is he! How deep, how full, are its springs! How various, how plenteous, how precious, and how plentiful! What a great deal of good does God do! How rich in mercy is he! Here is an instance of his goodness to his people; Corn shall make the young men cheerful, and new wine the maidens; that is, God will bless his people with an abundance of the fruits of the earth, whereas they had been afflicted with scarcity to that degree, that the young men and the maidens were ready to die for want of meat and drink. Lam. ii. 12, 21.—v. 7, 8.—v. 10. Now they shall have bread enough and to spare; not water only, but wine, new wine, which shall make the young people grow, and be cheerful; and (which some have observed to be the effect of plenty and the cheapness of corn) the poor will be encouraged to marry, and re-populate the land, when they shall have where- withal to sustain them for larger things. With good gifts God bestows upon us, we must serve him cheerfully with, and must trace the streams up to the fountain, and when we are refreshed with corn and wine, must say, How great is his goodness!

CHAP. X.

The scope of this chapter is much the same with that of the chapter before—to encourage the Jews that were returned, with hopes that, though they had been under zechariah, x.

divine rebukes for their negligence in rebuilding the temple, and were now surrounded with enemies and danger, yet they did nothing to make them prosperous at home and victorious abroad. Now, 1. They are here directed to eye the great God in all events that concerned them; and, in both the evils they suffered, in the triumphs they desired, to acknowledge his hand, v. 1-4. II. They are encouraged to expect strength and success from him, in all their struggles with the enemies of their church and state, and to hope that the issue would be glorious at last, v. 5-12.

1. A SK ye of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain; so the Lord shall make bright clouds, and give them showers of rain, to every one grass in the field. 2. For the idols have spoken vanity, and the diviners have seen a lie, and have told false dreams; they comfort in vain: therefore they went their way as a flock, they were troubled, because there was no shepherd.

Mine anger was kindled against the shepherds, and I punished the goats: for the Lord of hosts hath visited his flock the house of Judah, and hath made them as his goodly horse in the battle. 4. Out of him came forth the corner, out of him the nail, out of him the battle-bow, out of him every oppressor together.

Gracious things and glorious ones, very glorious and very gracious, were promised to this poor afflicted people, in the foregoing chapter; now here he intimates to them that he will, for these things, be inquired of by them, and that he expects they shall do nothing but give glory to the Lord, in all his ways, toward him; him, and not idols that were rivals with him for their respects.

1. He directs them to apply themselves to God by prayer for rain in the season thereof. He had promised, in the close of the foregoing chapter, that there should be great plenty of corn and wine, whereas, for several years, by reason of unseasonable weather, the Lord had been grievous of both; but that the earth will not yield its fruits, unless the heavens water it, and therefore they must look up to God for the dew of heaven, in order to the fitness and fruitfulness of the earth; (v. 1.) Ask ye of the Lord rain. Do not pray to the clouds or to the stars for rain, but to the Lord; for he it is that hears the heavens, when they hear the earth, Hos. ii. 21.

Seasonable rain is a great mercy, which we must ask of God; rain, in the time of the latter rain, when there is most need of it; the former rain fell at the seed-time, in autumn; the latter fell in the spring, between March and May, which brought the corn to an ear, and filled it. If either of these rains failed, it was very bad with that land; for from the end of May to September they never had any rain at all. Jerome, who lived in Judah, says, that he never saw the rain there. And he here directly to ask for it in the time when it was to come. Note, We must, in our prayers, dutifully attend the course of Providence; we must ask for mercies in their proper time, and not expect that God should go out of his usual way and method for us. But since sometimes God denied rain in the usual time, as a token of his displeasure, they must pray for it then as a token of his favour, and they shall not pray in vain. Ask, and it shall be given you; so the Lord shall make bright clouds, which, though they are without rain themselves, are yet presages of rain; lightnings, (so the margin reads it,) for he maketh lightnings for the rain. He will give them showers of rain in great abundance, and so give to every one grass in the field; for God is universally good, and makes his rain to fall upon the just and the unjust.

2. He shows them the folly of making their addresses to idols, as their fathers had done; (v. 2.) The idols have spoken vanity; the Teraphim, which they courted and consulted in their distress, were so far from being able to command rain for them, that they could not so much as tell them when they should have rain. They pretended to promise them rain at such a time, but it did not come. The diviners, who were the prophets of those idols, have seen a lie; they looked in vain, disguised as good diviners, and they have told false dreams, such as the event did not answer, which proved that they were not from God. Thus they comforted in vain those that consulted the lying oracles; all the vanities of the heathen put together could not give rain, Jer. xiv. 22. Yet this was not the worst of it; they not only got nothing by the false gods, but they lost the favour of the true God; for thereof: they went their way into captivity as a flock driven into the fold, and they were troubled with one vexation after another, as scattered sheep are, because there was no shepherd, no prince to rule them, no priest to intercede for them, none to take care of them, and keep them together. They that wandered after strange gods, were made to wander into strange nations.

He shall take away in the hand of God in all the events that concerned them; they shall be judged against them, and those that made for them, v. 3. Let them consider, (1.) When every thing went cross, it was God that walked contrary to them; (v. 3.) Mine anger was kindled against the shepherds that should have fed the flock, but neglected it, and starved it. "I was displeased at the wicked magistrates and ministers, the idol shepherds." The captivity in Babylon was a token of God's anger against them; in it likewise he finished the goats, those of the flock that were filthy and mischievous, they were set on the left-hand, to go away into punishment. Though the body of the nation suffered in the captivity, yet it was only the goats and the shepherds that God was angry with, and that he punished; the same affliction to others came from the hand of God, and was but a fatherly chastisement, which to them came from his wrath, and was a judicial punishment. (2.) When things began to change for the better, it was God that gave them the happy turn. He has now visited his flock with favour, to inquire after them, and provide what he finds proper for them, and he has made them as his goodly horse in the battle; has beautified them, taken care of them, managed and made use of them, as any man does the horse he rides on; has made them valuable in themselves, and formidable to those about them, as his goodly horse. It is God that makes us what we are, and it is with us as he appoints.

4. He shows them that every creature is to them what God makes it to be; (v. 4.) Out of him came forth the corner, out of him the nail. (1.) All the power and strength of the oppressor was derived from God; out of him came all the combined force of their enemies; every oppressor together (and the oppressors of Israel were not a few) did but what his hand and his counsel determined before to be done; nor could they have had such power against them, unless it had been given them from above. (2.) All the power likewise that was engaged for them, was derived from him, and therefrom. Out of him came forth the corner-stone of the building, the power of magistrates, which keeps the several parts of the state together. Princes are often called the corners of the people, as 1 Sam. xiv. 38. marg. Out of him came forth the nail that fixes the state, the nail in the sure place, (Isa. xxii. 23.)
the nail in his holy place, Ezra ix. 8. Out of him came forth the battle-bow, the military power, and of him every pestiferous, or exactor, that has the civil power in his hand; and therefore to God, the Fountain of power, we must always have an eye, and see every man's judgment proceeding from him.

5. And they shall be as mighty men, which tread down their enemies in the mire of the streets in the battle: and they shall fight, because the Lord is with them, and the riders on horses shall be confounded. 6. And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and I will save the house of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them: for I have mercy upon them; and they shall be as though I had not cast them off: for I am the Lord their God, and I will hear them. 7. And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, and their heart shall rejoice as through wine: yea, their children shall see it and be glad; their heart shall rejoice in the Lord. 8. I will.hiss for them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them: and they shall increase as they have increased. 9. And I will sow them among the people: and they shall remember me in far countries: and they shall live with their children, and turn again. 10. I will bring them again also out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Assyria; and I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon, and place shall not be found for them. 11. And he shall pass through the sea with affliction, and shall smite the waves in the sea, and all the deeps of the river shall dry up; and the pride of Assyria shall be brought down, and the sceptre of Egypt shall depart away. 12. And I will strengthen them in the Lord; and they shall walk up and down in his name, saith the Lord.

Here are divers precious promises made to the people of God, which look further than to the state of the Jews in the latter days of their church, and have certain reference to the spiritual Israel of God, the gospel-Church and all true believers.

1. They shall have God's favour and presence, and shall be owned and accepted of him. This is the foundation of all the rest; The Lord is with them. They shall thereby be the power of God; and the army of their foes shall be of none effect, and they shall be exalted, and shall be on the side of, and, if he be for them, who can be against them? Again, (v. 6.) I have mercy upon them. All their dignity and joy are owing purely to God's mercy; and mercy, as it supposes misery, so it excludes merit. They had been cast off, the effect of which could not but be misery; they had been justly cast off, and therefore could rejoice in God's mercy, as an effect opposite to their being cast off, and the curse; yet it is promised, They shall be as though I had not cast them off. The transgressions of their fathers, for which they had been rejected, shall not only not be visited upon them, but shall not be so much as remembered against them. God will be as perfectly reconciled to them as if he had never contended with them, and the falling out of these lovers shall rather be the renewing, than the weakening, of love. They shall have such a full assurance of God's being reconciled to them, and, upon that, shall be so well reconciled to themselves, that they shall be as easy as if they had never been cast off; and this, from a principle after their restoration. (1.) The covenant they are admitted into, is the same as ever it was; I am the Lord their God, according to the original contract, the covenant made with their fathers. (2.) The communion they are admitted into, is the same that ever it was; I will hear them. They shall be as welcome as ever to speak to him, and as sure as ever to receive from him an answer of peace; for as he never will, so he never will, say to Jacob's sced, Seek ye me in vain.

2. They shall be victorious over their enemies, that would draw them from either their duty to God, or their comfort in God; (v. 5.) They shall be as mighty men, that are both strong in body, and hold in spirit, men of vigour, men of valour, effective men. They of Ephraim, as well as they of Judah, shall be like a mighty man, (v. 7.) that dares to go about a difficult enterprise, and is able to go through with it. They shall, as mighty men, tread down their enemies in the battle, as the dirt that is thrown out of the houses is trodden with other dirt in the mire of the streets. And they shall therefore fight, because the Lord is with them. Some would argue that they may therefore sit still and do nothing; but use the word with them that are lightly treading with all the power, and shall do all. No, God's gracious presence with us to help us, must not supersede, but quicken and animate, our endeavours to help ourselves; and we must therefore work out our salvation with fear and trembling, because it is God that works in us both to will and to do. They shall fight with readiness and resolution, because if God be with them, they are sure to be conquerors. For then the riders on horses shall be confounded. The cavalry of the enemies shall be routed, and put into disorder, by the infantry of the Jews. The preachers of the gospel of Christ went forth to war a good warfare, they charged bravely; because God was with them; and the riders on horses, that opposed them, were confounded, for God chose the weak and foolish things of the world to confound the wise and mighty. But whence have they all this might? How come they to be so able, so active? It is in the Lord, and in the power of his might, that they are so; (v. 6.) I will strengthen the house of Judah, and so I will save the house of Joseph. Note, God saves us by strengthening us, and works out our happiness by working in us to do our duty. And thus we are enabled to the highest degree of comfort. For God gives us, and yet, when all is done, God must have the glory of all. God is our Strength, and so becomes both our Song and our Salvation.

3. Those of them that are dispersed, shall be gathered together into one body; (v. 6.) I will bring them again to place them; bring them from other lands to place them in their own land. This was a token in the Old Testament, that they and their other ancient privileges—they shall be restored to the possession of their own land. This was fulfilled when the children of God, that were scattered abroad, were by faith in Christ incorporated in the gospel-church, and Jews and Gentiles became one fold, John xvi. 16. In order to this, (v. 8.) I will hiss for them, rather, whistle for them, as the shepherd with his pipe calls his sheep.
Zechariah, 1138

The church' s tent must be enlarged, and its cords strengthened; then I will sow them among the people. 8. Then the little ones that be gathered out of the tribes of Israel shall also be among the nations, in order of the seed of seed in the ground, not to bury it, but to increase it, that it may bring forth much fruit. The Jews are said to be dispersed int. every nation under heaven; (Acts ii. 5.) and as it was their troubles that dispersed some of them, so perhaps others transplanted themselves into colonies, because the land of Israel was too strait for them; and many there were that were employed in trade, and sold their Jewish religion; now these were so very much in the spreading of the gospel. The Jews that came from all parts to worship at Jerusalem, fetched thence the gospel light and fire to their own countries, as those, Acts ii. and the cunctus, Acts viii. And their own synagogues in the several cities of the Gentiles were the first receptacles of the apostles and their preaching, wherever they came.

Thus when God sowed them among the people, that they might not get hurt by the Gentiles but do good to them, he took care that they should remember him, and make mention of his name in far countries; and by keeping up the knowledge of God among them, as he had revealed himself in the Old Testament, gave them power and strength to make it known, that the knowledge of Christ, as he has revealed himself in the New Testament. (2.) It shall last to future ages. The church shall not be res unius aetas—a temporary system, but a seed in it shall serve the Lord, v. 7. Yea, their children shall see it, and be glad; and they shall live with their children, and turn again, v. 9. Converts to Christ shall have their children about them, whom they shall teach the knowledge of the Lord, and bring with them when they turn again to the holy land, and the way of holiness. It was said to those to whom the gospel was first preached, The promise is to you and to your children, Acts ii. 39. They shall be so very much among the people, as never to be extirpated. Christ's family upon earth shall never be extinct, nor his purchased possession lost for want of heirs.

5. God himself will be both their Strength and their Song. (1.) In him they shall be comforted, and shall have abundant satisfaction; (v. 7.) Their heart shall rejoice as through wine; for Christ's love, which is their joy, is better than wine. They shall be like a mighty man, and their hearts shall rejoice. When we resolutely resist, and so overcome, our spiritual enemies, we cannot but rejoice. But we ruin our own joy, if our resistance be feeble, and we yield to the temptations of Satan. Their heart shall rejoice, and then they shall be as a mighty man; for the joy of the Lord will be our strength. And with their grace their joys shall be propagated; Their children shall see it, and be glad, and their hearts also shall rejoice in the Lord. It is good to acquaint children betimes with the love of their fathers to him, and to make them feel it as pleasant as may be to them; that, learning betimes to rejoice in the Lord, they may with purpose of heart cleave to him. (2.) By him they shall be carried on with vigour, and enlargement of heart, in his service; (v. 12.) I will strengthen them in the Lord, strengthen them for their walk and work, as well as for their warfare. It is the God of Israel that gives them strength and honor. The Lord strengthens all their powers and faculties for spiritual performances, above what they are by nature, and against what they are by the corruption of nature. New observe, [1.] How they are thus enabled and invigorated for their duty; I the Lord will strengthen them in the Lord; in the Messiah, who is Jehovah our Strength, as well as Jehovah our Righteousness. Strength is treasured up, for us in Christ, and from him it is derived to us. It is through Christ strengthening us, that we can do all things, and without him we can do nothing. His strength is commanded him for this purpose, Ps. 91:6. The destruction of the temple is at hand, according to the prophecy of Zechariah, Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars. Others understand it of Jerusalem, or, rather, of the whole land of Canaan, to which Lebanon was an inlet on the north. All shall lie open to the invader, and the cedars, the mighty and eminent men, shall be devoured; whereas the common people shall have inferior rank; (v. 2.) If the cedars are fallen, if all the mighty are spoiled, and brought to ruin, let the fir-tree howl. How can the slender fir-trees stand, if stately cedars fall? If cedars are devoured by fire, it is time for the fir-trees to howl; for no wood is so combustible as that of the fir-tree.

1. Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars. 2. Howl, fir-tree; for the cedar is fallen; because all the mighty are spoiled; howl, O ye oaks of Bashan; for the forest of the vintage is come down. 3. There is a voice of the howling of the shepherds; for their glory is spoiled: a voice of the roaring of young lions; for the pride of Jordan is spoiled.

In dark and figurative expressions, as is usual in the scripture predictions of things at a distance, that destruction of Jerusalem, and of the Jewish church and nation, is here foretold, which our Lord Jesus, when the time was at hand, prophesied of very plainly and expressly. We have here, 1. Preparation made for that destruction; (v. 1.) "Open thy doors, O Lebanon. Thou wast not shut up, nor hadst thou been hid; and thy own received him not; now thou must open them, to let thy ruin in. Let the gates of the forest, and all the avenues to it, be thrown open, and let the fire come in, and devour its glory." Some by Lebanon here understand the temple, which was built of cedars from Lebanon, and the stones of it white as the snow of Lebanon. It was burnt with fire by the Romans, and its gates were forced open by the fury of the soldiers. To confirm this, they tell a story, that forty years before the destruction of the second temple, the gates of it opened of their own accord; upon which probity, Rabbi Johanan made this remark, (as it is found in one of the Jewish authors,) "Nor I know it at all, for that the destruction of the temple is at hand, according to the prophecy of Zechariah, Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars." Others understand it of Jerusalem, or, rather, of the whole land of Canaan, to which Lebanon was an inlet on the north. All shall lie open to the invader, and the cedars, the mighty and eminent men, shall be devoured; whereas the common people shall have inferior rank; (v. 2.) If the cedars are fallen, if all the mighty are spoiled, and brought to ruin, let the fir-tree howl. How can the slender fir-trees stand, if stately cedars fall? If cedars are devoured by fire, it is time for the fir-trees to howl; for no wood is so combustible as that of the fir-tree.
Bands: and I fed the flock. 8. Three shepherds also I cut off in one month; and my soul loathed them, and their soul also abhorred me. 9. Then said I, I will not feed you: that that dieth, let it die; and that that is to be cut off, let it be cut off; and let the rest eat every one the flesh of another. 10. And I took my staff, even Beauty, and cut it asunder, that I might break my covenant which I had made with all the people. 11. And it was broken in that day: and so the poor of the flock that waited upon me knew that it was the word of the Lord. 12. And I said unto them, If ye think good, give me my price; and if not, forbear. So they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. 13. And the Lord said unto me, Cast it unto the potter: a goodly price that I was prized at of them. And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them to the potter in the house of the Lord. 14. Then I cut asunder mine other staff, even Bands, that I might break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel.

The prophet here is made a type of Christ, as the prophet Isaiah sometimes was; and the scope of these verses is to show that for judgment Christ came into this world; (John ix. 39.) for judgment to the Jewish church and nation, which were, about the time of his coming, wretchedly corrupt and degenerated by the worldliness and hypocrisy of their rulers. Christ would have healed them, but they would not be healed, they are therefore left desolate, and abandoned to ruin. Observe here, 1. The desperate case of the Jewish church, under the tyranny of their own governors. Their slavery in their own country made them as miserable as their captivity in strange countries had done; (Palestine.) They possessed, they had, and sold them, v. 15. In Zechariah’s time we find the rulers and the nobles justly rebuked for exacting usury of their brethren; and the governors, even by their servants, oppressive to the people, Neh. v. 7, 15. In Christ’s time, the chief priests and the elders, who were the possessors of the flock, by their traditions, the commandments of men, and their impositions on the consciences of the people, became perfect tyrants, devoured their houses, engrossed their wealth, and fleeced the flock instead of feeding it. The Saducees, who were deists, corrupted their judgments. The Pharisees, who were bigots for superstition, corrupted their morals, by making void the commandments of God, Matt. xv. 16. Thus they slew the sheep of the flock, thus they sold them. They may not have known what became of them, so they could but gain their own ends, and serve their interests. And, 1. In this they justified themselves: they slay them, and hold themselves not guilty. They think that there is no harm in it, and that they shall never be called to an account for it by the chief Shepherd; as if their power were given them for destruction, which was designed only for edification; and as if, because they sat in Moses’s seat, they were not under the obligations of Moses’s law, but might dispense with it, and with themselves in the breach of it, at their pleasure. Note, Those have their minds wofully blinded indeed, who do ill, and justify themselves in it; but God will not hold them guiltless, who hold themselves so. 2. In this they affronted God, by giving him thanks for the gain of their oppression; They said, Blessed be the Lord, for I am rich. As if, because they prospered in their wickedness, got money by it, and raised estates, God had made himself Patron of their unjust practices, and Providence was become Particularer, and insolent to God. What is got honestly we ought to give God thanks for, and to bless him whose blessing makes rich and adds no sorrow with it. But with what face can we go to God, either to beg a blessing upon the unlawful methods of getting wealth, or to return him thanks for success in them? They should rather have gone to God, to confess the sin, to take shame to themselves, and surrender it, and then have been thus to mock him, by making the gains of sin the gift of God, who hates robbery for burnt-offerings, and reckons not himself praised by the thanksgiving, if he be dis honoured, either in the getting or the using of that which we give him thanks for. 3. In this they put contempt upon the people of God, as unworthy their regard or compassionate consideration; The poor of the flock set up for shepherds, but they make them miserable, and then do not commiserate them. Christ had compassion on the multitude, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad, as if they had no shepherd; (as really they had worse than none;) but their own shepherds fitted them not, nor showed any concern for them. Note, It is ill for a church, when its pastors have no tender heart, when they do not sympathize with the precious souls, when they can look upon the ignorant, the foolish, the wicked, the weak, without pity. II. The sentence of God’s wrath passed upon them for their senselessness and stupidity in this condition. There was a general decay, nay, a destruction of religion among them; and it was all one to them, they regarded it not; My people loved to have it so, Jer. v. 31. Though they were oppressed, and broken in judgment, yet they willingly walked after the commandment, Hos. v. 11. And as their shepherds pitied them not, so they did not bemoan themselves; therefore God says, (v. 6.) I will no more pity the inhabitants of the land. They have courted their own destruction, and so let their doom be. But those are truly miserable, whom the God of mercy himself will not pity. All the distresses they were now put upon. They who are willing to have their con sciences oppressed by those who teach for doctrines the commandments of men, (as the Jews were, who called them Rabbi, Rabbi, that did so, Matth. xv. 9.—xxii. 7.) are often punished by oppression in their civil interests, and justly, for they forfeit their own rights, whom they falsely give up God’s rights. The Jews did so, the Pagists do so; and who can pity them if they be ruled with rigour? God here threatens them, 1. That he will deliver them into the hand of oppressors; every one into his neighbour’s hand, so that they shall use one another barbarously. The several parties in Jerusalem did so; the zealots, the seditious, as they were called, committed greater outrages than the common enemy did; as Josephus relates in his history of the wars of the Jews. They shall be delivered every one into the hand of his king, the Roman emperor, whom they chose to submit to rather than to Christ, saying, We have no king but Caesar. Thus they thought to ingratiate themselves with their lords and masters. But, for this, God brought the Romans upon them, who took away their place and nation. 2. That he will not deliver them out of their hands; they shall sit under their burden, and the weight of their oppressors; and will not deliver them; and if the Lord do not help them, none else can, nor can they help themselves. III. A trial yet made, whether their ruin might be prevented by sending Christ among them as a Shepherd; God had sent his servants to them in vain, but last of all he sent unto them his Son, saying, They will reverence my Son, Matt. xxi. 37. Divers of the prophets had spoken of him as the Shepherd of Israel, Isa. xi. 11. Ezek. xxxiv. 23. He himself told the Pharisees that he was the Shepherd of the sheep, and that they who pretended to be shepherds, were thieves and robbers; (John x. 1, 2, 11.) apparently referring to this passage. Where we have, 1. The charge he received from his Father to try what might be done with this flock; (v. 4.) This saith the Lord my God, (Christ called his Father his God because he acted in compliance with his will, and his undertaking, under his name.) Let the righteous strike through, and the/ laid speech/ton) shall feed the flock of the slaughter. The Jews were God's flock, but they were the flock of slaughter, for their enemies had killed them all the day long, and accounted them as sheep for the slaughter; their own possessors slew them, and God himself had doomed them to the slaughter; yet feed them by reproof, instruction, and comfort; provide wholesome food for them who have been so long soiled with the leaven of the scribes and Pharisees. Other sheep he had, which were not of this fold, and which afterward must be brought; but he is first sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, Matt. xv. 24. 2. His acceptance of this charge, and his undertaking pursuant to it, v. 7. He does ascribed to the Lord; God caused me to dwell among them, as it is likely, and I will feed the flock of slaughter. Christ will care for these lost sheep; he will go about among them, teaching and healing even you, O poor of the flock. Christ did not neglect the meanest, or overlook them for their meanness; the shepherds that made a prey of them, regarded not the poor, they were converse with the only ones that they could get to dwell among them, and conducted his gospel to the poor, Matt. xi. 5. It was an instance of his humility, that his converse was mostly with the inferior sort of people; his disciples, who were his constant attendants, were of the poor of the flock. 3. His furnishing himself with tools proper for the charge he had undertaken; I took unto me two staves, pastoral staves; other shepherds have but one crook, but Christ had two, denoting the double care he took of his flock, and what he did both for the souls and for the bodies of men. David speaks of God's rod and his staff, (Ps. xxiii. 4.) a correcting rod and a supporting staff. One of these staves was called Beauty, denoting the temple, which is called the beauty of holiness, and one of its gates, beautiful; which Christ called his Father's house and temple. He was anointing zeal, when he cleared it of the buyers and sellers, the other he called Bands, denoting their civil state, and the incorporate society of that nation, which Christ also took care of by preaching love and peace among them. Christ, in his gospel, and in all he did among them, consulted the advancement both of their civil and of their sacred interests. 4. His executing the commission which he had received; I will feed you, and will also deliver you, (v. 7.) and he discharged those under-shepherds that were false to their trust; (v. 8.) Three shepherds I cut off in one month. Through the deficiency and uncertainty of the history of the Jewish church, in its latter ages, we know not what particular event this had its accomplishment in; in general, it seems to be an act of power and justice for God to deliver his people, to effect the redress of the grievances of the abused flock. Some understand it of the three orders of princes, priests, and scribes, or prophets, who, when Christ had finished his work, were laid aside for their unfaithfulness. Others understand it of the three sects among the Jews, of Pharisees, Sadducees, and Herodians, all whom Christ anathematized. (Matt. xxiii.) and soon after cut off, all in a little time. IV. Their enmity to Christ, and making them-Christ that waited on him, and understood with what authority he spake, and could distinguish the voice of the Lord from that of an ordinary stranger, that it was the word of the Lord, and trembled at it, and were confident that it should not fall to the ground. Note, Christ is waited on by the "flock of the flock;" he chose them to be with him, to be his pupils, to be his witnesses; the "flock" received him and his gospel, when those that had great possessions turned their backs upon him. And those that waited on him were of a different sort: he said, "Get ye behind me, children; for the kingdom of heaven is not now come; but at the "last day, to hear and receive his words, they shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God, John vii. 17.

3. A further reason given for their rejection. It was said before, Their souls abhorred him; and here we have an instance of it, their buying and selling him for thirty pieces of silver; either thirty Roman pence, or rather thirty Jewish shekels; this is here foretold in somewhat obscure expressions; as it is fit that such particular prophecies should be delivered, lest otherwise the plainness of the prophecies might prevent the accomplishment of it. Here, (1.) The shepherd comes to them for his wages; (v. 12)."If ye think well, give me my price; you are weary of me, pay me off and discharge me; and if not, forbear; if you will be content with me in any service or to turn me off without wages, I am content." Christ was no hirerling, and yet the labourer is worthy of his hire. Compare with this what Christ said to Judas, when he was going to sell him. "What thou doest, do quickly; be at a word with the chief priests, let them either take the bargain or leave it," John xiii. 27. Those that betray Christ, are not forced to it; they might have chosen. (2.) They value him at thirty pieces of silver; many years' service he had done them as a Shepherd, yet this is all they will now turn him off with—"A goodly price that I and all my care and pains was valued at by them." If Judas fixed this sum in his demand, it is observable that his name is Judas, the same name with that of the body of the people, for it was a national act; or if (as it rather seems) the chief priests pitched upon this sum in their profilers, they were the representatives of the people; it was part of the priest's office to put a value upon the devoted things, (Lev. xxvii. 8.) and thus they valued the Lord Jesus. It was the ordinary price of a slave, Exod. xxix. 32. Making light of Christ, and undervaluing the love of that great and good Shepherd, are the ruin of multitudes. (3.) They value him as a Shepherd, and not proportionable to his worth, it is thrown to the potter with disdain; "Let him take it to buy with clay, or for any use that a little money will serve to, for it is not worth hoarding; it may be enough for a potter's stock, but not for the pay of such a Shepherd, much less for his purchase. So the prophet cast the thirty pieces of silver to the potter in the house of the Lord; and he took them and laid it by, saying, He shall buy with them." Now we find a particular accomplishment of this in the history of Christ's sufferings, and reference is had to this prophecy, Matt. xxvii. 9, 10. Thirty pieces of silver was the very sum for which Christ was sold to the chief priests; the money, when Judas would not keep it, and the chief priests would not take it back, was laid out in the purchase of a field, Acts vii. 41. These thirty pieces of silver are a part of the chief priests according to an ancient prophecy, and the more ancient counsel and fore-knowledge of God.

4. The completing of their rejection, in the cutting assunder of the other staff, v. 14. The former spake the ruin of their church by breaking the covenant between God and them—that defaced their beauty; this speaks the ruin of their state, by breaking the brotherhood between Judah and Israel, by reviving animosities and contention among them, such as were of old between Judah and Israel, the writing of whom, as one stick in the hand of the Lord, was one of the blessings promised after their return out of captivity, Ezek. xxxvii. 19. But that union shall now be dissolved, they shall be crumbled into parties and factions, exasperated one against another; and their kingdom, being thus divided, shall be brought to desolation. (1.) Nothing ruins a people so certainly, so inevitably, as the breaking of the staff of Israel, that is, the breaking of the shepherds, among them; for hereby they become an easy prey to the common enemy. (2.) This follows upon the dissolving of the covenant between God and them, and the decay of religion among them; when iniquity abounds, love waxes cold. No wonder if those fall out among themselves, that have provoked God to fall out with them. When the staff of Beauty is broken, the staff of Bands will not hold long. An unchurched people will soon be an undone people. 15. And the Lord said unto me, Take unto thee yet the instruments of a foolish shepherd. 16. For, lo, I will raise up a shepherd in the land, which shall not visit those that be cut off, neither shall seek the young one, nor heal that is broken, nor feed that standeth still; but he shall eat the flesh of the fat, and tear their claws in pieces. 17. Wo to the idle shepherd that leaveth the flock! the sword shall be upon his arm, and upon his right eye: his arm shall be clean dried up, and his right eye shall be utterly darkened.

God, having showed the misery of this people in their being justly abandoned by the good Shepherd, here shows their further misery in being shamefully abused by foolish shepherds. The prophet is himself to personate and represent this pretended shepherd, (v. 15.) Take unto thee the instruments or accoutrements of a foolish shepherd, that are no way fit for the business; such a shepherd's coat, and bag, and staff, as a foolish shepherd would appear in; for such a shepherd shall be set over them, (v. 16.) who, instead of protecting them, shall oppress them, and do them mischief. (1.) They shall be under the inspection of unfaithful ministers; their scribes, or the pages of their law shall guard heavy burthens upon them, and grievous to be borne; and with their traditions imposed, shall make the ceremonial law much more a yoke than God had made it. The description here given of the foolish shepherd suits very well with the character Christ gives of the scribes and Pharisees, Math. xxiii. (2.) They shall be under the tyranny of unmerciful princes, that shall rule them with rigour, and make their own land as much a house of bondage to them as ever Egypt or Babylon was; when they had rejected him by whom princes decree justice, it was just that they should be turned over to them who decree unrighteous decrees. (3.) They shall be imposed upon and deluded by false christs and false prophets, as our Saviour foretold, Matt. xxiv. 24. At the word of those false churches and practices provoked the Romans, and hastened the ruin of the Jewish nation; but it is observable that they were never cheated by a counterfeit Messiah, till they had refused and rejected the true Messiah. Now observe, (1.) What a curse this foolish shepherd should be to the people, v. 16. God will, for their punishment, raise up a foolish shepherd, who will not do the duty of a shepherd, he will not visit those that are cut off, nor go after those that go astray, nor seek those that are missing, to find them out, and bring them home, as the good shepherd does, Matth. xviii. 12, 13. They take no care of the younger lambs, and the fat-tailed, and are well worthy of it, as Christ does, Isa. xi. 11. They do not heal that which was broken, which was worried and torn, but let it die of its bruises, when a little thing, in time, would have saved it. They do not feed those who, through weakness, stand still, and are ready to faint, and cannot get forward, but leave them behind, let who will take them up; they do not feed them, but feed their flocks, and so they never do any thing to support the weak, and comfort the feeble-minded; but, on the contrary, (1.) They are luxurious themselves; they eat of the flesh of the fat, they will have of the best for themselves; and, like that wicked servant that said, My lord delays his coming, they eat and drink with the drunken, and serve their own bellies. (2.) They are the remaining curse of the Jewish church, as much governed as their appetites, for, when they are in a rage against any of the flock, they tear their very claws in pieces by over-driving them, they beat their hoofs; they smite their fellow-servants. Whunto thee, O land, when thy king is such a child!

2. What a curse this foolish shepherd should bring upon himself; (v. 17.) Wh to the idol shepherd, when he has so many eyes, and like an idol, receives abundance of respect and homage from the people, and the chief of their offerings, but neither can, nor will, do them any kindness. He leaves the flock when they most need his care, leaves them destitute, and flees, because he is a hireling; his doom is, that the sword of God's justice shall be upon his arm and his right eye, so that he shall quite lose the use of both. His arm shall wither, and be dried up; so that he who would not help his friends, when it was required, shall not know how to help himself; his right eye shall be utterly darkened, that he shall not discern the danger that his flock is in, nor know which way to look for relief. This was fulfilled when Christ said to his Pharisees, I am come, that they which see may be made blind, John ix. 39. Those that have gifts which qualify them to do good, if they do not do good with them, shall be deprived of them; those that should have been workmen, but were slothful, and would do nothing, will justly have their arm dried up; and those that should have been watchmen, but were sleepy, and would never look about them, will justly have their eye blinded.

CHAP. XII.

The apostle (Gal. iv. 25, 28, 29) distinguishes between Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children, and Jerusalem, as many believe, which shall be then; the one that is rejected Christ, and Jerusalem that is from above, that is free, and is the mother of us all—the Christian church, the spiritual Jerusalem, which God has chosen to put his name there, before the sins of the world and the kingdom of the latter are come, and left that ease and to be a prey to the eagles that should be gathered to it. Now, in this chapter, we have the blessings of the latter, many precious promises made to them, by his hand, (v. 7.) declaring his power to make them good. It is promised, I. That the attempts of the church's enemies against her, shall be to their own ruin, and they shall find that it is at their peril if they to do her hurt; v. 3. II. That the endowers of the church's friends and patrons for her good shall be pious, regular, and successful, v. 5. III. That God will protect and strengthen the meanest and poorest that belong to his church, and save them for his name's sake, v. 7. IV. That, as a preparative for all this mercy, and a pledge of it, he will pour upon them a spirit of prayer and repentance, the effect of which shall be universal and very particular, verse 4. These promises were of use then to the pious Jews that lived in the troubled times under Antiochus, and other persecutors and oppressors; and they are still to be improved in every age for the directing of our prayers, and the encouraging of our hopes with reference to the gospel-church.

1. T H E burden of the word of the Lord for Israel, saith the Lord, which stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and formeth the spirit of man within him. 2. Behold, I will make Jerusalem a cup of trembling unto all the people round about, when they shall be in the siege both against Judah and against Jerusalem. 3. And in that day will I make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people: all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it. 4. In that day, saith the Lord, I will smite every horse with astonishment, and his rider with madness; and I will open mine eyes upon the house of Judah, and will smite every horse of the people with blindness. 5. And the governors of Judah shall say in their heart, The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be my strength in the Lord of hosts their God. 6. In that day will I make the governors of Judah like a heart of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire in a sheaf; and they shall devour all the people round about, on the right hand and on the left; and Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem. 7. The Lord also shall save the tents of Judah first, that the glory of the house of David, and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem do not magnify themselves against Judah. 3. In that day shall the Lord defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and he that is feeble among them at that day shall be as David; and the house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the Lord before them.

I. The title of this charter of promises made to God's Israel; it is the burden of the word of the Lord, a divine prediction; it is of weight in the delivery of it; it is to be pressed upon people, and will be very pressing in the accomplishment of it; it is a burden, a heavy burden, to all the church's enemies, like that talent of lead, ch. v. 7, 8. But it is for Israel; it is for their comfort and benefit. As even the fiery law, (Deut. xxxii. 2.) so the fiery promises, and fiery privileges, is the hand of God's right hand, come for them; the word that speaks terror to their enemies, speaks peace to them; as the pillar of cloud and fire, which turned a bright side toward the Israelites, to direct and encourage them, but a black side toward the Egyptians, to terrify and dispirit them. Happy they that have even the burdens of God's word for this, as well as the blessings of it, the house of David.

II. The title of him that grants this charter, which is prefixed to it, to show that he has both authority to make these promises, and ability to make them good, for he is the Creator of the world, and our Creator; and therefore has an incontestable, irresistible dominion. 1. He stretches out the heavens; not only he did so at the first, when he said, Let there be a firmament, and he made the firmament, but he does so still, he keeps them stretched-out like a curtain, they keep them from running in, and will do so till the end comes, when the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll. No bounds can be set to his power who stretches out the heavens, nor can any thing be too hard for him. 2. He lays the foundation of the earth, and keeps it firm and fixed on its own basis, or, rather, on its own axis, though it is founded on the seas, (Ps. xxiv. 1, 2) nay, though it is founded in the sea, and yet it cannot be moved or be lieved of this earth, no doubt, the Ruler of it, and judges in it, and they deceive themselves, who say, The Lord has forsaken the earth, for if he had, it would have sunk, since it is he that not only did lay its foundations at first, but does still lay them, still uphold them. 3. He forms the spirit of man within him. He made us these souls, Jer. xxxvi.18. 16. He is the rock of the earth into which we are laid, and he still breathes into every man the breath of life; the body is derived from the fathers of our flesh, but the soul is infused by the Father of spirits, Heb. xii. 9. He fashions men's hearts; they are in his hand, and he turns them as the rivers of water, and casts them into what would please, as to serve his own purposes with them; and he can therefore save his church by raising his friends, and disposing his enemies, and wilt eternally save all his chosen by forming their spirits anew. III. The promises themselves that are here made them, by which the church shall be secured, and in which all its friends may enjoy a holy security. 1. It is promised that whatever attacks the enemies of the church may make upon her purity or peace, they will certainly issue in their own confusion. The enemies of God and of his kingdom bear a great deal of malice and ill will to Jerusalem, and form designs for its destruction; but it will prove at last that they are but preparing ruin for themselves; Jerusalem is in safety, and they are in all the danger, who fight against it. This is here illustrated by three comparisons. (1.) Jerusalem shall be a cup of trembling to all that lay siege to it, v. 2. They promise themselves that it shall be to them a cup of wine, which they shall easily and with pleasure drink off, and they thirst for its spoils, nay, they thirst for its blood, as for such a cup; but it shall prove a cup of slander, nay, a cup of poison, to them, which, when they take it into their hands, and think it is all their own, they shall not be able to drink off, the fumes of it shall rise. When the kings were assembled against her, and saw how God was known in her palaces for a Refuge, they trembled, and hastened away, fear took hold upon them, as we find, Ps. lxviii. 3—6. Thus Alexander the Great was struck with amazement when he met Jaddua the high priest, and was deterred thereby from offering any violence to Jerusalem. When Senachereb laid siege against Judah and Jerusalem, he found them such a cup of stupifying wine as laid all his mighty men asleep, Ps. lxvii. 5, 6. Some read it, I will make Jerusalem a post of contradiction or breaking. They that make any attempts upon Jerusalem, do but run their heads against a post, which they cannot move, but are sure to hurt themselves. The boast of the terrible ones is as a storm against that city; Jer. xlix. 17, 18. He[fou]nd it. God's church is a cup of consolation to all her friends, (Isa. lxvi. 11) but a cup of trembling to all that would either debase her by errors and corruptions, or destroy her by wars and persecutions. See Isa. li. 22, 23. (2.) Jerusalem shall be a burthensome stone to all that attempt to remove it, or carry it away; (v. 3.) All nations, as they are gathered together against it; some one time, and some another; there has been a succession of enemies, from age to age, making war upon the church; but, though they were all at once in a concord against it, and had formed a resolution to cut off the name of Israel, that it should be no more in remembrance, (Ps. lxxxiii. 4.) they will find it a task too hard for them. They that are for keeping up and advancing the kingdom of sin in the world, look upon Jerusalem, even the church of God, as the great obstacle to their designs, and they must have it off of their hands; but, though they are as strong as they think it is; so that, [1.] They cannot remove it. God will have a church in the world, in spite of them; it is built upon a rock, and is as mount Zion that abides for ever, Ps. cxxv. 1. This stone, cut out of the mountain without hands, will not only keep its ground, but fill the earth, Dan. ii. 35. Nay, [2.] It will break in pieces all that burthen themselves with it, even as stone smote the image, Dan. ii. 45. All that think themselves a match for it, shall be cut in pieces by it. Some think it is an allusion to a sport, which Jerome, upon this place, says, was in use among the Jews, as among us: young men tried their strength, and strove for mastery, by heaving up great stones, which if they proved too heavy for them, fell upon them, and dashed their heads against them, so that their own persons and banner sacred things, will find them a burthensome stone, that it is ill jostling with edged tools, and though they make light of it, (saying, Am not I in spirit?) they bring upon themselves an insupportable sinking load of guilt. Our Saviour seems to allude to these words, when he speaks of himself as a burthensome Stone to those that would not have him for their Foundation Stone, which shall fall upon them, and grind them to powder, Matth. xxi. 44. (3.) The governors of Judah shall be among their enemies like a hearth of fire among the wood, and a torch of fire in a sheaf, v. 6. Not that their own passions shall make them incendiaries and firebrands to all about them; no, Zion's King is meek and lowly, and all subordinate governors must be like him; but God, justly, will make them avengers of his cause, and theirs, upon their enemies. They that contend with them, will find it is like an opposition given by briers and thorns to a consuming fire, Isa. xxvii. 4. It will go through them, and burn them together. It is God's wrath, and not theirs, that is the fire which devours the adversaries. God's fire is said to be in Zion, and his fires in Jerusalem; Isa. xlv. 2. When man is thought to be as water to this fire, to extinguish it, and put it quite out; but God will make them as wood, nay, as a sheaf of corn, (which is more combustible) to this fire, not only to be consumed by it, but to be made thereby to burn the more strongly. When God would make Abimelech and the men of Shechem one another's destroyers, fire is said to come out from one to devour the other, Judg. ix. 20. So here, fire shall come out from the governors of Judah, to devour all the people round about, as from the mouth of God's witnesses, to consume those who offer to hurt them, Rev. xi. 5. The persecutors of the primitive church found this fulfilled in it, witness Lactantius's history of God's judgments upon the primitive persecutors, and the confession of Julian the Apostate at last, Thas. 1st, xi. God may be, Nemo me impune lacessit—He that assails me, does it at his peril. If you are weary of your life, persecute the Christians, was once a proverb. 2. It is promised that God will infatuate the counsels, and enfeeble the courage, of the church's enemies; (v. 4.) In that day, when the people of the earth are gathered together against Jerusalem, I will make them stagger with fear, and their ruler with madness; and again, I will smite every horse of the people with blindness, so that they shall be no way serviceable to them; binding the horses will be as bad as houghing them. The horses and their horsemen shall both forget the military exercise to which they were trained, and, instead of keeping ranks, and observing the rules of their discipline, they shall both grow mad, and run themselves. The church's infantry shall be too hard for the enemy's cavalry; and those who are upbraided with trusting in horses, shall be baffled by those who were forbidden to multiply by horses.

3. It shall be, that the city of Jerusalem shall be reeple and replenished; (v. 6.) Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem. The natives of Jerusalem shall not incorporate in a colony in some other country, and build a city there, and call that Jerusalem, and see the promises fulfilled in that, as those in New England called their town by the name of towns in Old England; no, they shall have a new Jerusalem upon the same foundation, the same spot of ground, with the old one. They had so far their return out of captivity, but this was to have its full accomplishment in the gospel-church, which is a Jerusalem inhabited in its own place; for the gospel being to be preached to all the world, it may call every place its own.

4. It shall be, that the inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be enabled to defend themselves, and yet shall be taken under the divine protection, v. 8. See here in what method God preserves his church, and those that are his, from the gates of hell, to, and through the gates of heaven. (1.) He does himself secure them; In that day shall the Lord defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; not only Jerusalem itself, but all the inhabitants of it, from being any way damaged. God will not only be a Wall of fire about the city, to fortify that, but he will compass particular persons with his favour as with a shield, so that no dart of the besiegers shall touch them. (2.) He does it by giving them strength and courage to help themselves; what God works in his people by his grace, contributes more to their preservation and defense than what he works for them by his providence. The God of Israel gives strength and power to his people, that they may do their part, and then he will not be wanting to do his. It is the glory of God to strengthen the weak, that most need his help, that see and own their need of it, and will be the most thankful for it.

[1.] In that day the feeblest of the inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be as bold and brave, as skilful and strong, as David himself; shall enterprise and accomplish great things, as David did, and become as serviceable to Jerusalem in guarding it as David himself was in founding it, and as formidable as he was to the enemies of it. See what divine grace does; it makes children not only men, but champions; makes weak saints to be not only good soldiers, but great soldiers, like David. And see how God often does his own work as easily and effectually, and more to his own glory, by weak and obscure instruments than by the most illustrious.

[2.] The house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the Lord, before him. Zerubbabel was now the top branch of the house of David, he shall be endowed with wisdom and grace for this. God so highly honored his house, that he put before the people as an angel; as that angel (so some think) which went before the people of Israel through the wilderness, which was God himself, Exod. xxiii. 20. God will increase the gifts and abilities both of the people and princes, in proportion to the respective services for which they are designed. It was said of David, that he was as an angel of God, to discern good and bad. 2 Sam. xxiv. 17. Such shall now the house of David be. The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be as strong, and fit for action, as nature made David, and their magistrates as wise, and fit for counsel, as grace made him. But this was to have its full accomplishment in Christ; now the house of David looked little and mean, and its glory was eclipsed, but in Christ the house of David shone more bright than ever, and its countenance was as that of an angel; in him it became more blessed, and more a blessing, than ever it had been.

5. It is promised that there shall be a very good understanding between the city and the country, and that the whole land shall be blessed in them; there shall be no mutual envies or jealousies between them; they shall not keep up any separate interests, but shall heartily unite in their counsels, and act in concert for the common good; and this happy agreement between the city and the country, the head and the body, is very necessary to the health, welfare, and safety of any nation.

(1.) The governors of Judah, the magistrates and gentry of the country, shall think honorably of the citizens, the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the merchants and tradesmen; they shall not run them down, and contrive how to keep them under, but they shall say in their hearts, not in compliment, but in sincerity, The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be the strength and glory of my country, of my family, in the Lord of hosts their God, v. 5. They will therefore, upon all occasions, pay respect and deference to Jerusalem, as the mother-city, the ruling-city, and the city that is to be first served, because they look upon it to be the bulwark of the nation, and its strongest fortification in times of public danger and distress; which therefore they would have come to the assistance of, and come under the protection of, not so much because it was a rich city, and money is the sinews of war, or because it was a populous city, and could bring the greatest numbers into the field, or because its inhabitants were generally the most ingenious, active men, the best soldiers, and the best commanders; (Of Zion it shall be said, This and that brave man was born there;) but because it was a holy city; where God's house and household, the temple and the priests, were, where his worship was kept up, and his feasts were observed; and because it should now be, more than ever, a praying city, for upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem God will pour a spirit of supplication; (v. 10.) therefore the governors of Judah shall say, These are my strength; they are so upon the account of their relation to, their interest with, and their communion with, the Lord of hosts their God. Because the Lord of hosts is in a particular manner their God, (for in Salem is his tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Zion,) therefore they shall be my strength. Note, It is well with a kingdom when its great men know how to value its good men, when its governors look upon religion and religious people to be their strength, and that it is their interest to support them, and learn to call godly, praying people, and skilful, faithful ministers, the chariots and horsemen of Israel, as Josiah called Elisha, and not the troublemakers of the land, as Ahab called Elijah.

(2.) The court and the city shall not despise, or look with contempt upon, the inhabitants of the country, no, not the meanest of them; much less that the court and city of Judah shall have any sort of national honour upon Judah, and so save them from the contempt of their brethren. As Jerusalem was digested by special ordinances, so Judah shall be dignified with special provisones. God says, (v. 4.) I will even mine eyes upon the house of Judah; upon the poor country people. Proud men scornfully look down upon them, but the great God will graciously look upon them and esteem them; (v. 8.) Therefore, the Lord shall save the tents of Judah, first. They that dwell in tents, lie most exposed; but God will remarkably protect and deliver them before those... that dwell in Jerusalem. He will appear glorious in what he does for the inhabitants of his villages in Israel, Judg. v. 11. Thus, in the mystical body, God gives more abundant honour to that part which ached, that there may be no schism in the body; (see 1 Cor. xii. 22.—25.) which is the reason here given, that the glory of the house of David, which has great power, and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, who have great wealth, and both which live in great pomp and pleasure, may not magnify themselves against Judah, and the tents of Judah, the dwellers in which work hard, and fare hard, and have the coarsest raiment, and must needs be in mourning, and citizens ought not to despise country people, or look with disdain upon those whom God often his eyes upon, and who are first saved; while it is so hard for the rich and great to enter the kingdom of God. If God by his grace has magnified the dwellers in the tents of Judah, having chosen the weak and foolish things of the world, and chosen to employ them, we abject him if we vilify them, or magnify ourselves against them, Jan. ii. 5, 6. This promise has a further reference to the gospel-church, in which no difference shall be made between high and low, rich and poor, bond and free, circumcision and uncircumcision, but all shall be alike welcome to Christ, and partake of his benefits, Col. iii. 11. Jerusalem shall not then be thought, as it had been, more holy than other parts of the land of Israel.

9. And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem. 10. And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications; and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born. 11. In that day shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hadad-rimmon in the valley of Megiddon. 12. And the land shall mourn, every family apart; the family of the house of David apart, and their wives apart; the family of the house of Nathan apart, and their wives apart; 13. The family of the house of Levi apart, and their wives apart; the family of Shimea apart, and their wives apart; 14. All the families that remain, every family apart, and their wives apart.

The day here spoken of, is the day of Jerusalem's defence and deliverance, that glorious day when God will appear for the salvation of his people; which, if it do refer to the successes which the Jews had against their enemies, in the time of the Macabees, yet certainly it looks further, to the gospel-day, to Christ's victories over the powers of darkness, and the great salvation he has wrought for his chosen. Now we have here an account of two remarkable things, which happened in the life of Christ.

I. A glorious work of God to be wrought for his people; I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem, v. 9. Nations came against Jerusalem, many and mighty nations; but they shall be destroyed, their power shall be broken, and their attempts baffled; the mischief they intend, shall return upon their own head. God will seek to destroy them; not as if he were at a loss for ways and means to bring it about, (Infinite Wisdom was never nonplussed,) but his seeking to do it, intimates that he is very earnest and intent upon it, (he is jealous for his own glory, and helps his kingdom,) and he is to their face and to the nations; not only in the commencement, but in the day of vengeance in his heart,) and that he overlooks means and instruments, and all the motions and operations of second causes, in order to it. He is framing evil against them; when he seems to be setting them up, he is seeking to destroy them. In Christ's first coming, he sought to destroy him that had the power of death, and did destroy him, bruised him with the serpents head, and broke all the powers of darkness that fought against God's kingdom among men, and against the faithful friends and subjects of that kingdom; he spoli'd them, and made a show of them openly. In his second coming, he will complete their destruction, when he shall put down all opposing rule, principality, and power, and death itself shall be swallowed up in that victory. The last enemy shall be destroyed of all that fought against Jerusalem.

II. A gracious work of God to be wrought in his people, in order to the work that is to be wrought for them. When he seeks to destroy their enemies, he will pour upon them the Spirit of grace and supplication. Note, When God intends great mercy for his people, the first thing he does is to set them a praying; thus he seeks to destroy their enemies by showing them up to seek to him that he would do it for them; because, though he has purposed it, and promises it, and it is for his own glory to do it, yet he will for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, Ezek. xxxvi. 37. Ask, and it shall be given; this honour will he have to himself, and this honour will he put upon prayer and upon praying people. And it is a happy preage to the distressed church, of a divine influence and something, and is, as it were, the dawning of its day, when his people are stirred up to cry mightily to him for it. But this promise has reference to, and is performed in, the graces of the Spirit given to all believers, Isa. xlv. 3. I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, which was fulfilled when Jesus was glorified, John vii. 39. It is a promise of the Spirit, and with him is grace and blessing in heavenly things by Christ. Now observe here,

1. On whom these blessings are poured out; (1.) On the house of David, on the great men; for they are no more, and no better, than the grace of God makes them. It was promised (v. 8,) that the house of David shall be as the angel of the Lord. Now, in order to that, the Spirit of grace is poured upon them; for the more the saints have of the Spirit of grace, the more like they are to the holy angels. When God was about to appear for the land, he poured his Spirit of grace upon the house of David, the leading men of the land. It bodes well to a people when they go before the rest in that which is good, as 2 Chron. xx. 5. The house of David is all summed up in Jesus Christ, The Son of David; and upon him is this blessing, and this grace poured out, from him to be diffused to all his members; from his fulness we receive, and grace for grace. (2.) On the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the common people; for the operations of the Spirit are the same upon the mean and weak Christians that they are upon the strong and more grown. The inhabitants of Jerusalem cannot influence public affairs by the power of their persons and policies, as the great men of the house of David may, yet they may do good service by their prayers, and therefore upon them the Spirit shall be poured out. The church is Jerusalem, the heavenly Jerusalem; all true believers, that have their conversation in heaven, are inhabitants of this Jerusalem, and to them this promise belongs, God will pour his Spirit upon them,
This is that earnest which all believe in Christ is received; thus they are sanctified, thus they are sealed.

2. What these blessings are; I will pour upon them the Spirit. That includes all good things, as it qualifies us for the favour of God, and all his other gifts. He will pour out the Spirit, (1.) As a Spirit of grace to sanctify us, and to make us gracious. (2.) As a Spirit of supplications, inclining us to, instructing and assisting us in, the duty of prayer. Note, Wherever the Spirit is given as a Spirit of grace, he is given as a Spirit of sanctification. Wherever he is a Spirit of adoption, he teaches to cry, Abba, Father. As soon as ever Paul was converted, Behold, he prays, Acts ix. 11. What he may do in the matter of grace, as a living saint without prayer. There is a more plentiful effusion of the Spirit of prayer now under the gospel than was under the law; and the further work of sanctification is carried in us, the better is the work of supplication carried on by us.

3. What the effect of them will be; I will pour upon them the Spirit of grace. One would think that it should follow, and they shall look on him whom they have believed, and shall rejoice! (and it is true, that that is one of the fruits of the pouring out of the Spirit, whence we read of the joy of the Holy Ghost;) but it follows, They shall mourn; for there is a holy mourning, that is the effect of the pouring out of the Spirit; a mourning for sin, which is of use to quicken faith in Christ, and to occasion joy. While the grace of the Holy Ghost was secret, it is secret and lasting; such are the sorrows of a true penitent, flowing purely from love to Christ above any other. (2.) It is like the mourning of a people for the death of a wise and good prince. It shall be like the mourning of Hadad-rimmon in the valley of Megiddon, where good king Josiah was slain, for whom there was a general lamentation, (v. 11.) and perhaps the greater because they were told that it was their sin that provoked God to deprive them of so great a blessing; therefore they cried out, The crown is fallen from our head; Wo unto us, for we have sinned! Lam. v. 16. Christ is our King; our sins were his death, and for that reason, ought to be our grief.

(3.) It is a general, universal mourning, (v. 12.) The land itself put on mourning at the death of Christ, for there was then darkness over all the land, and the earth trembled; but this is a promise, that in consideration of the death of Christ, multitudes shall be effectually brought to sorrow for sin, and turn to God; it shall be such a universal graceless mourning as was when all the house of Israel lamented after the Lord, 1 Chron. xii. vii. Some think this is yet to have its complete accomplishment in the general conversion of the Jewish nation.

(4.) It is also a private, particular mourning. There shall be not only a mourning of the land, by its representatives in a general assembly, (as Judg. i. 5, when the place was called Bochim—A place of weepers,) but it shall spread itself into all corners of the land. There shall be mourning (v. 12.) all the families that remain, xiii. 14. All land contributed to the guilt, and therefore all shall share in the grief. Note, The exercises of devotion should be performed by private families among themselves, besides their joining in public assemblies for religious worship. National fasts must be observed, not only in our synagogues, but in our houses. In the mourning here foretold, the wives mourn for their husbands by themselves, in their own apartment, as Esther and her maids. And some think it intimates their denying themselves the use even of lawful delights in a time of general humiliation, 1 Cor. vii. 5.

Four several families are here specified as examples to others, in this mourning. (1.) Two of them are royal families; the house of David, in Solomon, and the house of Nathan, in the sons of Ishmael, brother to Solomon, from whom Zerubbabel descended, as appears by Christ's genealogy, Luke iii. 27, 31. The house of David, particularly that of Nathan, which is now the chief branch of that house, shall go before in this good work. The greatest princes must not think themselves exempted from the law of repentance, but rather obliged to make strict, solemn, particular applications to others; as Hezekiah humbled himself, 2 Chron. xxxii. 26. The princes and the king, (2 Chron. xii. 6,) and the king of Nineveh, Jonah iii. 6. (2.) Two of them are sacred families; (v. 13.) the family of the house of Levi, which was God's tribe, and in it particularly the family of Shimei, which was a branch of the tribe of Levi, (1 Chron. vi. 17.)
and, probably, some of the descendants of that family were now of note for preachers to the people, or ministers, or priests, at the altar. As the princes must mourn for the sins of the magistracy, so must the priest for the iniquity of the holy things. In times of general tribulation and humiliation, the Lord’s ministers are concerned to groan most for those.
17. They shall go up and down through the streets and the altar, (Joel ii. 17.) and not only there, but in their houses apart; for in what families should godliness, both in the form and in the power of it, be found, if not in ministers’ families?

CHAP. XIII.
In this chapter, we have, I. Some further promises relating to gospel-times. Here is a promise of the remission of sins, (v. 1.) of the reformation of manners, (v. 2.) and particularly of the convailing and silencing of false prophets, v. 2., 6. II. A clear prediction of the sufferings of Christ, and the dispersion of his disciples thereupon, (v. 7.) of the destruction of the greater part of the Jewish nation not long after, (v. 8.) and of the purifying of a remnant of them, a peculiar people, to God, v. 9.

1. IN that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for uncleanness. 2. And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I will cut off the names of the idols out of the land, and they shall no more be remembered; and also I will cause the prophets and the unclean spirit to pass out of the land. 3. And it shall come to pass, that when any shall yet prophesy, then his father and his mother that begat him shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live; for thou spakest lies in the name of the Lord: and his father and his mother that begat him shall thrust him through when he prophesi-eth. 4. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the prophets shall be ashamed every one of his vision, when he hath prophesied:
neither shall they wear a rough garment to deceive: 5. But he shall say, I am no pro-het, I am a husbandman; for man taught me to keep cattle from my youth. 6. And one shall say unto him, What are these wounds in thy hands? Then he shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends.

Behold the Lamb of God
taking away the sin of the world, the sin of the church; for therefore was the Son of God manifested, to take away our sin, 1 John iii. 5.

1. He takes away the guilt of sin by the blood of his cross; (v. 1.) In that day, in the gospel-day, there shall be a fountain opened, provision made, for the cleansing of all those from the pollutions of sin, who truly repent, and are sorry for them. In that day, when the Spirit of grace is poured out, to set them a mourning for their sins, they shall not mourn as those who have no hope, but they shall have their sins pardoned, and the comfort of it in their bosoms. Their consciences shall be purified and placated by the Spirit of grace, which cleanses from all sin, 1 John i. 7. For Christ is exalted to give both repentance and remission of sins; and where he gives the one, no doubt, he gives the other. This fountain opened is the pierced side of Jesus Christ, spoken of just before, (ch. xii. 10.) for thence came there out blood and water, and both for cleansing. And those who look upon Christ pierced, and mourn for their sins that pierced him, and are therefore in bitterness for him, may look again upon Christ pierced, and rejoice in him, because it pleased the Lord thus to smite this Rock, that the blood and water should come out, and the Spirit, to bring forth salvation, to purify us from sins, and to cause us to live in the fear of God.

See here, 1. How we are polluted; we are all so; we have sinned, and sin is uncleanness, it defiles the mind and conscience, renders us odious to God, and uneasy in ourselves, unfit to be employed in the service of God, and admitted into communion with him, as those who were ceremonially uncleane were sent out of the sanctuary. The house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem are under sin, which is an immense uncleanness. The truth is, we are all as an unclean thing, and deserve to have our portion with the unclean. 2. How we may be purified. Behold, there is a fountain opened for us to wash in, and there are streams flowing to us from that fountain, so that if we be not made clean, it is our own fault. The blood of Christ, and God’s pardoning mercy in that blood, were a fountain, more particularly, to the new creation in Christ, the New Testament, (v. 6.) as a fountain; for there is in it an inexhaustible ful-ness. There is mercy enough in God, and merit enough in Christ, for the forgiving of the greatest sins and sinners, upon gospel-terms. Such were some of you, but you are washed, 1 Cor. vi. 11.
Under the law, there was a brazen laver, and a brazen sea, to wash in; those were but vessels, but we have a fountain to apply ourselves to, overflowing in these; it is a fountain opened; for, who ever will, may come, and take the benefit of it; it is opened, not only to the house of David, but to the inhabitants of Jerusalem; to the poor and mean as well as to the rich and great; or, it is opened for all believers, who, as the spiritual seed of Christ, are of the house of David, and, as living members of the church, are inhabitants of Jerusalem.
Through Christ all that believe are justified, are washed from their sins in his blood, that may be made to our God kings and priests, Rev. i. 5, 6.

II. He takes away the dominion of sin by the power of his grace, even of beloved sins; this evermore accompanies the former, those that are washed in the fountain opened, as they are justified, so they are sanctified; the sinner came with the blood out of the pierced side of Christ. It is here promised that in that day,

1. Idolatry shall be quite abolished, and the people of the Jews shall be effectually cured of their inclination to it; (v. 2.) I will cut off the names of the idols out of the land. The worship of the ids of their fathers shall be so perfectly rooted out, that in one generation or two it shall be forgotten that ever there were such idols among them; they shall either not be named at all, or not with any respect;
they shall no more be remembered, as was promised, Hos. ii. 17. This was fulfilled in the rootet aversion which the Jews had, after the captivity, to idols and idolatry, and still retain to this day; it was fulfilled also in the ready conversion of many to the faith in one generation or two, that came to off from making an idol of the ceremonial law, as the unbelieving Jews did; and it is still in the fulfilling, when souls are brought off from the world and the flesh, those two great idols, that they may cleave to God only.

2. False prophecy shall also be brought to an end,
I. I will bring upon the prophets and the unclean spirits, the prophets that are under the influence of the unclean spirit, to pass out of the land; the devil is an unclean spirit, sin and uncleanness are from him;
he has his prophets, that serve his interests, and re ceive their instructions from him. Take away the unclean spirit, and the prophets would not deceive as they do take away the false prophets that produce sin commissions, and the unclean spirit could not do the mischief he does. When God designs the silencing of the false prophets, he banishes the unclean spirit out of the land, that wrought in them, and was a rival with him for the throne in the heart.

The church of the Jews, when they were addicted to idols, did also dote much upon false prophets, who flattered them with impunity and peace; but here it is promised, as a blessed effect of the promised reformation, that they should be very much set against false prophets, and zealous to clear the land of them; they were so after the captivity, till, through the blindness of their zeal against false prophets, they had put Christ to death under that character, and, after that, there arise many false christs and false prophets, and deceived many, Matth. xxiv. 11. It is here foretold,

(1.) That false prophets, instead of being indulged and favoured, should be brought to condition punishment even by their nearest relations, which would be as great an instance as any other of flagrant zeal against those decreed; for a son, or a brother, or a servant, or a servant maid, and shall speak lies in the name of the Lord, shall preach that which tends to draw people from God, and to confirm them in sin, his own parents shall be the first and most forward to prosecute him for it, according to law, (Deut. xiii. 6.—11.) If thy son entice thee secretly from God, thou shalt surely kill him. Show thy indignation against him, and prevent any corrupting influence from him. His father and his mother shall thrust him through when he prophesies. Note, We ought to conceive, and, always to retain, a very great desestation and dread of every thing that would draw us out of the way of our duty into by-paths, as these who cannot bear that which is evil, Rev. ii. 2. And holy zeal for God and godliness will make us hate sin, and dread temptation, most in those whomnature we love best, and who are nearest to us; there our danger is greatest, as Adam's from Eve, Job's from his wife; and there it will be the most praiseworthy to show our zeal, as Levi, who, in the cause of God, did not acknowledge his brethren, or know his own children, Deut. xxxiii. 9. Thus we must hate and forsake our nearest relations, when they become enemies to God, and go contrary to duty to us, Luke xiv. 26. Natural affections, even the strongest, must be overruled by gracious affections.

(2.) That false prophets should be themselves convinced of their sin and folly, and let fall their pretensions; (v. 4.) The prophets shall be ashamed every one of his vision: they shall not repeat it, or insist upon it, but desire that it may be forgotten and no more said of it; being ready themselves to own it was a sham; either because God has by his grace awakened their consciences, and showed them their error, or because the event disproves their predictions, and gives them the lie, or, because their prophecies do not meet with such a favourable reception as they used to meet with, but are generally despised and detested; they perceive that the people are not on the same ground with them, which makes them begin to be ashamed of themselves. And therefore they shall no longer wear a rough garment, or garment of hair, as the true prophets used to do, in imitation of Elijah, and in token of their being morbidly to the pleasures and delights of sense. The pretenders had appeared in the habit of true prophets, as a false prophet, they also, in their grossest and grossest imposture, they shall lay it aside, no more to deceive and impose upon unthinking, unwary people by it. A modest dress is a very good thing, if it be the genuine indication of a humble heart, and is to instruct: but it is a bad thing, if it be the hypocritical disguise of a proud, ambitious heart, and is to deceive. Let them, like false prophets, put on a rough garment, but, be not so seem to be better than really they are. This pretender, as a true penitent, [1.] Shall not deceive those whom he had imposed upon; He shall say, "I am no prophet, as I have pretended to be, was never designed or set apart to the office, never educated or brought up for it, never conversant among the sons of the prophets; I am a husbandman, and work truly at my business; I was never taught of God to prophecy, but taught of man to keep cattle." Amos was originally such a one too, and yet was afterward called to be a prophet. Amos vii. 14. 15. But this deceiver never had any such call. Note, Those who sorrow after a godly sort for having deceived others, will be forward to confess their sin, and will be just as apt to rectify the mistakes they have been the cause of. Thus they who had used curious arts, when they were converted showed their deeds, and by what fallacies they had cheated the people, Acts xix. 18. [2.] He shall return to his own proper employment, which is the fittest for him; I will be a husbandman; (so it may be read;) I will apply myself to what is my business, and shall do with things that belong not to me; for man taught me to keep cattle from my youth, and cattle I will again keep, and never set up for a preacher any more. Note, When we are convinced that we are gone out of the way of our duty, we must evidence the truth of our repentance by returning to it again, though it be the severest mortification to us. [3.] He shall acknowledge that all his friends, by a severe discipline were instrumental to bring him to a sight of his error, v. 6. When he who with the greatest assurance had asserted himself so lately to be a prophet, suddenly drops his chims, and says, I am no prophet, every body will be surprised at it, and, some will ask, What are these wounds, or marks of stripes, in thine hands? How came thou by them? Hast thou not been examined by scourging? And is not that it that has brought thee to thyself? (Vexatio dat intellectum—Vexation shortens the intellect.) "Hast thou not been beaten into this acknowledgment? Was it not the rod and reproof that gave thee this wisdom?" And he shall own, Yes, it was, these are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends, they were inflicted upon me; and I was no friend, but a man, lonely and severely, as a distracted man, and so brought me to my senses." By this it appears that those parents of the false prophet, that thrust him through, (v. 3.) did not do it till they had first tried to reclaim him by correction, and he would not be reclaimed; for so was the law concerning a disobedient son—his parents must first have chastened him in vain, before they were allowed to bring him forth to be stoned, Deut. xxi. 18, 19. But here is another, who was reduced by stripes, and so prevented the capital punishment; and he had the sense and honesty to own that they were his friends, his real friends, who thus wounded him, that they might reclaim him; for faithful are the wounds of a friend, Prov. xxvii. 6. Some good interpreter, who read how soon this comes after the mention of Christ's being hiercled, think that these are the words of that great Prophet, not of the false prophet spoken of before. Christ was wounded in his hands, when they were nailed to the cross, and, after his resurrection, he had the marks of these wounds; and here he tells how he came by them; he received them for the chief priests called him a deceiver, and upon that account would have him crucified; but he received them in the house of his friends—the Jews, who should have been his friends; for he came to his own: and though they were his bitter enemies, even yet he was pleased to call them his friends, as he did Judas; (Friend, wherefore art thou come?) because they forwarded his success—indeed, he called Peter Satan, as an adversary, because he dissuaded him from them.

7. Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of hosts: smite the Shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered; and I will turn my hand upon the little ones.

8. And it shall come to pass, that in all the land, saith the Lord, two parts therein shall be cut off, and die; but the third shall be left therein. And I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried: they shall call on my name, and I will hear them; I will say, It is my people; and they shall say, The Lord is my God.

Here is a prophecy,

1. Of the sufferings of Christ, of him who was to be the Fountain opened. Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd, v. 7. These are the words of God the Father, giving order and commission to the sword of his justice to awake against his Son, when he had voluntarily made his soul an offering for sin; for it pleased the Lord to bruise him, and put him to grief; and he was stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted, Isa. lii. 10.

1. Of the rejection and ruin of the unbelieving Jews; (v. 9.) for this word has and shall have, its accomplishment, in the destruction of the corrupt and hypocritical part of the church. It shall come to pass that in all the land of Israel two parts shall be cut off, and die; the Roman army laid the country waste, and slew at least two-thirds of the Jews. Some understand by the cutting off, and dying, of two parts in all the earth, the abolishing of heathenism and Judaism, that Christianity, the third part, might be left to reign alone. The Jewish worship was quite taken away by the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple. And, some time after, pagan idolatry was in a manner extirpated, when the empire became Christian.

3. Of the reformation and preservation of the chosen remnant, those of them that believed, and the Christian church in general; (v. 9.) The third part shall be left; when Jerusalem and Judea were destroyed, all the Christians in that country, having among them the warning Christ gave them to flee to the mountains, shifted for their own safety, and were sheltered in a city called Pella, on the other side Jordan. We have here, first, the trials, and then, the triumphs, of the Christian church, and of its great Head, the true Shepherd, while the world is in a state of ruin; I will bring that third part through the fire of affliction, and will refine and try them as silver and gold are refined and tried. This was fulfilled in the persecutions of the primitive church, the fiery trial which tried the people of God then, 1 Pet. iv. 12. Those whom God sets apart for himself must pass through a probation and purification in this world; they must be tried and tumbled in the furnace of affliction, as Abraham's faith was when it was tried by the command given him to offer up Isaac; Now know I that thou fearest me. They must be tried, that both they that are perfect, and they that are not, may be made manifest. They must be refined from their dross, their corruption must be purged out, they must be enlightened with the light of knowledge and grace. (1 Pet. i. 6, 7.) As Abraham's faith was when it was tried by the command given him to offer up Isaac, Now know I that thou fearest me. They must be tried, that both they that are perfect, and they that are not, may be made manifest. They must be refined from their dross, their corruption must be purged out, they must be enlightened with the light of knowledge and grace.

[1.] Their communion with God is their triumph; They shall call on my name, and I will hear them. They write to God by prayer, and receive from him answers of peace, and thus keep up a comfortable communion with him; this honour have all his saints.

[2.] Their covenant with God is their triumph; I will say, It is my people, whom I have chosen and loved, and will own; and they shall say, The Lord is my God, and a God all-sufficient to me; and in him they shall boast every day, and all the day long. This God is our God for ever and ever."

CHAP. XIV.

Livers things were foretold, in the two foregoing chapters, which should come to pass in that day; this chapter speaks of that coming to pass of his judgments and ten times in the foregoing chapters, and seven times in this, it is repeated, in that day; but what that day is, that is here meant, is uncertain, and perhaps will be the day of his coming, and the setting up of his kingdom upon the ruins of the Jewish policy, we cannot determine; but divers passages here seem to look as far forward as gospel-times. Now the day of the Lord brings with it both judgment and mercy; mercy to his church, judgment to his enemies and persecutors. 1. The gates of hell are here threatening the church, (v. 1. 2.) and yet not prevailing. II. The power of heaven appears here for the church, and against the enemies of it, v. 3. 4. 5. III. The events concerning the church are here represented as mixed, (v. 6. 7.) but issuing well at last. IV. The spreading of the means of knowledge is here foretold, and the setting up of the gospel-kingdom in the world, (v. 8. 9.) which shall be the enlargement and establishment of another Jerusalem, v. 10. 11. V. Those shall be reckoned with, that fought against Jerusalem, (v. 12. 13.) and those that neglect his worship there, v. 12. 13. VI. It is promised that there shall be great report to the church, and great purity and piety in it, v. 16, 20, 21.

1. BEHOLD, the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. 2. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. 3. Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle. 4. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east; and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south. 5. And ye shall flee to the valley of the mountains; for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal; yea, ye shall flee, like as ye fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah king of Judah; and the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee. 6. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the light shall not be clear, nor dark: 7. But it shall be one day which shall be known to the Lord, not day, nor night: but it shall come to pass, that at evening-time it shall be light.

God's providences concerning his church are here represented as strangely changing, and strangely mixed. Sometimes the tide runs high and strong against them, but presently it turns, and comes to be in favour of them; and God has, for wise and holy ends, set the one over against the other.

1. God here appears against Jerusalem; judgment begins at the house of God, when God's day begins. 2. When the Lord comes, (v. 1.) Jerusalem must pass through the fire to be refined. God himself gathers all nations against Jerusalem, to battle, (v. 2.) he gives them a charge as he did Sennacherib, to take the spoil, and to take the prey, (Isa. x. 6.) for the people of Jerusalem are now become the people of his wrath. And who can stand before him, or before his presence? Will he go over them? In his combustion he will give success; the city shall be taken by the Romans, who have nations at command; the houses shall be rifled, and all the riches of them taken away by the enemy, and to gratify an insatiable lust of uncleanness as well as avarice, the women shall be ravished; as it was said in the last chapter, (Isa. xxvii. 10.) strange shall they take of his seed with a full face.

2. He presently changes his way, and appears for Jerusalem; for though judgment begins at the house of God, yet, as it shall not end there, so it shall not make a full end, nor to Jerusalem, in a particular way, in that city.

(1.) A remnant shall be spared; the same with that third part spoken of, ch. xiii. 8. One half shall go into captivity, whence they may hereafter be fetched back; and the residue of the people shall not be cut off, as one would have feared, from the city. Many of the Jews shall receive the gospel, and so shall prevent their being cut off from the city of God, his church upon earth. In it shall be a tenth, Isa. vi. 13. See Ezek. v. 3.

(2.) Their cause shall be pleaded against their enemies; (v. 3.) Then when God has made use of these nations as a scourge to his people, he shall go forth, and fight against them, by his judgments, as when he fought against the enemies of his church formerly, in the day of battle, with the Egyptians, Canaanites, and others. Note, The instruments of God's wrath will themselves be made the objects of it; for it will come to their turn to drink of the cup of trembling; and whom God fights against he will be sure to overcome, and be too hard for. And every former day of battle, which God has made to his people a day of triumph, as it is an engagement to stand and appear for his people, because he is the same, so in a parable it is said, Isa. lxxvii. 10. God is answered to him. It is observable that the Roman empire never flourished after the destruction of Jerusalem as it had done before, but in many instances God fought against it.

(3.) Though Jerusalem and the temple be destroyed, yet God will have a church in the world, into which Gentiles shall be admitted, and with whom the believing Jews shall be incorporated, Zechar. 4. 5. These verses are dark, and hard to be understood; but divers good expositors take this to be the meaning of them. [1.] God will carefully inspect Jerusalem, even then when the enemies of it are laying it waste; His feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, whence he may take a survey of the city and temple, Mark xiii. 3. When the refining fire sets him on it, he will stand by it, and has his eye upon it, to see that it receive no damage; so, when Jerusalem, God's gold, is to be refined, he will have the oversight of it. He will stand by upon the mount of Olives; this was literally fulfilled when our Lord Jesus was often upon this mountain, especially when from thence he ascended up into heaven, Acts i. 12. It was the last place on which his feet stood on this earth, the place from which he took rise. [2.] The partition-wall between Jews and Gentiles shall be taken away. The mountains about Jerusalem, and particularly this, signifies it to be an enclosure, and that it stood in the way of those who would approach to it. Between the Gentiles and Jerusalem this mountain shall be made to cleave in the midst, and so the Jewish pale shall be taken down, and the church be opened to the Gentiles. You must, therefore, consider it, one with the Jews by the breaking down of this middle wall of partition, Eph. ii. 14. Who art thou, O great mountain? And a great mountain the ceremonial law was in the way of the Jews' conversion, which, one would think, could never have been got over; yet before Christ and his gospel it was made plain: this mountain departs, this hill removes, but the covenant of peace cannot be broken; for peace is still preached to him that is afar off, and to them that are nigh. [3.] A new and living way shall be opened to the New Jerusalem both to see it, and to come into it. The mountain being divided, one half toward the north, and the other half toward the south, there shall be a very great valley, a broad way of communication opened between Jerusalem and the Gentiles. Gentiles, who come in, have free admission into the gospel-Jerusalem, and the word of the Lord, that goes forth from Jerusalem, shall have a free course into the Gentile world. Thus the way of the Lord is prepared, for every mountain and hill shall be brought low, and plain and pleasant valleys shall come in the room of them, Isa. xi. 4. [4.] Those of the Jews that believe shall come in, and join themselves to the Gentiles, and incorporate with them in the gospel-church: Ye shall flee to the valley of the mountains, that valley which is opened between the divided halves of the mount of Olives; they shall hasten into the church with the Gentiles, as formerly the Gentiles with them, ch. viii. 23. The valley of the mountains is the gospel-church, to which there were added of the Jews daily such as should be saved, who fled to that valley as to their refuge. This valley of the mountains is said to reach unto Azal, or to the separate place, to all those whom God has set apart for himself. When God makes his mountains a way, (Isa. lxix. 11.) by making them a valley, the way shall be open to all the way-faring men, (Isa. xxxv. 8.) and, though fools, they shall not err therein. Or, to those that are now separated, and have been able to come, are these Gentiles, who are afar off, shall be made nigh with the Jews, who are a people near unto him, and both have an access, a mutual access, to each other, and a joint access to God as a Father by one Spirit, Eph. ii. 18. [5.] They shall flee to the valley of the mountains, to the gospel-church, under dreadful apprehensions of their danger from the curse of the law. They shall flee from the wrath to come, from the avenger of blood, who is in pursuit of them, to the church as to a city of refuge, or as doves to their windows, as they fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uziah, Amos i. 1. Therefore the gospel reveals the wrath of God from heaven, (Rom. i. 18.) that we might be awakened to escape for our lives, to flee as from an earthquake, for we feel the earth tremble, which seems to sink under us, and we find no firm footing to rest our feet on, as the prophet does, Christ, in whom alone we can stand fast, and be easy. [4.] God shall appear in his glory, for the accomplishing of all this; The Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee; which may refer to his coming to destroy Jerusalem, or to destroy the enemies of Jerusalem, or his coming to set up his kingdom in the world, which is called the coming of the Son of man, (Math. xxiv. 37.) or to his last coming, at the end of time; however, it teaches us, (1.) That the Lord will come; it has been the faith of all the saints, Behold, the Lord comes to fulfil every word that he has spoken in its season. (2.) When he comes, all his saints come with him; they attend his motions, and are ready to serve his interests; Christ will come at the end of time with ten thousand of his saints, as when he came to give the law upon mount Sinai. [5.] Every particular believer, being related to God as his God, may be firmly in the expectation of his coming, and speak of it with pleasure, The Lord my God shall come, shall come, to the comfort of all that are his; for, “Blessed Lord, all the saints shall be with thee, and it shall be their everlasting happiness to dwell in thy presence; and therefore come Lord Jesus.” And some think that this may be read as a prayer, Yet, O Lord my God, come, and lye all the saints with thee. II. God's providences appear here strangely mixed; (v. 6, 7.) In that day of the Lord the light shall not be clear nor dark, not day nor night. It is so with the church of God in this world; where the Sun of righteousness is risen, it cannot be dark night, and yet, short of heaven, it will not be clear day. It is so with particular saints, they are not darkness, but light in the Lord, and yet, while there are so much error and corruption remaining in them, it is not perfect day. So it is as to the providences of God that relate to his church in general; the affairs of the church are neither good nor bad in any extremity, but there is a mixture of both, we are singing both of mercy and judgment, and are uncertain which will prevail; whether it be an evening or a morning twilight. We are between hope and fear, not knowing what to make of things. 2. An intimation of comfort with reference hereunto. It shall be one day which shall be known in the Lord. This intimates, (1.) The beauty and harmony of such a day, for one and the same design and tendency in all; all the wheels make but one wheel, all the revolutions but one day. (2.) The brevity of them: it is as it were but for one day, for a little moment; the cloud that darkens the light will soon blow over. (3.) The eye God has upon all these events, and the hand he has in them all; they are known to the Lord; he takes notice of them, and orders and disposes of all for the best, according to the counsel of his will. 3. An issue very joyful secured at last; At evening-time it shall be light; it shall be clear light, and no longer dark; we are sure of it in the other world, and we hope for it in this world—at evening-time, when our hopes are quite spent with waiting all day to no purpose, yet, when we fear it will be quite dark, when things are at the worst, in the case of the church, most deplorable. As to the church's enemies, the sun goes down at noon, so to the church it rises at night; unto the upright springs light out of darkness, (Ps. cxii. 4.) deliverance comes when the tale of bricks is doubled, and when God's people had done looking for it, and so it comes with a pleasing surprise. 8. And it shall be in that day, that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea: in summer and in winter shall it be. 9. And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one. 10. All the land shall be turned as a plain from Geba to Rimmon, south of Jerusalem: and it shall be lifted up, and inhabited in her place, from Benjamin's gate unto the place of the first gate, unto the corner gate, and from the tower of Hananeel unto the king's wine-presses. 11. And men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction; but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited. 12. And this shall be the plague wherewith the Lord will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem; Their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth. 13. And it shall come to pass in that day, that a great tumult from the Lord shall be among them; and they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbour, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbour. 14. And Judah also shall fight at Jerusalem: and the wealth of all the heathen round about shall be gathered together, gold, and silver, and apparel, in great abundance. 15. And so shall be the plague of the horse, of the mule, of the camel, and of the ass, and of all the beasts that shall be in these tents, as this plague.

Here are, 1. Blessings promised to Jerusalem, the gospel-Jerusalem, in the day of the Messiah, and to all the earth, by virtue of the blessings poured out on Jerusalem, especially to the land of Israel. 2. Jerusalem shall be a spring of living waters to the world; it was made so when there the Spirit was poured out upon the apostles, and thence the word of the Lord diffused itself to the nations about; (v. 8.) Living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; for there they began, and thence they set out, who were to preach repentance and remission of sins unto all nations, Luke xxiv. 47. Note, Where the gospel goes, and the graces of God's Spirit go along with it, there living waters go; those streams that make glad the city of our God, make glad the country also; and thence they go on, like the Grasse of the Lord, which was well watered. It was the honour of Jerusalem, that from thence the word of the Lord went forth (Isa. ii. 3.) and thus far, even in its worst and most degenerate age, for old acquaintance's sake, it was made a blessing, and to be so is to be blessed. Half of these waters shall go toward the former sea, and half toward the hinder sea, as all rivers bend their course toward some sea or other, some eastward, others westward; the gospel shall spread into all parts of the world, some that lie remote from Jerusalem one way, and others that lie as far off another way; for the dominion of the Redeemer, which was thereby to be set up, must be from sea to sea. (Ps. lxvii. 8.) and the earth must be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea, and as the waters that in various channels run to the sea. The knowledge of God shall diffuse itself, (1.) Every way. These living waters shall produce both eastern churches and western churches, that shall each of them in their turn be illustrious. (2.) Every way; in summer and in winter. Those who are employed in spreading the gospel, may find themselves work both winter and summer, and are to serve the Lord therein at all seasons, Acts xx. 18. And such a divine power goes along with these living waters, that they shall not be dried up, or the course of them be obstructed, either by the droughts in summer, or by the floods in winter. 2. The kingdom of God among men shall be a universal and united kingdom, v. 9. (1.) It shall be a universal kingdom; The Lord shall be King over all the earth. He is, and ever was so, of right; and in the sovereign disposals of his providence, his kingdom rules over all, and none are exempt from his jurisdiction; but it is here promised that he shall be so, by actual possession of the hearts of his subjects; he shall be acknowledged King by all in all places; his authority shall be owned and submitted to, and allegiance sworn to him. This will have its accomplishment with that word, (Rev. xi. 15.) The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. (2.) It shall be a united kingdom; There shall be one Lord, and one faith, one baptism, one God, and one Mediator between God and men, one Jesus Christ, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness, and the forgiveness of sins, that is in him; and shall be unanimous in the worship of him. All false gods shall be abandoned, and all false ways of worship abolished; and as God shall be the Centre of their unity, in whom they shall all meet, so the scripture shall be the rule of their unity, by which they shall all walk. 3. The land of Judea, and Jerusalem, its mother-city, shall be inhabited and replenished, and taken under the special protection of Heaven, v. 10, 11. Some think this speaks particular favour to the people of the Jews, and points at their conversion, and restoration in the latter days; but it is rather to be understood figuratively of the gospel-church, typified by Judah and Jerusalem, and it signifies the abundant graces with which the church shall be crowned, and the fruitfulness of its members and the vast numbers of them. (1.) The church shall be like a fruitful country, abounding in all the rich products of the soil. The whole land of Judea, which is naturally uneven and hilly, shall be turned as a plain; it shall become a smooth, level valley, from Gebu, or Gibeah, its utmost border north, to Rimmon which lay south of Jerusalem, and was the utmost southern limit of Judea. The gospel of Christ, where it comes in its power, leveleth the ground, mountains and hills are brought low by it, that the Lord alone may be exalted. (2.) It shall be like a populous city. As the holy land shall be levelled, so the holy city shall be peopled, shall be rebuilt and replenished. Jerusalem shall be lifted up out of its low estate, shall be raised out of its sitting-place, which shall be turned into a plain, and not only the mount of Olives removed; Acts vii. 42, but other mountains too, then Jerusalem shall be lifted up, shall appear the more conspicuous; she shall be inhabited in her place, even in Jerusalem, ch. xii. 6. The whole city shall be inhabited in the utmost extent of it, and no part of it left to lie waste. The utmost limits of it are here mentioned, betwixt which there shall be no room for any idol; from thence, from Benjamin's gate north-east, to the corner-gate north-west, and from the tower of Hananeel in the south, to the king's wine-presses in the north; when the churches of Christ in all places are replenished with great numbers of holy, humble, serious Christians, and many such are daily added to it, then this promise is fulfilled. (3.) This coun try and this city shall both be safe, both the men in the country, and the mouths in the city; they that dwell in it shall dwell securely, and there shall be none to make them afraid; there shall be no more of that utter destruction that has laid both town and country waste, no more anathema, (as some read it,) no more cutting off, no more curse, or separation from God to evil, no more such desolating judgments as you have been growing under, but Jerusalem shall be safety and salvation, and shall have not only the church the instrument of the redemption of it; neither shall its friends be fearful to disquiet themselves, nor its enemies formidable to disquiet them. That promise of Christ explains this—that the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church; and so do the holy security and serenity of mind which believers enjoy in relying on the divine protection.

11. Here are judgments threatened against the enemies of the church, that have fought, or do fight, against Jerusalem; and the threatening of these judgments is in order to the preservation of the church in safety. Men that read and hear of these plagues, will be afraid of fighting against Jerusalem, much more, when these threatenings are fulfilled in some, will others hear and fear. These that fight against the city of God, and his people, whom the Lord fought against, God will make them none ever hardened his heart, and prospered; (v. 12.) This shall be the plague wherewith the Lord will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem; whoever they are, God will punish them for the affront done to him, and avenge Jerusalem upon them.

1. They shall waste away under grievous and languishing diseases; Their flesh shall consume away, and they shall be miserably emaciated, even while they stand on their feet, so that they shall be walking skeletons, nothing shall remain but skin and bones. The flesh which they pampered and indulged, and made provision for, when they were fed to the full with the spoils of God's people, shall now consume away, that it cannot be seen, and the bones that were not seen shall stick out, Job xxxiii.
21. They keep their feet, and hope to keep their ground, crawling about as long as they can; but they must yield at last. The organs of sight, the outlets of sin, their eyes, shall consume away, in their holes, shall sink into their heads, or perhaps start out of them; their envious, malicious, adulterous eyes, the eyes they had so often fed with what they had done, and the drug of the enemy, shall make not only their countenances ghastly, but their lives wretched. The organs of speech, the outlets of sin, their tongue, shall consume away in their mouth; whereby God will reckon with them for all their blasphemies against himself, and inventives against his people. Thus their own tongues shall fall upon them, and their punishment shall be equally in their sin, as his was, whose tongue was tormented in hell flames. Thus Antichus and Herod consumed away.

2. They shall be dashed in pieces one against another; (v. 13.) A great tumult from the Lord shall be among them. But are tumults from the Lord, who is the God of order, and not of confusion? As they are the sin of those that raise them, they are to fear the Lord, but from the wicked creeping from men's own lusts; but as they are the punishment of those that suffer by them, they are from the Lord, who serves his own purposes, and carries on his intentions, by the sins and follies, and restless spirits, of men. It is of themselves that they bite and devour one another, but it is of the Lord, the righteous Judge, that thus they are consumed one of another; (Gal. v. 13.) as Ahab was denounced by a lying spirit from the Lord, so Abime-lech and the men of Shechem were divided, and so destroyed, by an evil spirit from the Lord, Judg.
ix. 25. Note, Those that are confederate and combined against the church, will justly be separated, and set against one another; and their tumults raised against God will be avenged in tumults among themselves. And they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbour, to hold him from striking, or to bind him as his prisoner; nay, his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbour, to come in the name of his Lord and God. Note, The Lord shall destroy the church are often made to destroy one another; and every man's sword is sometimes set against his fellow, by him whose sword they all are.

Some think this was fulfilled in the factions and dissensions that were among the Jews, when the Romans were destroying them all; for they had fought against the spiritual Jerusalem, the gospel-church, and to that well enough agree, v. 18. Thou also,
O Jeshurun, shalt fight against Jerusalem; the Jewish nation shall be ruined by itself, shall die by its own hands; the city and country shall be at war with each other, and so both shall be destroyed. Susis et ipsa Roma viribusruit—Rome was urged into ruin by its very strength.

3. The plunder of their camp shall greatly enrich the people of God, or the spirits of their country; (v. 14.) And, as ye have done all evil at Jerusalem, (so one learned interpreter reads it,) people shall come from all parts to share in the prey; as when Senn-acherib's army was routed before Jerusalem, there was the prey of a great spoil divided, (Isa. xxxiii.
23.) so it shall be now; the wealth of all the heathen round about, that had spoiled Jerusalem, shall be gathered together, gold, and silver, and apparel, in great abundance, that an equal division may be made among all the parties entitled to a share of the prize. Note, The wealth of the sinner is often dailed up for the just, and the Israel of God enriched with the spoil of the Egyptians.

4. The very cattle shall share in the plague with which the enemies of God's church shall be cut off;
as they did in divers of the plagues of Egypt; (v.
15.) All the beasts that shall be in the tents of these wicked men, when God comes to contend with them, shall perish with them; not only beasts used in war as the horse, but those used for travel, or in the plough, as the mule, the camel, and the ass.
Note, The inferior creatures often suffer for the sin of man, and in his plagues. Thus God will show his indignation against sin, and will make the creatures of the earth, which have been made to vary, great to be delivered into the glorious liberty of the children of God, Rom. viii. 21, 22.

16. And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles.

17. And it shall be, that whose will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain. 18. And if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, that have no rain, there shall be the plague wherewith the Lord will smite the heathen that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. 19. This shall be the punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. 20. In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses.
HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD; and the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls before the altar. 21. Yea, every pot in Jerusalem, and in Judah, shall be Holiness unto the Lord of hosts; and all they that sacrifice shall come and take of them, and seethe therein: and in that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of hosts.

Three things are here foretold.
1. That a gospel-way of worship being set up in the church, there shall be a great resort to it, and a general attendance upon it. Those that were left of the enemies of religion, shall be so sensible of the mercy of God to them in their narrow escape, that they shall apply themselves to the worship of the God of Israel, and pay their homage to him, v. 16. Those that were not consumed, shall be converted, and this makes their deliverance a mercy indeed, a double mercy; it is a great change that the grace of God makes upon them; they that had come against Jerusalem, finding their attempts vain and despicable, would have been ashamed and abashed, as ever they had been her adversaries, and shall come to Jerusalem, to worship there, and go in concurrence with those whom they had gone contrary to.

Note, As some of Christ's foes shall be made his footstool, so others of them shall be made his friends; and when the principle of enmity is slain in them, their former acts of hostility are harkened to them, and their services are admitted and accepted, as though they had never fought against Jerusalem. They shall go up to worship at Jerusalem, because that was the place which God had chosen, and there the temple was, which was a type of Christ and his mediation. Converting grace sets us right. 1. In the object of our worship. They shall no longer worship the Moabs and Baals, the kings and lords, that the Gentiles worship, the creatures of their own imagination, but the King, the Lord of hosts, the everlasting King, the King of kings, the sovereign Lord of all. 2. In the ordinances of worship, those which God himself has appointed. Gospel-worship is here represented by the keeping of the feast of tabernacles, for the sake of those two great graces which were in a special manner vouchsafed to them in their deliverance from the world, and joy in God, Neh. vii. 17.

The life of a good Christian is a constant feast of tabernacles, and, in all acts of devotion, we must retire from the world, and rejoice in the Lord; worship as in that feast. 3. In the Mediator of our worship; we must go to Christ our Temple with all our offerings, for in him only our spiritual sacrifices are acceptable to God, 1 Pet. ii. 5. If we rest in ourselves, we come short of pleasing God; we must go up to him, and mention his righteousness only. 4. In the time of it; we must be constant. They shall go up from year to year, at the times appointed for this solemn feast. Every day of a Christian's life is a day of the feast of tabernacles, and every Lord's day especially, that is the great day of the feast; and therefore every day we must worship the Lord of hosts, and every Lord's day with a peculiar solemnity.

II. That those who neglect the duties of gospel-worship, shall be reckoned with for their neglect. God will compel them to come and worship before him, by suspending his favours from those that keep not his ordinances; Upon them there shall be no rain, v. 17. And if they do not come to Jerusalem, there shall be no rain, (Hag. ii. 17.) and so were they that neglected to attend there when it was built. If we be barren and unfruitful toward God, justly is the earth made so to us. Many are crossed, and go backward, in their affairs, and this is at the bottom of it—they do not keep close to the worship of God, as they should; they go off from God, and then he walks contrary to them. If we omit or postpone the duties he expects from us, it is just with him to deny the favours we expect from him.

But what shall be done to the defaulters of the land of Egypt, to whom the threatening of the want of rain is no threatening, for they have no rain at any time, they need none, they desire none; the river Niles is to them instead of the clouds of heaven, and the streams of waters and rivers of rain, so that what is a punishment to others, is none to them, v. 18, 19. It is threatened that if the family of Egypt go not up, that have no rain, yet God will find out a way to meet with them, for there shall be, in effect, the same plague wherewith other nations are smitten for their neglect. God can, and often did, restrain the overflowing of the river, which was equivalent to the Shuttings up of the clouds; or if the river did its part, and rose as high as it used to do, God had other ways of bringing famine upon them, and destroying the fruits of their ground, as he did by divers of the ten plagues of Egypt, so that this, that is, the same, shall be the punishment of Egypt to that is the punishment of other nations, who come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. Note, Those who think themselves least indebted to, and depending on, the mercy of Heaven, cannot therefore think themselves guarded against the justice of Heaven. It does not follow that those who can live without rain, can therefore live without God; for not the heavens only, but all other creatures are that to us, (and more,) that God makes them to be; nor can any man's way of living enable them to get light by their own inventions, and to escape the punishment (margin,) This shall be the sin of Egypt, and the sin of all nations, that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. The same word signifies both sin and the punishment of sin, so close and inseparable is the connexion between them; (as Gen. iv. 7.) and sin is often its own punishment. Note, Omissions are sins, and we must come into judgment for them; those contract guilt, that go not up to worship at the times appointed, as they have opportunity; and it is a sin that is its own punishment, for those who forsake the duty, forfeit the privilege, of communion with God.

III. That those who perform the duties of gospel-worship, shall have grace to adorn their profession by the duties of a gospel-conversation too. This is justified by the blessings conferred on them. This shall be complecting the beauty and happiness of the church. In general, all shall be Holiness to the Lord. 1. The name and character of holiness shall not be so confused as it had been; Holiness to the Lord had been written only upon the High Priest's forehead, but now it shall not be so appropriated. All Christians shall be living temples, and spiritual tabernacles, the sanctuary of God, and employed in his service. 2. Real holiness shall be more diffused than it had been; because there shall be more powerful means of sanctification, more ex zechariah, xiv.

excellent rules, more cogent arguments, and brighter patterns, of holiness; and because there shall be a more plentiful effusion of the Spirit of holiness and sanctification, after Christ's ascension, than ever before.

1. There shall be holiness introduced into common things; and those things shall be devoted to God, as that seemed very foreign.

1. The furniture of their horses shall be consecrated to God; Upon the bells of the horses shall be engraved, Holiness to the Lord, or upon the bridles of the horses, (so the margin,) or the trappings. The horses used in war shall no longer be used against God and his people, as they have been, but for him and them. Even their war shall be holy wars; their troopers serving under God's banner. Their great men, who ride in state with a pompous retinue, shall reckon it their greatest ornament to honour God with their honours. Holiness to the Lord shall be written on the harness of their chariot-horses, as great men have sometimes their coat of arms with their motto painted on their coaches; every gentleman shall take the High Priest's motto for his, and glory in it, and make it a memento to himself not to do anything unworthy of it. Travellers shall have it upon their bridles with which they guide their horses, as those who desire always to be put in mind of it, by having it continually before them, and to guide themselves in all their motions by this rule. The bells of the horses, which are designed to quicken them in their journey, and to give notice of their approach, shall have Holiness to the Lord upon them, to signify that this is that which we ought to be influenced by ourselves, and make profession of to others, wherever we go.

2. The furniture of their houses too shall be consecrated to God, to be employed in his service. First, The furniture of the priests' houses, or apartments adjoining to the house of the Lord. The common drinking-cups they used shall be like the bowls before the altar, that were used either to receive the blood of the sacrifices, or to present the wine and oil in, which were for the drink-offerings. The vessels which they used at their own tables, shall be used in such a religious manner, with such sobriety and temperance, such devotedness to the glory of God, and such a mixture of pious thoughts and expressions, that their meals shall look like sacrifices, they shall eat and drink, not to themselves, but to him that disperses their tables, and fills their cups. And thus, in ministers' families especially, should common actions be done after a godly sort, however they are done in other families. Secondly, The furniture of other houses, those of the common people; Every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness to the Lord. The pots in which they boiled their meat, the cups out of which they drank their wine, Jer. xxxvi. 5. In these, God's good creatures shall never be abused to excess, nor that made the food and fuel of lust, which should have been oil to the wheels of obedience, as had formerly been, when all tables were full of vomit and filthiness, Isa. xxviii. 8. What they eat and drink out of these shall nourish their bodies for the service of God; and out of these they shall give liberally for the relief of the poor; then are they Holiness to the Lord, as the merchandise and the hire of the converted Tyrians are said to be; (Isa. xxxi. 18.) for both in our gettings and in our spendings we must have an eye to the will of God as our rule, and the glory of God as our end. Thirdly, When there shall be such an abundance of real holiness, people shall not be nice and curious about ceremonial holiness; They that sacrifice, shall come, and take of these common vessels, and see thee their sacrifices therein, making no distinction between them and the bowls before the altar. In gospel-times the true worshippers shall worship God in spirit and in truth, and neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, John iv. 21. One place shall be as acceptable to God as another. I will that men pray every where; and one vessel shall be as acceptable as another. Little regard shall be had to the circumstance, provided there be nothing indecent or disorderly, while the substance is religiously preserved and adhered to. Some think it intimates that there should be greater numbers of sacrifices offered than the vessels of the sanctuary would serve for; but rather than any should be turned back or deferred, they shall make no difficulty at all of using common vessels, as the Levites in a case of necessity helped the priests to kill the sacrifices, 2 Chron. xxix. 34.

2. There shall be no unholiness introduced into their sacred things, to corrupt them. In that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of hosts. Some read it, There shall be no more the merchant; for so a Canaanite sometimes signifies; and they think it was fulfilled when Christ once and again drove the buyers and sellers out of the temple. Or, though those that were Canaanites, strangers and foreigners, shall be brought into the house of the Lord, yet they shall cease to be Canaanites; they shall have nothing of the spirit or disposition of Canaanites in them. Or, it intimates that though in gospel-times people should grow indifferent as to holy vessels, yet they should be very strict in church-discipline, and careful not to admit the profane to special ordinances, but to separate between the precious and the vile, between Israelites and Canaanites. Yet this will not have its full accomplishment, short of the heavenly Jerusalem, that house of the Lord of hosts, into which no unclean thing shall enter; for at the end of time, and not before, Christ shall gather out of his kingdom every thing that offends; and the tares and wheat shall be perfectly and eternally separated.
God's prophets were his witnesses to his church, each in his day, for several ages; witnesses for him and his authority, witnesses against sin and sinners, attesting the true intents of God's providences in his dealings with his people then, and the kind intentions of his grace concerning his church in the days of the Messiah, to whom all the prophets bare witness; for they all agreed in their testimony; and now we have only one witness more to call, and we have done with our evidence; and though he be the last, and in him prophecy ceased, yet the Spirit of prophecy shines as clear, as strong, as bright, in him, as in any that went before; and his testimony challenges an equal regard. The Jews say, Prophecy continued forty years under the second temple, and this prophet they call the seal of prophecy, because in him the series or succession of prophets broke off, and came to a period. God wisely ordered it so, that divine inspiration should cease for some ages before the coming of the Messiah, that that great Prophet might appear the more conspicuous and distinguishable, and be the more welcome. Let us consider,

I. The person of the prophet; we have only his name, Malachi, and no account of his country or parentage. Malachi signifies, my angel; which has given occasion for a conjecture that this prophet was indeed an angel from heaven, and not a man; as that, Judges ii. 1. But there is no just ground for the conjecture. Prophets were messengers, God's messengers; this prophet was so; his name is the very same with that which we find in the original, ch. iii. 1. for my messenger; and perhaps from that word he might (though, probably, he had another name) be called Malachi. The Chaldee Paraphrase, and some of the Jews, suggest that Malachi was the same with Ezra; but that also is groundless. Ezra was a scribe, but we never read that he was a prophet. Others, yet further from probability, make him to be Mordecai. But we have reason to conclude he was a person whose proper name was that by which he is here called; the tradition of some of the ancients is, that he was of the tribe of Zebulon, and that he died young.

II. The scope of the prophecy. Haggai and Zechariah were sent to reprove the people for delaying to build the temple; Malachi was sent to reprove them for the neglect of it, when it was built, and for their profanation of the temple-service; for from idolatry and superstition they ran into the other extreme of impiety and irreligion; and the sins he witnesses against are the same that we find complained of in Nehemiah's time, with whom, it is probable, he was contemporary. And now that prophecy was to cease, he speaks more clearly of the Messiah as nigh at hand, than any other of the prophets had done; and concludes with a direction to the people of God to keep in remembrance the law of Moses, while they were in expectation of the gospel of Christ.

This prophet is sent, first to convince, and then to comfort, first to discover sin, and to reprove for that, and then to promise the coming of him who shall take away sin; and this method the blessed Spirit takes, in dealing with souls, John xvi. 3. He first opens the wound, and then applies the cord (in this land and the prophet as he had pronounced) would think effectually) for the engaging of Israel to himself by providences and ordinances; but it seems, by the complaints here made of them, that they received the grace of God in both these, in vain. 1. They were very ungrateful to God for his favours to them, and rendered not again according to the benefit they received, v. 1. 2. They were very care less and remiss in the observance of his institutions, the priests especially so, who were in a particular manner charged with them, v. 6. 14. And what shall we say of those whom neither providences nor ordinances work upon, and who affront God in those very things wherein they should honour him?

1. THE burden of the word of the Lord to Israel by Malachi. 2. I have loved you, saith the Lord; yet ye say, Wherein hast thou loved us? Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the Lord; yet I loved Jacob, 3. And I hated Esau, and laid his mountains and his heritage waste for the dragons of the wilderness. 4. Whereas Edom saith, We are impoverished, but we will return and build the desolate places; thus saith the Lord of hosts, They shall build, but I will throw down; and they shall call them, The border of wickedness, and, The people against whom the Lord hath indignation for. 5. And your eyes shall see, and ye shall say, The Lord will be magnified from the border of Israel.

The prophecy of this book is entitled, The burden of the word of the Lord, (v. 1.) which intimates, 1. That it was of great weight and importance; what the false prophets said, was light as the chaff, what the true prophets said, was ponderous as the wheat, Jer. xxiii. 23. 2. That it ought to be often repeated to them and by them, as the burden of a song. That there were those to whom it was a burden, and a reproach; they were weary of it, and found themselves so aggrieved by it, that they were not able to bear it. 4. That to them it would prove a burden indeed, to sink them to the lowest hell, unless they repented. 5. That to those who loved it and embraced it, and bid it welcome, though it was a light burden, as our Saviour calls it, (Matt. xii. 30;) yet it was a burden. This burden of the word of the Lord was sent, (1.) To Israel, for to them pertaining the lively oracles of prophecies, as well as of those written word. Many prophets God had sent to Israel, and now he will try them with one more. (2.) By Malachi; by the hand of Malachi; as if it were not a message by word of mouth, but a letter put into his hand, for the greater certainty. In these verses, they are charged with ingratitude, in that they were not duly sensible of God's distinguishing goodness to them; and such a charge as this may well be called a burden, for it is a heavy one. 1. God asserts the great kindness he had, and had often expressed, for them; (v. 2.) I have loved you, saith the Lord. They abruptly do the service begin, as if God intended, whatever reproaches should be given to them, to reconcile him to their love, and to take care that they should still have good thoughts of him; As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten. Thus kindly does the sermon begin. God will have his people satisfied that he loves them, and is ever mindful of his love. This is the same with what he said of old to the virgin of Israel, that he might engage her affections to himself, (Jer. xxxii. 3, 4.) Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love. In this one word God sums up all his gracious dealings with them; he had loved them, because he would love them, (Deut. vii. 7, 8.) loved them in their childhood, Hos. xi. 1. His delight was in them, Isa. xlvii. 4. "I have loved you, but you have not loved me, nor made any suitable returns for my love." Note, God's people need to be often reminded of his love to them. 11. They question his love, and diminish the importance of the tokens of his love; and challenge him to produce proofs of his love, that were material, and think and speak very slight of the instances they had had of his kindness, as if they were so few, so small, as not to be worth taking notice of, and no more than what they had sufficiently made returns for, or, at least, than he had sufficiently balanced with instances of his wrath. 2. Have we not been wasted, impoverished, and carried captive; and where is that which he hath loved us?" Note, God justly takes it very ill to have his favours slighted, as not worth speaking of; and it is very absurd for us to ask whereon he hath loved us, when, which way soever we look, we meet with the proofs and instances of his love to us. 111. He makes it out, beyond contradiction, that he had loved them, loved them in a distinguishing way, which was in a special manner obliging. For proof of this, he shows the difference he had made, and would still make, between Jacob and Esau, between Israelites and Edomites. Some read their question, Wherefore hast thou loved us? as if they did indeed own that he had loved them, but withal insinuate that there was a reason for it—that he loved them because their father Abraham had loved him, so that it was not a free love, but a love of interest; to which God replies, We will make Jacob akin to Abraham as you are? Was he not Jacob's own brother, his elder brother? And therefore if there were any right to a compensate for Abraham's love, Esau had it, and yet I hated Esau and loved Jacob.

1. Let them see what a difference God had made between Jacob and Esau. Esau was Jacob's brother, his twin-brother; "Yet I loved Jacob, and hated Esau," took Jacob into covenant, and entailed the blessing on him and his, but I refused and rejected Esau." Note, Those that are taken into covenant with God, that have the lively oracles, and the means of grace, committed to them, have reason to look upon these as tokens of his love. Jacob is loved, for he has these, Esau hated, for he has not. The apostle quotes this, (Rom. ix. 13.) and compares it with what a oracle said to Rebecca, concerning her twins, (Gen. xxv. 23.) The elder shall serve the younger, to illustrate the doctrine of God's sovereignty in dispensing his favours; for may he not do what he will with his own? Esau was justly hated, but Jacob freely loved; even so, Father, because it seemed good in thine eyes, and it is not for us to ask why or wherefore.

2. Let them see what he was now doing, and would do with them, pursuant to its original difference. (1.) The Edomites shall be made the monuments of God's justice, and he will be glorified in their uter destruction; for Esau have I hated; I laid his mountains waste, the mountains of Seir, which were his heritage. When all that part of the world was ravaged by the Chaldean army, the country of Edom was, among the rest, laid in ruins, and became a habitation for the dragons of the wilderness, so perfectly desolate was it; as was foretold, Isa. xxxiv. 6, 11. The Edomites had triumphed in Jerusalem's overthrow, (Ps. cxxvii. 7.) and therefore it was just with God to put the same cup of trembling into their hands. And though Edom's ruins were last, yet they were lasting, and the desolation perpetual; and in Jacob and Esau, and is made between the righteous and the wicked, to whom otherwise all things come alike, and there seems to be one event. Jacob's cities are laid waste, but they are rebuilt; Edom's are laid waste, and never rebuilt; the sufferings of the righteous will have an end and will end well, all their grievances shall be redressed, and their sorrow turned into joy; but the sufferings of the wicked will be endless and remediless, as Edom's desolations, v. 4. Observe here, [1.] The vain hopes of the Edomites, that they shall have their ruins repaired as well as Israel, though they had no promise to build their hope upon. They say, "It is true, we are impoverished, it is the common chance, and there is no remedy; but we will rebuild and they shall be desolate; we are solved we will." (not so much as asking God leave); [2.] "we will, whether he will or no, we will do it in defiance to God's curse, and that sentence pronounced upon Edom, (Isa. xxxiv. 10.) From generation to generation it shall be waste." They build presumptuously, as Hiel built Jericho in direct contradiction to the word of God; (1 Kings xvi. 34.) and this shall speed according to place. It is certain for those whose hearts are unshaken under humbling providences, to think to make their part good against God himself, and to build and plant, and flourish again as much as ever, though God has said that they shall be impoverished. But see, [3.] The dashing of these hopes, and the disappointment of them. They say, We will build, but what says the Lord of hosts? For we are sure his word shall stand, and not theirs; and he says, First, Their attempts shall be baffled; They shall build, but I will throw down. Note, Those that walk contrary to God, he will walk contrary to them; for who ever hardened his heart against God and prospered? When the Jews had rejected Christ and his gospel, they became Edomites, and this word was fulfilled in them. Even when, in the time of Adrian, they attempted to rebuild Jerusalem, God by earthquakes and eruptions of fire threw down what they built, so that they were forced to quit the enterprise. Secondly, They shall be looked upon by all as abandoned to utter ruin; all that see them shall call them the border of wickedness, a sinful nation, incurably so, and therefore the people of God despised, and forever in contempt. The first sin against God was that of presumption, and since their wickedness is such as will never be reformed, their desolations shall be such as are never to be repaired. Against Israel God was a little displeased, (Zech. i. 15.) but against Edom he has indignation, and will have for ever, for they are the people of his curse, Isa. xxxiv. 5. [2.] The Israelites shall be made the monuments of his mercy and he will be glorified in their salvation. The border of Edom shall be stigmatized as a people hated of God, but your eyes shall see your doubts concerning his love to you for ever silenced; for you shall say, and have cause to say, the Lord is and will be magnified from the border of Israel, from every part and border of the land of Israel." The border of Edom is a border of wickedness, and therefore the Lord will have indignation against it for ever; but the border of Israel is a border of holiness, the border of the sanctuary, (Ps. lxxviii. 54.) and therefore God will make it to appear (though it may for a time lie desolate) that he has mercy in store for it, and from thence he will be magnified: he will give his people Israel both cause, and hearts, to praise him. When the border of Edom remains still desolate, and the border of Israel is repaired and replenished, then it will appear that God has loved Jacob. Note, [1.] Those who doubt of God's love to his people, shall, sooner or later, have convincing and undeniable proofs you of it; and what a heart you will not believe." (2.) Deliverances out of trouble are to be reckoned proofs of God's good will to his people, though they may be forced to fall into trouble, Ps. xxxiv. 19. [3.] Distinguishing favours are very obliging. If God rear up again the border of Israel, but leave the border of Edom in ruins, let no Israelite ask, for shame, Wherein hast thou loved us? [4.] The dignifying of Israel is the magnifying of the God of Israel, and, one way or other, God will have honour from his professing people. [5.] God's goodness being his glory, when he does us good we must proclaim him great; for that is magnifying him. It is an instance of his goodness, that he has pleasure in the prosperity of his servants, and for this they that love his salvation, say, The Lord be magnified, Ps. xxx. 27.

6. A son honoureth his father, and a servant his master: if then I be a father, where is mine honour? and if I be a master, where is my fear? saith the Lord of hosts unto you, O priests, that despise my name. And ye say, Wherein have we despised thy name? 7. Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar; and ye say, Wherein have we polluted thee? In that ye say, The table of the Lord is contemptible. 8. And if ye offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not evil? and if ye offer the lame and sick, is it not evil? offer it now unto thy governor: will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person? saith the Lord of hosts. 9. And now, I pray you, beseech God that he will be gracious unto us: this hath been by your means: will he regard your person? saith the Lord of hosts. 10. Who is there even among you that would shut the doors for nought? neither do ye kindle fire on mine altar for nought. I have no pleasure in you, saith the Lord of hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand. 11. For from the rising of the sun, even unto the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering: for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the Lord of hosts. 12. But ye have profaned it, in that ye say, The table of the Lord is polluted; and the fruit thereof, even his meat, is contemptible. 13. Ye said also, Behold, what a weariness is it! and ye have snuffed at it, saith the Lord of hosts: and ye brought that which was torn, and the lame, and the sick; thus ye brought an offering; should I accept this of your hand? saith the Lord. 14. But cursed be the deceiver, which hath in his flock a male, and voweth, and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing; for I am a great King, saith the Lord of hosts, and my name is dreadful among the heathen.

The prophet is here, by a special commission, calling the priests to account, though they were themselves appointed judges, to call the people to an account. Let the rulers in the house of God know that there is one above them, who will reckon with them for their mal-administrations. Thus saith the Lord of hosts to you, O priests, v. 6. God will have a saying to unfaithful ministers; and it concerns them who speak from God to his people, to hear and heed what he says to them, that they may save themselves in the first place; otherwise how should they help to save them that hear them. It is a severe and, no doubt, a just reproof, that is here given to the priests, for the profanation of the holy things of God, with which they were intrusted; and if this was the crime of the priests, we have reason to fear the people also were guilty of it, so that what is said to the priests, is said to all, nay, it is said to us, who, as Christians, profess ourselves, not only the people of God, but priests to him. Observe here,

I. What it was, that God expected from them, and with what good reason he expected it; {v. 6.} A son honours his father, because he is his father; nature has written this law in the hearts of children, before God wrote it at mount Sinai; nay, a servant, though his obligation to his master is not natural, but by voluntary compact, yet thinks it his duty to honour him; to be observant of his orders, and true to his interests. Children and servants pay respect to their parents and masters; every one cries out shame on them if they do not, and their own hearts cannot but reproach them too; the order of families is thus kept up, and it is their beauty and advantage.

But the priests, who are God's children and his servants, do not fear and honour him. They were fathers and masters to the people, and expected to be called so, (Judges xviii. 19. Matth. xxiii. 7, 10,) and to be reverenced and obeyed as such; but they forgot their Father and Master in heaven, and the duty they owe to him. We may each of us charge upon ourselves what is here charged upon the priests. Note, 1. We are every one of us to look upon God as our Father and Master, and upon ourselves as his children and servants. 2. Our relation to God as our Father and Master strongly obliges us to fear and honour him. If we honour and fear the fathers of our flesh, much more the Father and Master of our spirits, Heb. ii. 17. 3. It is an especial duty to fear and reverence God, and it is a dishonour to them, and in effect a reproach and contempt, that God is so little feared and honoured even by those that own him for their Father and Master. Where is his honour? Where is his fear?

II. What the contempt was, which these priests put upon God. This is that, in general, which is charged upon them. 1. They despised God's name; their familiarity with it, as priests, bred contempt of it, and seemed them only to gain a veneration for it by themselves, and their own name; while God's name was of small account with them. God's name is all that whereby he has made himself known—his word and ordinances; these they had low thoughts of, and vitiated that which it was their business to magnify; and no wonder that when they despised it themselves, they did that which made it despised to others; even the sacrifices of the Lord to be abhorred, as Elhi's sons did. 2. They profaned God's name by being both unrighteous and profane, not only made no account of sacred things, but they made an ill use of them, and perverted them to the service of the worst and vilest purposes—their own pride, covetousness, and luxury; There cannot be a greater provocation to God than the profanation of his name; for it is holy and reverend. His purity cannot be polluted by us, for he is unsplotted, but his name may be profaned; and nothing profanes it more than the misuse of it in the hands of priests, whose business it is to do honour to it.

This is the general charge exhibited against them; to this they plead, Not guilty, and challenge God to prove it upon them, and to make good the charge; which added daring impudence to their daring impiety; Ye say, Wherein have we despised thy name? v. 6. And wherein have we polluted them? v. 7. It is common with proud sinners, when they are reproved, to stand thus upon their own justification; these priests had most horridly profaned sacred things, and yet, like the adulterous woman, say that they have done no wickedness; either they were so insensible of themselves, that they remembered not, or reflected not upon, their own acts; or, they were so ignorant of the divine law, that they did not perceive their guilt; or, they were so blind, that they could not perceive their guilt; or, that what they did could not be construed to be despising God's name; or, they were so atheistical as to imagine that though they knew their own guilt, yet God did not; or, they were so scornful in their conduct toward God and his prophets, that they took a pride in bantering a serious and just reproof, and turning it off with a jest. They either laugh at the reproof, as those that despise it, and harden their own hearts thereby, they laugh it off, as those that resolve they will not be touched by it, or will not seem to be so. Which way soever we take it, their defence was their offence, and in justifying themselves, their own tongues condemned them, and their saying, Wherein have we despised thy name? proved them proud and perverse. Had they asked this question with a humble desire to be told where they went amiss, wherein they had offended, it had been an evidence of their repentance, and had given hopes of their reformation; but to ask it thus in disdain and defiance of the word of God, argues their hearts fully set in them to do evil. Note, Sinners ruin themselves by studying to baffle their own convictions; but they will find it hard to kick against the pricks.

Justly might they have been convicted and condemned upon the general charge, and their plea thrown out as frivolous; but God will not only over-come, but will be clear, will be justified, when he judges, and therefore he shows them very particularly wherein they had despised his name, and what the contempt was, that they cast upon him. As formerly, when he charged them with idolatry, so now, when he charges them with profaneness, he tells them where their sin lay in the valley, and know what they have done, Jer. ii. 23.

1. They despised God's name in what they said, in the low opinion they had of his institutions; "Ye say in your hearts, and perhaps speak it out when your priests get together over your cups, out of the hearing of the people, The table of the Lord is contemptible;" (v. 7. and again, v. 12.) ye say, The way of the Lord is polluted. 2. They despised his name more than any other name. Either the table in the temple, on which the show-bread was placed, is that which they reflected upon; not understanding the mystery of it, they despised it as an insignificant thing; or, rather, the altar of burnt-offerings is here called the table, for both God, and his priests, and his people, did, as it were, 'east to ...gather upon the sacrifices, in token of friendship; this, they thought, was contemnible. Formerly, in the days of superstition, it was thought contemnible, in comparison with the idolatrous altars that the heathen had, and was set aside to make room for a new-fashioned one; (2 Kings xvi. 14, 15.) now it is thought contemnible, in comparison with the altar the Lord had set before his name, Mal. ii. 7. The fruit thereof, even his meat, is contemnible. They who served at the altar, were to live upon the altar; but they complained that they lived poorly and meanly, and that it was not worth while to attend the service of the altar, for the fruit and meat of it, for it was very ordinary, and always the same again; they had no dainties, no varieties, no nice dishes of choice. In lieu of this, given to God, the blood and the fat, they looked upon with contempt, as not worthy the multitude of laws God had made about them; they asked, "What need is there of so much ado about burning the fat, and pouring out the blood?" Note, Those greatly profane and pollute God's name who despise the business of religion, though it is very honourable, as not worth taking pains in, and the advantages of religion, though highly valuable, as not worth taking pains for. Those who live in a careless neglect of holy ordinances, who come to them, and attend on them, irreverently, and go away from them, never the better, and under no concern, do, in effect, say, "The table of the Lord is contemnible, there is neither virtue nor value in it, neither credit nor comfort from it." 2. They despised God's name, in what they did, which was of a piece with what they said, and flowed from it; corrupt principles and notions are roots of bitterness, which bear the gall and wormwood of corrupt practices. They looked upon the table and altar of the Lord as contemnible, and then, neither they thought any thing would serve for a sacrifice, though ever so coarse and mean; and were so far from bringing the best, as they ought to have done, that they picked out the worst they had, which was fit neither for the market, nor for their own tables, and offered that at God's altar. With every sacrifice they were to bring a meat-offering of fine flour mingled with oil; but they brought for the altar, without any provision for them; the coarse bread, perhaps it was dry and mouldy, or made of the refuse of the wheat, which they thought good enough to be burnt upon the altar; for had it been better, they would have said, "To what purpose is this waste?" And as to the beasts they offered, though the law was express, that what was offered in sacrifice, should not have blemish, yet they brought the blind, and the lame, and the sick. (v. 8.) and again, v. 13.) the corn, the horn, and the sick, that was ready to die of itself. They looked no further than the burning of the sacrifice, and they pleaded that it was a pity to burn it, if it was good for any thing else. The people were so far convinced of their duty, that they would bring sacrifices; they durst not wholly omit the duty, but they brought nothing for the people. They abjured, that while they knew he would not accept of. Some make v. 8. to be a continuation of what the priests profanely said, v. 7. Ye say to the people, if ye offer the blind for sacrifice, it is not evil; or, the lame, and the sick, is it not evil. Note, It is a very evil thing, whether men think so or no, to offer the blind and the lame, the corn and the sick, in sacrifice to God. If we worship God ignorantly, and without understanding, we bring the blind for sacrifice; if we do it carelessly, and without consideration, if we are cold, and dull, and dead in it, we bring the sick; if we rest in the bodily exercise, and do not make ourselves fit for the spiritual exercise, if we leave off vain thoughts and distractions to lodge within us, we bring the horn, and the sick. Is and is not this evil? Is not it a great affront to God, and a great wrong and injury to our own souls? Do not our books tell us, nay, do not our hearts tell us, that this is evil? For God, who is the best, ought to be served with the best we have. (3.) They would do nothing and spend more than what they had for it. The priests would offer the sacrifices that were brought to the altar, because they had their share of them; but as for any other service of the temple, that had not a particular fee belonging to it, they would not stir a step, or lend a hand to it; and this was the general temper of them, v. 10. There is not a man among the priests that would the doors, or kindle a fire, for naught. If he were bid to do the smallest piece of service, he would ask, How shall I be paid for it? They would do nothing gratis, but were all for what they could get, every one for his gain from his quarter, Isa. lvi. 11. Note, Though God has given order that his servants be well paid in this world, yet those are not acceptable servants to him, who are mercenary, and would never do the work but for wages and fees. (3.) Their work was a perfect drudgery to them; (v. 13.) Ye said also, Behold, what a weariness is it! Both priests and people were of this mind, that they thought God imposed too hard a task upon them; the people grudged the charge of providing the sacrifice, and the priests grudged the pains of offering it; they thought the feasts of the Lord were too thick, and they were forced to attend too often, and too long, in the courts of the Lord; the priests thought it a severe penance imposed upon them, to purify themselves as was required when they attended the altar, and ate of the holy things; they thought the duty of their office toilsome and troublesome, and snuffed at it as unreasonable, and bearing hard upon them; they did it, but it was grudgingly, and with a willing heart, and God speaks of it, in exhibition of his law, that he had not made them to serve with an offering, nor wearied them with incense, (Isa. xiii. 23.) Wherein have I wearied thee? Mic. vi. 3. But their own wicked hearts made it a weariness; and they were, as Doeg, detained before the Lord, they would rather have been any where else. Note, Those are highly injurious, both to God and themselves, who are weary of his service and worship, and snuff at it. III. Observe how God expostulates, and reasons the case, with them, for their conviction and humiliation. 1. Would they, durst they, affront an earthly prince thus? "You offer to God the lame and the sick, offer it now unto thy governor, (v. 8.) either as tribute, or as a present, when thou art entertaining his favour, or in gratitude for some favour received; will he be pleased with thee? Or, rather, will he not, take himself to be affronted by it?" Note, Those who are careless and irreverent in the duties of religious worship, should consider what a shame it is to offer that to God, which they would scorn to offer to a governor; and to be more observant of the laws of治理, in good manners than of the laws of religion; and more afraid of being rude than of being profane. 2. Could they imagine that such sacrifices as these would be pleasing to God, or answer the end of sacrifices? "Should I accept of this of your hands, saith..." the Lord? v. 13. Have you any reason to think I should either not discern, or not resent, the affront; that I should connive at the violation of my own laws? No, (v. 10.) I have no pleasure in you, and therefore I will not accept an offering, such an offering, at your hand." If God had no pleasure in the person, if the person is not in a justified state, if he is not sanctified, God will not accept the offering; God had respect to Abel first, and then to his sacrifice. Note, In order to our acceptance with God, it is not enough that we had an interest of it, is good, but we must do it from a right principle, in a right manner, and for a right end. It was the ancient rule laid down, (Gen. iv. 7.) If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? Now if we be not accepted of God, in vain do we worship him; it is all lost labour; nay, we are all undone, for ever undone, if we come short of God's acceptance; these therefore make a bad bargain for themselves, who, to save charges in their religion, miss all the ends of it, and, by thinking to go the next way to work, bring nothing to pass. Those who make it the top of their ambition, as we all ought to do, whether present or absent, to be accepted of the Lord, will not dare to bring the torn, and the lame, and the sick, for sacrifice.

4. Had God deserved this at their hands? No; he had provided comfortably for them, and had given them such encouragement in their work as might have engaged them to do it cheerfully and well; so some understand it, v. 10. "Who is there among you, that shall shut a door, or kindle a fire, for naught?" No, God does not expect you should serve him for nothing; you are well paid for it, and shall beSep. not a cup of cold water, given for the honour of God, shall lose its reward." Note, The consideration of our constant receipts from God, and the present rewards of obedience in obedience, very much aggravates our slothfulness and niggardliness in our return of duty to God.

IV. He calls them to repentance for their profanations of his holy name. So we must understand v. 11. "Henceforth, as God to thee shall be gracious to us. Humble yourselves for your sin, cry mightily to God for pardon, and make up, in the faith and fervency of your prayers, what has been wanting in the worth and value of your sacrifices; for all the rebukes of Providence we are under, are by your means." Note, Those who have by their sins helped to kindle a fire, are highly concerned by the fire that shall be consumed or silenced or kept down, to the occasion, to help to quench it. We must see how much God's judgments are by our means, and be awakened thereby to be earnest with him to return in mercy; and if we take not this course, how can we think he should regard our persons?

V. He declares his resolution, both to secure the glory of his own name, and to reckon with those who profane it. Those who put contempt upon God and religion, and think to run down sacred things, let them know:

1. That they shall not gain their point; God will magnify his law, and make it honourable, though they vilify it, and make it contemptible; for (v. 11.) from the rising of the sun to the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the Gentiles. It might be said, "If these are not the worshippers whom God will accept, then he has no worshippers." As if he must make the best of their ser- vices, or sacrifices, in the law, which allowed nothing to them; and then what will he do for his great name? But let him alone for that; though Israel be not faithful, be not gathered, yet God will be glorious; though these priests provoke him to take down the ceremonial economy, and to abolish that law of commandments, which could not make the comers thereunto perfect, yet he will be no loser by that, at the long run; for, (1.) Instead of these carnal ordinances, which they profaned, a spiritual way of worship shall be introduced and established; Incense shall be offered to God's name, (which signifies prayer and praise, Ps. cxvii. 2 Rev. viii. 3.) instead of the blood and fat of bulls and goats. And it shall be a pure offering, refined, not only from the corruptions that were in the priests' practice, but from the mere body and external sacrifices, in the law, which allowed nothing to themselves, which were called carnal ordinances, imposed till the time of reformation, Heb. ix. 10. When the hour came, in which the true worshippers worshipped the Father in spirit and in truth, then this incense was offered, even this pure offering. (2.) Instead of his being worshipped and served among the Gentiles only, a small people in a corner of the world, he will be served and worshipped in all places. From the rising of the sun to the going down of the same, in every place, in every part of the world, incense shall be offered to his name; nations shall be disciplined, and shall speak of the wonderful works of God, and have them spoken to them in their own language. This is a plain prediction of that great revolution in the kingdom of grace, by which the Gentiles, who had been strangers and foreigners, came to be fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God, and as welcome to the throne of grace as ever the Jews had been. It is twice said, (for the thing was certain,) My name shall be great among the Gentiles, whereas hitherto in Judah only he was known, and his name great, Ps. lxxvi. 1. God's name shall be declared to them, the declaration of it shall be received and believed, and there shall be those among the Gentiles who shall magnify and glorify the name of God, better than ever the Jews had done, even the priests themselves.

2. That they shall not go unpunished, v. 14. Here is the doom of those who do like these priests here, for the sentence on them is a sentence on all such. Observe, (2.) The description of profane and careless worshippers. They are such as vow and sacrifice in vain, and underlie to God, that there shall have in their flock a male; they have of the best, wherewith to serve and honour him, so bountiful has he been in his gifts to them, but they put him off with the worst, and think that good enough for him, so ungrateful are they in their return to him. This was the fault of the people, but the priests connived at it, and indulged them in it. We find a description of these priests; they were such as were al- lured for a free-will offering, which should not be accepted for a vow, Lev. xxii. 23. But the priests would accept it, though God would not, pretending to be more indulgent than he was, for which he will give them no thanks another day. (2.) The character given of such worshippers; they are deceivers, they deal falsely and fraudulently with God, they play the hypocrite with him; they pretend to honour him, in making the vow, but when it comes to be performed, they put an affront upon him, to that degree, that it had been better not to have vowed than to vow and thus to pay; but let not such be themselves deceived, for God is not mocked; those who think to put a cheat upon God, will prove, in the end, to have put a damming cheat upon their own souls. Hypocrites are deceivers, and they will prove self-deceivers, and so, self-destructors. (3.) The doom passed upon them; They are cursed; they expect a blessing, but will meet with a curse, the tokens of God's wrath, according to the judgment written. (4.) The reason of this doom: "For I am a great King, saith the Lord of hosts, and the holy God; I will not suffer thee to put a cheat upon me, but as a man himself; my name is dreadful among the heathen, and therefore I will not bear that it should be contemptible among mine own people." The heathen paid more respect to their gods, though idols, than the Jews did to theirs, though the only true living God. Note, The consideration of God's universal dominion, and the universal acknowledgment of it, should restrain us from all irreverence in his service.

CHAP. II.

There are two great ordinances which divine wisdom has instituted, the wretched profanation of both which is complained of, and sharply reproved, in this chapter. I. The offering of sacrifices, and the maintaining and keeping up of that; this was profaned by those who were themselves dignified with the honour of it, and intrusted with the business of it. The priests profaned the holy things of God; they are here charged with, their sin is aggravated, and they are severally threatened for it, v. 1. 2. The ordinance of marriage, which is common to all the world and mankind, and was instituted for the maintaining and keeping up of that; this was profaned both by the priests and by the people, in marrying strangers, (v. 11, 12,) treating their wives unkindly, (v. 13.) putting them away, (v. 16,) and herein dealing treacherously, v. 10, 10, 12. And that which was at the bottom of this and other instances of profaneness, was, downright atheism, thinking God altogether such a one as themselves, which was, in effect, to say, There is no God, v. 17. And these reproofs to them are warnings to us.

1. AND now, O ye priests, this commandment is for you. 2. If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, saith the Lord of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you, and will curse your blessings; yea, I have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart. 3. Behold, I will corrupt your seed, and spread dung upon your faces, even the dung of your solemn feasts, and one shall take you away with it. 4. And ye shall know that I have sent this commandment unto you, that my covenant might be with Levi, saith the Lord of hosts. 5. My covenant was with him of life and peace; and I gave them to him for the fear wherewith he feared me, and was afraid before my name. 6. The law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips: he walked with me in peace and equity, and did turn many away from iniquity. 7. For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts. 8. But ye are departed out of the way; ye have caused many to stumble at the law; ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, saith the Lord of hosts. 9. Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, according as ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law.

What was said in the foregoing chapter, was directed to the priests; (ch. i. 6.) Thus saith the Lord of hosts to you, O priests that despise my name: but the thing which I have put in your hearts, and the words which I have spoken in your ears, shall be called forth as my guilty, of as sacrificers, and for those they might think it some excuse, that they offered what the people brought, and therefore that, if they were not so good as they should be, it was not their fault, but the people's; and therefore here the corruptions, there complained of, are traced to the source and spring of them—the faults the priests were guilty of, as teachers of the people, as expounders of the law, and the lively oracles; and this is a part of their office, which still remains in the hands of gospel-ministers, who are appointed to be pastors and teachers, like the priests under the law, though not sacrificers, like them; and therefore by them the admonition here is to be particularly regarded. If but the priests had been charged with their instructions, the people would have brought better offerings; and therefore the blame returns upon the priests: "And now, O ye priests, this commandment is purely for you, (v. 1) who should have taught the people the good knowledge of the Lord, and how to worship him aright." Note, The governors of the churches are under God's government, and to him they are accountable. See, 1. Those who come in God's name, as sacrificial oracles; 2. They who come in God's name, as God's commandments. Nay, (v. 4.) ye shall know that I have sent these commandments for you. They should know it, either, 1. By the power of the Spirit working with the word for their conviction and reformation; "You shall know its original by its efficacy, whence it comes by what it does." When the word of God to us brings about, and carries on, the work of God in us, then we may know that what he sent it to us, that it is not the word of Malachi, God's messenger, but it is indeed the word of God, and is sent, not only in general to all, but in particular to us. Or, 2. By the accomplishment of the threatenings denounced against them; "You shall know, to your cost, that I have sent this commandment to you, and it shall not return void." Let us now see what this commandment is, which is for the priests, which they must know, was sent to them; and let us put in method the particulars of the charge.

1. Here is a recital of the covenant God made with that sacred tribe; which was their commission for their work, and the patent of their honour. The Lord of hosts sent a commandment to them, for the re-establishing of the covenant; the covenant is said to be the word which he commanded; (Ps. cv. 8.) and he sent this commandment by the prophet at this time, for the re-establishing of it, that it might not be cut off for their persisting in the violation of it. Let the sons of Levi know then (and particularly the sons of Aaron) what honour God put upon their family, and what a trust he reposed in them; (v. 5.) My covenant was with him of life and peace. Beside the covenant of peculiarity made with all the house of Israel, there was a covenant of priesthood made with one family, that they should do the services, and, upon condition of that, should enjoy all the privileges, of the priest's office; that, as Israel was a peculiar nation, a kingdom of priests, so the house of Aaron should be a family of priests, set apart for the service and honour of God, to bear up his name in that nation, as they were to bear up his name among the nations: both the one and the other, in different degrees, were to give glory unto God's name, v. 2. God covenant'd with them as his menial servants, obliged them to do his work, and promised to own and accept them in it. This is called his covenant of life and peace, because it was intended for the support of religion, which brought them safely through the dangers of that life to the happy, peace to the distressed; or, because life and peace were by this covenant promised to those priests that faithfully and conscientiously discharged their duty; they shall have peace, which speaks security from all evil, and life, which speaks the summary of all good. What is here said of the covenant of priesthood, is true of the covenant of grace made with all真心' and men, to live to God, and die for him, v. 11. Note, what shall the servant of God be, who shall not only enjoy life and peace, but shall not only prevent mistakes, but shall have a better understanding respecting them, and that mistakes concerning it may be prevented and rectified. We are all concerned fully to know what the will of the Lord is, to know it distinctly and certainly; we shall be desirous to know it, and therefore inquisitive concerning it; Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? We must not only consult the written word, (to the law and to the testimony,) but must have recourse to God's messengers, and desire instruction and advice from them in the affairs of our souls, as we do from physicians and lawyers concerning our bodies and estates. Not but that ministers ought to lay down the law of God to those who do not inquire concerning it, or desire the knowledge of it, they must instruct them that oppose themselves, (2 Tim. ii. 25.) as well as them that offer themselves; but it is people's duty to apply themselves to them for instruction, not only to hear, but to ask questions; Watchmen, what of the night? Thus if ye will inquire, inquire ye; see Isa. xxii. 8, 11, 12. People should not only seek comfort at the mouth of their ministers, but should seek the law there; for if we be found in the way of duty, we shall find it the way of life.

II. Here is a memorial of the fidelity and zeal of many of their predecessors in the priest's office; this is mentioned as an aggravation of their sin, in degenerating from such honourable ancestors, and deserting such illustrious examples, and as a justification of God in withdrawing from them those tokens of his presence, which he had granted to them that kept close to him. See here, (v. 6.) how good the godly priest was, whose steps they should have trod in, and what good he did, God's grace working with him. 1. See how good he was. He was ready and mighty in the scriptures; the law of truth was in his mouth, for the use of those that asked the law at his mouth; and in all his discourses there appeared more or less of the law of truth; every thing he said undid the work of government, by which he governed others; he spake as one having authority, every word was a law, and as one that had both wisdom and integrity, it was a law of truth; and truth is a law, it has a commanding power; it is by truth that Christ rules. The law of truth was in his mouth, for his resolutions of cases of conscience proposed to him, were such as might be depended upon; his opinion was good law; insomuch as it was found in his lips; he did not handle the word of God deceitfully, to please men, to serve a turn, or to make an interest for himself, but told all that consulted him, what the law was, whether it were pleasing or displeasing. He did not pronounce that unclean, which was clean, nor that clean, which was unclean, as one of the rabbins expounds it. And his conversation was of a peace with his doctrine. God himself gives him this honourable testimony. His was the temper of a peace, 1 Sam. ii. 30. His conversation was quiet, he was not an hypocrite nor a promotor of iniquity, 1 Sam. iii. 16. He was a peaceable and a great peace-maker. His conversation was also honest; he did not go wrong to any, but made conscience of rendering to all their due; he walked with me in equity, or rectitude. We must not, for peace-sake, transgress the rules of equity, but must keep the peace as far as is consistent with justice; the wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable. Ministers, of all men, are concerned to walk with God in peace and equity, that they may be examples to the flock. 2. See what good he did; he answered the ends of his advancement to that office, he did turn many away from iniquity, he made it his business to do good, and God crowned his endeavours with a rich reward of their labour, if they may but be instrumental herein. It is God only that by his grace can turn men from iniquity, and yet it is here said of a pious, laborious minister, that he turned men from iniquity, as a worker together with God, and an instrument in his hand; and they that turn many to righteousness, shall shine as the stars, Dan. xii. 3. Note, Those ministers, and those only, are like to turn men to righteousness, who live in sincerity, and live good lives, and both according to the scripture; for as one of the rabbins observes here, When the priest is upright many will be upright.

III. Here is a high charge drawn up against the priests of the present age, who violated the covenant of the priesthood, and went directly contrary both to the rules and to the examples that were set before them. Many particulars of their sins we had in the chapter before, and we find (Neh. xiii.) that many corruptions had crept into the church of the Jews at this time, mixed marriages, admitting strangers into the house of God, profligacy of the Sabbath-day, which were all owing to the carelessness and unfaithfulness of the priests; here it is charged upon them in general, 1. That they transgressed the rule; Ye are deveried out of the way; but of the good way which God has prescribed to you, and which your godly ancestors walked before you in. It is ill with a people, when those whose office it is to guide them in the way, do themselves depart out of it; Ye have not kept my ways, not kept in them yourselves, nor done your part to keep others in them, v. 9. 2. That they betrayed their trust; Ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, ye have violated it, have contradicted the great intentions of it, and have done what in you lay to frustrate and defeat them; you have managed your office as if it were designed only to feed your fat, and make you great, and not for the glory of God, and the good of the souls of men. This was a corrupting of the covenant of Levi, it was perverting the ends of the office, and making it truckle to those sensual, secular things, over which it ought always to have dominion. And thus they forfeited the benefit of that covenant, and corrupted it to themselves, they made it void, and lost the life and peace which, by the blessings which are native to it, are the fruit of this covenant, and to expect God should perform his part of the covenant, if we do not make conscience of performing ours. Another instance of their betraying their trust was, that they were partial in the law, v. 9. In the law given to them, they would pick and choose their duty, this they would do, and that they would not do, just as they pleased; this is the fault of many, who, besides their due obedience to right with God, have a respect to all his commandments. Or, rather, in the law they were to lay down to the people; in this they knew faces; (so the word is;) they accepted persons, they willfully misinterpreted and misapplied the law, either to cross those they had a sien to, or countenance those they had a kindness for; they would wink at those sins in some, which in others they would have sharp eyes for, according as their interest or inclination led them. God is no Respector of persons in making his law, nor will he in reckoning for the breach of it; he regards not the rich more than the poor, and therefore his priests, his ministers, misrepresent him, and do him a great deal of dishonour, if, in doctrine or discipline, they be respecters of persons. See 1 Tim. v. 8. Thus Hoping and Iren was by their wickedness made the sacrifices of the Lord to be abhorred, 1 Sam. ii. 17. There are many to whom the law of God is a stumbling-block, the gospel of Christ a savour of death unto death, and Christ himself a Rock of offence; and nothing contributes more to this than the vicious lives of those that make a profession of religion, by which men are tempted from it. It is all a rock of offence, a stumbling-block, a stone of stumbling; there is no good reason why it should be so to any, but wo to those by whom this offence comes. 4. That, when they were under the rebukes both of the word and of the providence of God for it, they would not hear, that is, they would not heed, they would not lay it to heart; they were not at all grieved or ashamed for their sin, nor affected with the tokens of God's displeasure, which they were under. What we hear does us no good, unless we lay it to heart, and admit the impressions of it; Ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, by repentance and reformation. Therefore we should lay to heart the things of God, that we may give glory to the name of God, may praise him in and for all that whereby he is使我 of blessings. They lay not the comfort of their work, which is the satisfaction of doing good; for, the blessings with which they, as priests, blessed the people, God was so far from saying Amen to, that he turned them into curses, as he did Balaam's curses into blessings. That profane people should not have the favour of receiving God's blessings, nor those profane priests the honour of conferring and conveying them, but both should lie under the tokens of his wrath; nor had they the comfort of their suages, for the blessings with which God blessed them, were turned into a curse to them by their abuse of them; they could not receive them as the gifts of his favour, when they had made themselves so obnoxious to his displeasure, by not loving to heart the very foundation of the covenant of Levi, (v. 9.) Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people. While they glorified God, he dignified them, and supported their reputation, and a great interest they had in the love and esteem of the people, while they did their duty, and walked with God in peace and equity, every one had a value and veneration for them, they were truly styled, the reverend, the priests, but when they forsok the ways of God, and corrupted the covenant of Levi, they thereby made themselves not only mean, but vile, in the eyes even of the common people, who, the more they honoured the order, the more they hated the men that were a dishonour to it. Their conduct, their misconduct, had a direct tendency to this, and God owns his hand in it; and it is observable, what we are judged by is what he sees of us, and not only produced by their sin, but answering to it; they put dishonour upon God, and made his table and the fruit thereof contemptible, (ch. i. 12.) and therefore God justly put dishonour upon them, and made them contemptible; they exposed themselves, and therefore God exposèd them. Note, As sin is a reproach to any people, so especially to priests; there is not a more despicable and odious animal upon the face of the earth than a profane, wicked, scandalous minister.

V. Here is a sentence of wrath passed upon them; and this the prophet begins with, v. 2, 3. But it is conditional: If you will not lay it to heart; implying, "If you will, God's anger shall be turned away, and all shall be well; but if you persist in these wicked courses, hear your doom—Your sin will be your ruin." 1. They shall fall and lie under the curse of God; I will send a curse upon you. The wrath of God shall be revealed against them, according to the threatenings of the written word. Note, They who violate the commands of the law, lay themselves under the curses of the law. 2. Neither their employments, nor their enjoyments, as priests, shall be clean to them; I will curse your corn and your wine, and shall put a curse upon your labours. You shall not use yourselves, nor blessings to the people; but even your plenty shall be a plague to you, and you shall be plagues to your generation." 3. The fruits of the earth, which they had the tithe of, should be no comfort to them; "Behold, I will corrupt your seed; the corn you sow shall rot under ground, and never come up again; the consequence of which must needs be famine and scarcity of provisions, so that you shall be brought to the altar, where the priests will soon have a loss of." Or, it may be understood of the seed of the word, which they preached; God threatens to deny his blessing to the instructions which he gave to the people, so that their labour shall be lost, as that of the husbandman, is, when the seed is corrupt; and so it agrees with that threatening, (Jer. xxiii. 32.) and he shall be despised of men, and his service shall be rejected of God; he will be so far from taking any pleasure in them, that he will loathe and detest them; I will spread dung in your faces, even the dung of your solemn feasts. He refers to the sacrifices that were offered at those feasts. Instead of being himself pleased with the fat of their sacrifices, he will show himself displeased by the smell of the dung of them in their faces, which he does, in effect, when he says, Bring no more vain obligations, your incense is an abomination to me. Note, Those who rest in their external performances of religion, which they should count but dung, that they may win Christ, shall not only come short of acceptance with God in them, but shall be filled with shame and confusion for their folly. 5. All will end, at last, in their utter ruin: One shall take you away with it. They shall be so overspread with the dung of their sacrifices, that they shall be carried away with it, as a part of it. Any one shall serve to take you away, the common scavenger; reprobate silver shall men call them, and treat them accordingly, because the Lord has rejected them.

10. Have we not all one father? hath not one God created us? why do we deal treacherously every man against his brother, by profaning the covenant of our fathers? 11. Judah hath dealt treacherously, and an abomination is committed in Israel and in Jerusalem: for Judah hath profaned the holiness of the Lord which he loved, and hath married the daughter of a strange god. 12. The Lord will cut off the man that doeth this, the master and the scholar, out of the tabernacles of Jacob, and him that offereth an offering unto the Lord of hosts. 13. And this have ye done again, covering the altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping, and with crying out, insomuch that he regarded not the offering any more, or received it with good-will at your hand. 14. Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. 15. And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the Spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth. 16. For the Lord, the God of Israel saith, that he hateth putting away: for one covereth violence with his garment, saith the Lord of hosts; therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously. 17. Ye have wearied the Lord with your words: yet ye say, Wherem have we wea- ried him? When ye say, Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them; or, Where is the God of judgment?

Corrupt practices are the genuine fruit and product of corrupt principles; and the badness of men's hearts and lives is owing to some loose atheistical notions which they have got, and which they govern themselves by. Now, in these verses, we have an instance of this; we here find men dealing falsely with one another, and it is because they think falsely of their God. Observe, 1. How corrupt their practices were; in general, they dealt treacherously every man against his brother, v. 10. It cannot be expected that he who is false to his God, should be true to his friend. They had dealt treacherously with God and his tithes and offerings, and had defrauded him, and thus conscience was debauched, its bonds and cords were broken, a door was opened to all manner of injustice and dishonesty, and the bonds of relation and natural affection are broken thenceforth wisely, and no difficulty made of it. Some think that the treacherous dealings here reproved are the same with those instances of oppression and extortion which we find complained of to Nehemiah, about this time, Neh. v. 3—7. Therein they forgot the God of their fathers, and the covenant of their fathers, and rendered their offerings unfruitful or none; but Neh. also refers to what was amiss in their marriages, which was likewise complained of, Neh. xiii. 23.

Two things were here charged with, as very provoking to God in this matter—taking strange wives of heathen nations, and abusing and putting away the wives they had of their own nation; in both these they dealt treacherously, and violated a sacred covenant; the former was in contempt of the covenant of peculiarity, the latter of the marriage-covenant.

1. In contempt of the covenant God made with Israel, as a peculiar people to himself, they married strange wives, which was expressly prohibited, and provided against, in that covenant, Deut. vii. 3. Observe, (1.) What good reason they had to deal faithfully with God and one another in this covenant, and not to make marriages with the heathen. [1.] They were expressly bound out from such marriages by covenant. God engaged to do them good upon this condition, that they should not mingle themselves with the heathen; this is the purpose of God's marrying them with his fathers, denoting the antiquity and the authority of it; and, its being the great charter by which that nation was incorporated, they lay under all possible obligations to observe it strictly; yet they profaned it as if they were not bound by it. They profane the covenant of their fathers, who live in disobedience to the command of the God of their fathers. [2.] They were a peculiar people, united in one body, and therefore ought to have united for the preserving of the honour of their peculiarity; Have we not all one Father? Yes, we have, for has not one God created us? Are we not all his offspring? And are we not made of one blood? Yes, certainly we are. God is a common Father to all mankind, and, upon that account, the members of another body, who have married with another, and therefore ought to put away living, (Eph. iv. 25.) and not to deal treacherously, no, not any man against his brother. But here it seems to refer to the Jewish nation; Have we not all one father, Abraham, or Jacob? This they prided themselves in, We have Abraham to our father; but here it is turned upon them, as an aggravation of their sin in being the honour of their nation by marrying with heathens; Has not one God created us, formed us into a people, made us a nation by ourselves, and put a life into us, distinct from that of other nations? And should not this oblige us to maintain the dignity of our character? Note, The consideration of the unity of the church in Christ, its Founder and Father, should engage us carefully to preserve the honour of our nation by marrying against all corruptions. [3.] They were dedicated to God, as well as distinguished from the neighbouring nations. Israel was holiness to the Lord, (Jer. ii. 3.) taken into covenant with him, set apart by him, for himself, to be to him for a name and a praise, and upon this account he loved them, and delighted in them; they were the Nephilim, or sons of the Lord, which he loved, of which he said, It is my rest for ever, here will I dwell, for I have desired it; but by their marrying strange wives they profaned this holiness, and laid the honour of it in the dust. Note, Those who are devoted to God, and beloved of him, are concerned to preserve their integrity, that they might not throw themselves out of his love, nor lose the honour, or defeat the end, of their dedication to him.

2. How treacherously they dealt, notwithstanding. They profaned themselves in that very thing which was prescribed to them for the preserving of the honour of their singularity; Judah has married the daughter of a strange god. The harm was not done only to the daughter, but to the nation, (God has made all nations of men, and is himself King of nations,) but that she is the daughter of a strange god, trained up in the service and worship of false gods, at their disposal, as a daughter at her father's disposal, and having a dependence upon them; hence some of the Rabbins (quoted by Dr. Pocock) say, He that marries a heathen woman, is as if he made himself son-in-law to an idol. The corruption of the old world began with the intermarriages of the sons of God with the daughters of men, Gen. vi. 2. It is the same thing that is here complained of, but as it is expressed, it sounds worse; The sons of God married the daughters of a strange god. Herein Judah is said to have dealt treacherously, for they basely betrayed their own honour, and the covenant of the Lord, which they should have loved; (so some read it,) and it is said to be an abomination committed in Israel and in Jerusalem; it was hateful to God, and very unbecoming those that were called by his name. Note, It is an abominable thing for those who profess the holiness of the Lord to profane it, particularly by involving themselves unequally with unbelievers. [3.] How God would reckon with them for it; (v. 12.) The Lord will cut off the man that doeth this, that marries the daughter of a strange god; he has, in effect, cut himself off from the holy nation, and joined in with foreigners, and aliens to the commonwealth of Israel, and so shall his doom be; God will cut him off, and all that belong to him; so the original intimates. He shall be cut off from Israel and from Jerusalem, and not be written among the living there. The Lord will cut off both the master and the scholar, that are guilty of this sin; both the teachers and the taught, the blind leaders and the blind followers, shall fall together into the ditch; both him that waketh and him that answereth; (so it is in the margin,) for the master can up his staff, and the servant it; and all that are in him; they shall be cut off together out of the tabernacles of Jacob. God will no more own them as belonging to his nation; nay, and the priest that offers an offering to the Lord, if he marry a strange wife, (as we find many of the priests did, Ezra x. 18.) he shall not escape; the offering he offers, shall not be taken for him, but he shall be cut off from the temple of his Lord, and from the tabernacles of Jacob. Nehemiah chased away from him, and from the priesthood, one of the sons of the High Priest, whom he found guilty of this sin, Neh. xiii. 28.

2. In contempt of the marriage-covenant, which God instituted for the common benefit of mankind, they abused and put away the wives they had of their own nation, probably to make room for those of the heathen; and the defect of the marriage-covenant is such; (v. 13.) This also have ye done; this is the second article of the charge, for the way of sin is down-hill, and one violation of the covenant is an inlet to another. [1.] Let us see what it is, that is here complained of; they did not behave as they ought to do toward their wives. [1.] They were cruel to them, broward and pernicious, and made their lives bitter to them, so that when they came with their wives and families to worship God at the solemn feasts, which they should have done with rejoicing, they were all out of humour; the poor wives were ready to break their hearts, and, not daring to make their case known to any other, they complained to God, and covered the altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping, and with crying. This is illustrated by the instance of Hannah, who, upon the account of her husband's barrenness, wept and prayed in the temple, a kind husband,) and the discontent thence arising, whenever they went up to the house of the Lord to worship, fretted and wept, and was in bitterness of soul, and would not eat, 1 Sam. i. 6, 7, 10. So it was with these wives here; this was so contrary to the cheerfulness which God requires in his worshippers, that it spoiled the acceptableness of their devotions. God regards not their extremity in the thing. See here what a good Master we serve, who will not have his altar covered with tears, but compeased with songs; this condemns those who left the word worship for that of idols, among the rites of which we find women weeping for Tammuz, (Ezek. vii. 14.) and the blood of the worshippers gushing out upon the altar, 1 Kings xviii. 28. See also what a wrong thing it is that such should not be able to cheer their worship of God; though it is their fault by their fretfulness to indispose themselves for their duty, yet it is much more their fault who provoked them to make them fret. It is a reason given why yoke-fellows should live in holy love and joy—"that their prayers may not be hindered," 1 Pet. iii. 7. [2.] They dealt treacherously with them, v. 14.—16. This was contrary to holiness of heart, and to their own defrauding them of their maintenance or dover, or took in contributions, to share in the affliction that was due to their wives only. [3.] They put them away, gave them a bill of divorce, and turned them off, nay, perhaps they did it without the ceremony that the law of Moses prescribed, v. 16. [4.] In all this, they covered violence with their garment; they abused their wives, and were violent to them, and yet, in the sight of others, they pretended to be loving to them, and tender of them, and to cast a skirt over them. It is common for those who do violence, to advance some specious pretence or other, wherewith to cover it as with a garment. [2.] Let us see the proof and aggravations of the charge. [1.] It is sufficiently proved by the testimony of God himself: "The Lord God said unto the man and unto his wife, 'Ye have heard that God said, 'In the day thou eatest of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, thou shalt die;' but the woman, being deceived, did not he make him one wife, he made him one wife; had he made him more, he had not had a meet help. And wherefore did he make but one woman for one man? It was, that he might seek a godly seed, a seed of God, (so the word is,) a seed that should bear the image of God, be employed in the service of God, and be declared to be a marriage, a covenant betwixt two, for having his own wife, and but one, according to law, (1 Cor. vii. 1.) they might live in chastity and holy love, under the directions and restrictions of the divine law, and not, as brute beasts, under the dominion of lust, and thus might propagate the nature of man in such a way as might make it most likely to participate of a divine nature; that the children, being born in holy marriage, which is an ordinance of God, and by which the inclinations of nature are kept under the regulations of God's command, might thus be made a seed to serve him, and be bred, as they are born, under his direction and dominion. Note, The raising up of a godly seed, which shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation, is one great end of the institution of marriage; and that is a great reason why the marriage-covenant should be kept uncancelled, and the marriage-bond inviolable. Husbands and wives must therefore live in the fear of God, that their seed may be a godly seed; else were they unclean, but now they are holy, as children of the covenant, the marriage-covenant, which was a type of the covenant of grace, and the confugal union, which thus preserved entire, of the mystical union between Christ and his church, in which he seeks and secures to himself a godly seed; see Eph. v. 25, 32. [2.] Because he is much displeased with those who go about to put asunder what he has joined together; (v. 16.) The God of Israel saith that he hateth putting away. He had indeed permitted it to the Jews, for the hardness of their hearts, or, rather, limited and clogged it; (Matt. xix. 8.) but he hated it especially as they practised it, and they were judged unjustly that go to put asunder what he joined together; (v. 13.) and this is the cause, Mat. xix. 3. Let those wives that clofe from their husbands, and put themselves away, those husbands that are cruel to their wives, and turn them away, or take their affections off their wives, and place them upon others, yea, and those husbands and wives that live asunder by consent, for want of it to get to each other, let such as these do away God's ordinance, and break and violate the marriage-covenant, let those men and women, however vain men may make a jest of them. (4.) Let us see the caution inferred from all this. We have it twice; (v. 15.) Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth; and again, v. 16. Note, They that would be kept from sin, must take heed to their spirits, for there sin begins; they must keep their hearts with all diligence, must keep a jealous eye upon them, and a strict hand, and must watch against the first risings of sin. We shall act as we are spirited; and therefore that we may regulate our actions, we must consider what manner of spirit we are of; we must take heed to our spirits, with reference to our particular relations, and see that we stand rightly affected to them, and be of a good temper, otherwise we shall be in danger of dealing treacherously. If our own hearts deal treacherously with us, whom will they not deal treacherously with?

II. Observe how corrupt their principles were, to which were owing all these corrupt practices. Let us run up the streams to the fountain; (v. 16.) Ye have wearied the Lord with your words. They thought to evade the convictions of the word, and to justify themselves, by cavilling with God's proceedings; but their defence was their offence, and their vindication of themselves was the aggravation of their crime; they affected the Lord with their words, and repeated them so often, and persisted so long in their contradictions, that they even wearied him; see Isa. vii. 13. They made him weary of doing them good as he had done, and stopped the current of his favours; or, they represented him as wearied and weary'd, and unwilling to quit it, and lay aside the care of it. Note, It is a wearisome thing, even to God himself, to hear people insist upon their own justification in their corrupt and wicked practices, and to plead their atheistical principles in vindication of them. But as if God by his prophet had done them wrong, see how impudently they ask, Wherein have we wearied him? What are the words whereby we have wearied him? Note, Sinful words are more offensive to the God of heaven than they are commonly thought to be. But God has his proofs ready; two things they had said, at least in their hearts, (and thoughts are words to God,) with which they had wearied him. 1. They had denied him to be a holy God, and had asserted that concerning him, which is not so common as the doctrine of his holiness, that as he is a holy God, he hates sin, is of purer eyes than to behold it, and cannot endure to look upon it, Hab. i. 13. He is not a God that has pleasure in wickedness, Ps. v. 4. And yet they had the impudence to say in direct contradiction to this, Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them. This wicked inference they drew, without any reason, from the prosperity of sinners in their sinful courses; (see ch. iii. 15.) as if God's love or hatred were to be known by that which is before us, and those must be concluded good in the sight of the Lord, who are rich in the world. Or, this they said because they wished it might be so; they were resolved to do evil and yet to think themselves righteous in the sight of the Lord, and therefore to believe that he delights in them, notwithstanding; and therefore, under pretence of making God not so severe as he was commonly represented, they said they would have it, and thought he was altogether such a one as themselves. Note, Those who think God a Friend to sin, affect him, and deceive themselves. 2. They had denied him to be the righteous Governor of the world. If he did not delight in the first but, yet it must not serve them as a reason to believe that he would never punish it, or them. They said, Where is the God of judgment? That God who, we have been so often told, would call us to an account, and reckon with us for what we have said and done—where is he? He has forsaken the earth, and takes no notice of what is said and done there; he has said that he will come to judgment; but where is the promise of his coming? We may do what we please, he sees us not, nor will regard us. It is such a challenge to the Judge of the whole earth, as bids defiance to his justice, and, in effect, dares him to do his worst. Such scoffers as these there were in the latter days of the Jewish church, and such there shall be in the latter days of the Christian church; but their unbelief shall not make the promise of God of no effect; for the day of the Lord will come: behold, the Judge stands before the door; the God of judgment is at hand.

CHAP. III.

In this chapter, we have, I. A promise of the coming of the Messiah, and of his forerunner; and the errand he comes upon is here particularly described; both the comfort which his coming brings to his church and people, and the terror which it will bring to the wicked, v. 1. to 6. II. A reproach of the Jews for their corrupting of God's ordinances, and sacrilegious robbing him of his dues; with a charge to them to amend this matter, and a promise that if they did, God would return in mercy to them, v. 7. to 12. III. A description of the wickedness of the wicked that speak against God, (v. 13. to 15.) and of the righteousness of the righteous that speak for him, with the precious promises made to them, v. 16. to 18.

1. Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. 2. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap: 3. And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. 4. Then shall the offerings of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. 5. And I will bring near unto you the judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swears, and against those that oppress the hirling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts. 6. For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.

The first words of this chapter seem a direct answer to the profane, atheistical demand of the scoffers of those days, which closed the foregoing chapter; Where is the God of judgment? To which it is readily answered, Here he is; he is just at the door; the long expected Messiah is ready to appear; and he says, For judgment am I come into this world; for that judgment which you so impudently bid defiance to. One of the rabbins says, that the meaning of this is, That God will raise up a righteous King, to set things in order, even the King Messiah. And the beginning of the gospel of Christ is expressly said to be the accomplishment of this promise, with which the Old Testament concludes, Mark i. 1, 2. So that by this the two Testaments... are, as it were, tacked together, and made to answer one another. Now here we have,
I. A prophecy of the appearing of his forerunner John the Baptist, which the prophet Isaiah had foretold, (ch. xi. 3.) as the forerunning of the way of the Lord, to which this here seems to have a reference, for the words of the latter prophets confirmed all that which was foretold of the forerunner, or, I do send him, or, I am sending him.
"I am determined to send him, he will now shortly come, and will not come unseenthough to a careless generation he comes unseent." Observe, 1. He is God's messenger; that is his office; he is Malachi, (so the word is,) the same with the name of this prophet; he is my angel, my ambassador. John Baptist has his name from his being a messenger of God. All held John Baptist for a prophet, for he was God's messenger, as the prophets were, and came on the same errand to the world that they were sent upon—to call men to repentance and reformation. 2. He is Christ's harbinger. He shall prepare the way before me, by calling men to those duties which qualify them to receive the comforts of the Messiah and his coming, and by taking them off from the sin which was to be their ruin. He is as their father, (which they thought would serve their turn without a Saviour,) and by giving notice that the Messiah was now at hand, and so raising men's expectations of him, and making them read-dily to go into the measures he would take for the setting up of his kingdom in the world. Note, God observes a method in his work, and, before he contemplates their coming, he makes them foretaste of his coming, as the light of an early morn, is like the giving of a sign. The church was told, long before, that the Messiah would come; and here it is added, that by the same token, a little before he appears, there shall be a signal given; a great prophet shall arise, that shall give notice of his approach, and call to the everlasting gates and doors to lift up their heads, and give him admission. The accomplishment of this is a new way the person is:
the Christ, is he that should come, and we are to look for no other; for there was such a messenger sent before him, who made ready a people prepartured for the Lord, Luke i. 17. The Jewish writers run themselves into gross absurdities, to evade the evi-cidence of this evidence; some of them say that this messenger is the angel of death, who shall take the wicked out of this life, to be sent into hell torment;
others say, he was John the Baptist; so that thir-seph, who shall appear before Messiah the son of Davill; others, this prophet himself; others, an angel from heaven; such mistakes do they run into,
that will not receive the truth.
II. A prophecy of the appearing of the Messiah himself; "The Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the God of judgment, who will quicken the dead, and whom ye were not what is become of him. The Messiah has been long called he that should come, and you may assure yourselves that now shortly he will come." 1. He is the Lord—Adonai, the Basis and Foundation on which the world is founded and fastened; the Ruler and Governor of all; that one Lord over all, (Acts
x. 36.) that has all power committed to him, (Mat-
th. ii. 28.) Behold, I will send my messenger in the name of Jacob for ever, Luke i. 33. 2. He is the Mesenger of the covenant; or the Angel of the covenant, that blessed One that was sent from heaven to negotiate a peace, and settle a correspondence, between God and man. He is the Angel, the Archangel, the Lord of the angels, who received com-mision from the Father to bring man home to God by a covenant of grace, who had revolted from him by the violation of the covenant of innocency.
Christ is the Angel of this covenant, by whose mediation it is brought about and established, as God's covenant with Israel was made by the disposition of angels, Acts vii. 53. Gal. iii. 19. Christ, as a Prophet, is the Messenger and Mediator of the covenant; nay, he is given for a Covenant, Isa. xlix.
8. That covenant which is all our salvation, began to be spoken by the Lord, Heb. ii. 3. Though he is the Prince of the covenant, (as some read this verse, yet others put the sense in a different way.
He is given for it; that we might have full assurance of God's good will toward man, upon his word. 3. He is it whom ye seek, whom ye delight in; whom the pious Jews expect and desire, and whose coming they think of with a great deal of pleasure. In looking and waiting for him, they looked for redemption in Jerualem, and waited for the consolation of Israel, Luke ii. 25, 28, 38, 39. A Prophet, like Moses, and other prophets, desirable to all; (Hag. ii. 7.) but he was the Desire of the Jewish nation actually, because they had the promise of his coming made to them. Note, Those that seek Jesus, shall find pleasure in him.
If he be our heart's Desire, he will be our heart's delight; and we have reason to delight in him who is the Messenger of the covenant, and to bid him come, one who came to us on so kind an errand. 4.
He shall suddenly come, to reign as a sovereign, as high, and we see it not at so great a distance as the patri-archs saw it at. Or, He shall come immediately after the appearing of John Baptist; shall even tread on the heels of his forerunner; when that morningstar appears, believe that the sun of righteousness is not far off. Or, He shall come suddenly, he shall come when many he is not looked for; as his coming was, which was lately built, that latter house which he was to be the Glory of. It is his temple, for it is his Father's house, John ii. 16.
Christ at forty days old was presented in the temple, and thither Simeon went by the Spirit, according to the directions of this prophecy, to see him, Luke ii. 27. At twelve years old, he was in the temple about his Father's business, Luke ii. 49. When he rode in triumph into Jerusalem, he said that what was before, was the temple, (Math. xxii. 12.) and (v. 14.) thither the blind and the lame came to him, to be healed; there he often preached, and often disputed, and often wrought miracles. By this it appears that the Messiah was to come while that temple was standing; that, therefore, being long since destroyed, we must conclude that he is come, and we are to look for no other. Note, Those that would be acquainted with Christ, and obtain his favour, must meet him in his temple, for there he records his name, and there he will bless his people.
There we must receive his oracles, and there we must pay our homage. 5. The promise of his coming is repeated and ratified; Behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts; you may depend upon his word, who cannot lie, he shall come, he will come, he must come, as he has foretold that he would. 6. III. An account given of the great ends and intentions of his coming, v. 2. He is one whom they seek, and one whom they delight in; and yet who may abide the day of his coming? It is a thing to be thought of with great seriousness, and with a holy awe and reverence; for who shall stand when he appears, though he comes not to condemn the world, but to save the world from death, and from life? This may refer, 1. To the terrors of his appearance. Even in the days of his flesh there were some emanations of his glory and power, such as Abel first, and then to his offering; and therefore God purges his people, that they may offer their offerings to him in righteousness, Zeph. iii. 9. He therefore makes the tree good, that the fruit may be good. And then it follows, (v. 4.) The offering of Judah and Jerusalem shall be pleasant unto the Lord. It shall no longer be offensive, as it has been, when, in the former days, they worshipped other gods with the God of Israel, and performs, they dwelt in the camp of the enemy, and the lame, and the sick, for sacrifice; but it shall be acceptable, he will be pleased with the offerings, and their offerings, as in the days of old, and as in former years; as in the primitive times of the church, as when God had respect to Abel's sacrifice, and smelled a savour of rest from Noah's, and when he kindled Aaron's sacrifice with fire, and burnt, and left the Jewish coming, first, He will, by his grace in them, make them acceptable; when he has purified and refined them, then they shall offer such sacrifices as God requires, and will accept. Secondly, He will, by his intercession for them, make them accepted; he will recommend them and their performances to God, so that their prayers, being perfumed with the incense of his intercession, shall be offered to the Lord; and it shall be accepted in the Beloved, and in him is well pleased with those that are in him, (Matth. iii. 17.) and bring forth fruit in him. (2.) It shall turn for a testimony against those that are resolved to go on in their wickedness, v. 5. This is the direct answer to their challenge, Where is the God of judgment? "You shall know where he is, and shall know it to your terror and confusion, in the day of judgment, when I will come near to you in judgment; for it is a set divine justice at defiance." To them the gospel of Christ will be a savour of death unto death; it will bind them over to condemnation, and will judge them in the great day, John xii. 48. Let us see here, [1.] Who the sinners are, that must appear to be judged by the gospel of Christ. They are the sorcerers, who deal in spiritual wickedness, that forsake the oracles of the God of truth to consult the father of lies; and the adulterers, who walk in the lusts of the flesh, those adulterers who were charged with dealing treacherously; (ch. ii. 15.) and the false swearers, who profane God's name, and affront his justice, by calling him to witness to a lie; and the oppressors, who barbarously injure, and trample upon, those who lie at their mercy, and make use of every means to deprive them of what was their own, and to defraud the hireling in his wage, and will not give him what he agreed for; they crush the widow and fatherless, and will not pay them their just debts, because they cannot prove them, or have not where- withal to sue for them; the poor stranger too, who has no friend to stand by him, and is ignorant of the laws of the country, they turn aside from his right, so that he cannot avenge, or cannot recover his own. That which is at the bottom of all this, is, Then fear not me, saith the Lord of Hosts. The transgression of the wicked plainly declares it, that there is no fear of God before his eyes; where no fear of God is, no good is to be expected. [2.] Who will appear against them; I will come near, says God, and will be a swift Witness against them. They quail, and are not able to hold their own; God has fully concealed, hope to escape punishment, for want of proof; but God, who sees and knows all things, will himself be Witness against them, and his omniscience is instead of a thousand witnesses, for to it the sinner's own conscience shall be made to subscribe, and so every mouth shall be stilled; he will be a swift Witness; though they reflect upon it as an evil, and call it a judgment of the God of judgment, and where the promise of his coming? they will find that he is not slack concerning his threatening, any more than he is concerning... his promises. Judgment against those sinners shall not be put off, for want of evidence, for he will be a swift Witness. His judgment shall overtake them, and it shall be impossible for them to outrun Evil pursues sinners.

IV. The ratification of all this; (v. 6.) For I am the Lord, I change not, therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed. Here we have, 1. God’s immutability asserted by himself, and gloried in; “I am the Lord, I change not, and therefore no word that I have spoken shall fail to the ground.” Is God a just Revenger of those that rebel against him? he is the Most Just and Justest, and the Most abundant and most plentiful Rewarder of those that diligently seek him? In both these he is unchangeable. Though the sentence passed against evil works (v. 5.) be not executed speedily, yet it will be executed, for he is the Lord, he changes not, he is as much an Enemy to sin as ever he was, and inpenitent sinners will find him so. There needs no scire factas—a writ calling one to show cause, to revise God’s judgment, for it is never antiquated, or out of date, but against those that go on still in their trespasses the curse of his law still remains in full force, power, and virtue. 2. A particular proof of it, from the comfortable experience which the people of Israel had had of it; they had reason to say that he was an unchangeable God, for he had been faithful to his covenant with them and their fathers; if he had not, then the blessings they had been consumed long ago, and cut off from being a people; they had been false and fickle in their conduct to him, and he might justly have abandoned them, and then they had soon been consumed and ruined; but because he remembered his covenant, and would not violate that, nor alter the thing that was gone forth out of his lips, they were preserved from ruin, and recorded from the brink of it. It was as well for them that it had been so, how bad as good as his word, Deut. vii. 8. Lev. xxvi. 42. Now as God had kept them from ruin, while the covenant of peculiarity remained in force, purely because he would be faithful to that covenant, and would show that he is not a man, that he should lie, (Num. xxxiii. 19.) so when that covenant should be superseded and set aside by the New Testament, and that New Testament should itself open to the curses, he will show that in the determinations of his wrath, as well as in those of his mercy, he is not a man that he should repent; but will then be as true to his threatenings as hitherto he had been to his promises; see 1 Sam. xv. 29. We may all apply this very sensibly to ourselves; because we have to do with a God that changes not, therefore it is that we are not consumed, even because his compassions fail not, they are new every morning, great is his faithfulness, Lam. iii. 22, 33.

7. Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. But ye said, Wherein shall we return? 8. Will a man rob God? yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? in tithes and offerings. 9. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. 10. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. 11. And I will rebuf a banter upon the prophet, and a challenge to him to descend to particulars. Note, Many ruin their own souls by bawling the calls that are given them to repent of their sins.

II. They had robbed their Master, and embezzled his goods. They had asked, "Wherein shall we return? What have we done amiss?" And he soon tells them, Observe,

1. The prophet's high charge exhibited, in God's name, to those people; they stand indicted for robbery, or sacrilege, the worst of robberies; Ye have robbed me. He expostulates with them upon it; Will a man be so daringly impudent as to rob God? Man, who is a weak creature, and cannot contend with God's power; will he think to rob him with armis—forcibly? Man, who depends upon God, and derives his all from him, will he rob him, that is his Benefactor?
This is ungrateful, unjust, and unkind indeed; it is very unwise thus to provoke him from whom our judgment proceeds. Will a man do violence to God?
(see some read it.) Will a man stint or straiten him?
Say, words, but rob him of the very life he does in his service; rob him of themselves, rob him of his honour, rob him of his knees to bow in, and to be employed in his service; rob him of himselfs, rob him of that which is given for the support of religion, and give him not his dues out of their estates; and yet they ask, Wherein have
we robbed thee?

2. The people's high challenge in answer to that charge. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee?
They plead, Not guilty, and put God upon the proof of it. Note, Robbing God is such a heinous crime, that they who are guilty of it are not willing to own themselves guilty. They rob God, and know not what they do. They rob him of his honour, rob him of his knees to bow in, and to be employed in his service; rob him of themselves, rob him of that which is given for the support of religion, and give him not his dues
out of their estates; and yet they ask, Wherein have
we robbed thee?

3. The plain proof of the charge, in answer to this challenge; it is in tithes and offerings. Out of these the priests and Levites had maintenance for themselves and their families; but they detained them, defrauded the priests of them, would not pay their tithes, or not in full, or not of the best; they brought not the offerings which God required, or brought the torn and lame and sick, which were not fit for use. They were all guilty of this sin, even the whole nation; as if they were in confederacy against God, and consulting him to deprive him of his dues, and to stand by one another in it when they had done. For this they were cursed with a curse,
v. 9. God punished them with famine and scarcity, through unseasonable weather, or insects that ate up the fruits of the earth. God had thus punished them for neglecting to build the temple, (Hag. i. 10, 11) and now for not maintaining the temple-service. Note, Those that deny God his part of their estates, may justly expect a curse upon their own part of them; "Ye are cursed with a curse, for robbing me, and yet ye go on to do it." Note, It is a great aggravation of sin, when men persist in it, notwithstanding the rebukes of Providence which they are under for it. Nay, it should seem, because God had punished them with scarcity of bread, they would not be content to rob him of his dues, and to stand by one another in it when they had done. For this they were cursed with a curse, and then God, as formerly, and now, being impoverished, they could not afford to bring their tithes and offerings, but must save them, that they might have bread for their families.
Note, It argues great perverseness in sin, when men make those afflictions excuses for sin, which are sent to part between them and their sins. When they had but little, they should have done the more good with that little, and that would have been the
to have made it more; but it is ill with the patient, when that which should cure the disease, serves only to palliate it, and prevent its being searched into.

4. An earnest exhortation to reform in this matter; with a promise that if they did, the judgment, they were under should be quickly removed.

(1.) Let them take care to do their duty; (v. 10.) Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse. They had brought some; but, like Ananias and Sapphira, left back part of the price, pretending they could not spare so much as was required, and necessity had no law; but even necessity must have law, and the law would require some acknowledgment of necessity; "Bring in the full tithes to the utmost that the law requires, that there may be meat in God's house for them that serve at the altar, whether there be meat in your houses or no." Note, God must be served in the first place, and our quota must be contributed for the support of religion in the place where we live, that God's name may be taught, and his kingdom maintained, and his work be done, even before we provide our daily bread; for the interest of our souls ought to be preferred before that of our bodies.

(2.) Let them then trust God to provide for them and their comfort; "Let God be first served, and then prove me herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, whether I will bless this people or no." They were called windows of the heaven, (v. 11.) They said, "Let God give us corn; and we will give God himself; and now, in our extremity, let us try his promise, and see whether we will not then bring his tithes and offerings as we did formerly." "No," says God, "do you first bring in all your tithes as they become due, and all the aresses of what is past, and try me, whether I will not then restore you your plenty. Note, Those that will devote all, with a confidence of recompence, and we shall all venture to do so, for, though many have besought for him, never any were losers by him, in the end. It is fit that we should venture first, for his reward is with him, and his work is before him; we must first do the work which is our part, and then try him, and trust him for the reward. Elijah put the widow of Zarephath into this method, when he said, (1 Kings xv. 19.) "Make me a little cake first, and then prove me, whether there shall not be enough afterwards for thee and thy son." That which discourages people from the expenses of charity, is, the weakness of their faith concerning the gains and advantages of charity, they cannot think that they shall get by it; but it is a reasonable demand that God here makes; Prove me now; is nothing too small? Come and see; Nothing venture, nothing win. Trust upon him:

"And you shall find," (1.) "That, whereas the heavens have been shut up, and there has been no rain, now God will open to you the windows of heaven, in his hand the key of the clouds is, and you shall have reasonable rain." Or, the expression is figurative; every good gift coming from above, therefore God will plentifully bring forth upon them the bounties of his providence; very sudden plenty is expressed by opening the windows of heaven, 2 Kings vii. 2. We find the windows of heaven opened, to pour down a deluge of wrath, in Noah's flood, Gen. vii. 11. But here they are opened, to pour down blessings, to that degree, that there should not be room enough to receive them.
Some think the phrase openeth again, is to be,
that they shall be tempted to fill down their barns, and build greater, for want of room, Luke xii. 18. Or, as Dr. Pocock explains it, "I will pour out on you such a blessing as shall be not enough only, and such as shall be sufficient, but more and more enough," that is, a great addition. The oil that is multiplied shall not stay, as long as there are vessels to receive it, 2 Kings iv. 6. Note, God will not only be reconciled to sinners that repent and reform but he will be a Benefactor, a bountiful Benefactor, to them. We are never straitened in him, but after straitened in our own bosoms. God has blessings.
there were men of very different characters, (as were, and ever will be, in the world and in the church,) like Ezeriah’s fagot; some very good, and others very bad; some that plainly appeared to be the children of God, and others that as plainly discovered themselves to be the children of the wicked one; there are tares and wheat in the same field, chaff and corn in the same floor; and here we have an account of both.

1. Here is the angry notice God takes of the important, but vain talk of the sinners in Ziduo and his just resentments of it. Probably, there was a club of them that were in league against religion, that set up for wits, and set their wits on work to run it down, and ridicule it, and herein strengthened one another’s hands.

Here is, 1. An indictment found against them, for treasonable words spoken against the King of Kings: Your words have been stout against me, said the Lord. They speak against God, in reflection upon him, in contradistinction to him, as their fathers in the wilderness; (Ps. lxviii. 19.) Ye, they speak against God. What he said, and what he designed, they opposed, as if they had been retained of counsel against him and his cause. Their words against God were stout; they came from their pride, and haughtiness, and contempt of God. Though they said against God, he did not charge them, if they cared not who heard them; they were not themselves ashamed to say it, and they desired to propagate their atheis-tical notions, and to infect the minds of others with them. They speak it boldly, as those that were resolved to stand to it, and were in no fear of being called to an account. They speak it proudly, and with insolence and disdain, scoring to be under the divine check and spake levis, they strengthened themselves, they would be valiant against the Almighty, Job xv. 25.

2. Their plea to this indictment. They said;
What have we spoken so much against thee? They deny the words, and put the prophet to prove them;
or, if they speak the words, they did not design them against God, and therefore will not own there was any harm in them; at least, they extenuate the matter; What have we spoken so much against thee, so much, that there needs all this ado about it? They cannot deny that they have spoken against God, but they make a light matter of it, and wonder it should be taken notice of; “Words,” (say they,) “are but wind; others have said more, and done worse; if we are not so good as we should be, yet hope we are no bad; what are represented to be.” Note, It is common for sinners, that are unconvinced and unhumbled, to deny or extenuate the faults they are justly charged with, and to insist upon their own justification, against the reproofs of the word and of their own consciences. But it will be to no purpose.

3. The words themselves which they are charged with are, God keeps an account of what men say, as well as of what they do, and will, in the last account, account for; We have spoken so much against thee. They cannot deny that they have said, or that they have spoken thus; and so they do, and so they say, and are ready to deny what we have said amiss; but God can say, Ye have said so and so. They had said it as their deliberate judgment,

(1.) That there is nothing to be got in the service of God, though it is a service that subjects men to labour and sorrow. They said, It is vain to serve God, and so they do. He that said so, said in vain, and to no purpose; he has his labour for his pains, and therefore is a fool for his labour; what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, or his observation, that we have observed what he has appointed us to observe? What mammon, or wealth, have we gained, says the Chaldee; intimating (says Dr. Pocock) that it was for mammon’s sake only that they served God, and so indeed not God at all.

13. Your words have been stout against me, saith the Lord: yet ye say, What have we spoken so much against thee. 14. Ye have said, It is vain to serve God; and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts? 15. And now we call the proud happy; yea, that work wickedness are set up; yea, they that tempt God are even delivered. 16. Then they that feared the Lord spake often to one another; and the Lord hearkened, and heard it: and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name. 17.
And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. 18. Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked; between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not.

Among the people of the Jews at this time, though they all enjoyed the same privileges and advantages, MALACHI, III.

but mammon. "We have walked mornfully, or in black, with great gravity and great grief, before the Lord and set ourselves enough to confront sinners and doers. [1.] They would have it thought that they had served God, and had kept his ordinances, whereas it was only the external observance of them that they had kept up, while they were perfect strangers to the inward part of the duty, and therefore might say, It is in vain. God says so; (Matt. xxv. 9.) In vain do they work up me, their hearts are far from me, while they draft away with their mouth; but whose fault is that? Not God's, who is the Rewarder of them that seek him diligently, but theirs, who seek him carelessly. [2.] They insisted much upon it, that they had walked mornfully before God, whereas God had required them to serve him with gladness, and to walk cheerfully before him, with a willing heart. whereas the service of God a task and drudgery to themselves, and then complained of it as a hard service. The yoke of Christ is easy; it is the yoke of antichrist that is heavy. [3.] They complained that they had got nothing by their religion; they were still in poverty and affliction, and behindhand in the world. This is an old piece of impiety; (Job xxxi. 15.) What profit shalke all gain be unto him? Eliphaz charges Job with saying something like this, (Job xxxiv. 9.) It profits a man nothing that he should delight himself with God. The enemies of religion do but set up against it the old cavils that have been long since answered and exploded. Perhaps this refers to the errors of the sect of Sadducees, which was the scandal of the Jewish church, in its latter days; they denied a future state, and then said, It is vain to serve God; which has indeed some colour in it, for if in this life only we had hope in Christ, we were of all men most miserable, 1 Cor. xv. 19. Note, Those do a great deal of wrong to God's honour, who say that religion is either an unprofitable or an unpleasant thing; for the matter is not so, wisdom's ways are pleasantness, and wisdom's goads go down to the soul; (Prov. xi. 24.)

[2.] They maintained that wickedness was the way to prosperity, for they had observed that the workers of wickedness were set up in the world, and they that tempted God were delivered, v. 15. The outward prosperity of sinners in their sins, as it has weakened the hands of the godly in their godliness, (Ps. lxxiii. 13.) so it has strengthened the hands of the wicked in their wickedness. Note, Those that work wickedness, tempt God by presumptuous sins, they do, as it were, try God, whether he can and will punish them as he has said in his word, and, in effect, challenge him to do his worst, by provoking him in the highest degree. [2.] Those that tempt God by their wicked works, are many times both delivered out of the adversary into which they are fallen by that very act by which they, as wickedness was exchanged for prosperity, they are not only set up once, but when we thought their day was come to fall, and they were in trouble, they were delivered and set up again; so strangely did Providence seem to smile upon them. [3.] Though it be thus, yet it will not warrant us to call the proud happy. For they may be delivered out of the punishment of their sin, yet they may sin again, and God resists them, and that their pride is a preface to their fall; and if so, they are truly miserable, and it is folly to call them happy, and to bless them whom the Lord abhors. Wait awhile, and you shall see them that were wickedness set up as a mark to the Lord, and so brought to naught, (v. 14.) that tempt God delivered to the tormenters. Judge of things as they will appear shortly, when the doom of these proud sinners (which follows here, ch. iv. 1.) comes to be executed to the utmost.

II. Here is the gracious notice God takes of the filous talk of the saints in Zion, and the gracious recompense of it. Even in this corrupt and degenerate age, as the Lord would have them remember, he is a great, and, so great a contempt, of serious godliness, there were some that retained their integrity, and zeal for God; and let us see,

1. How they distinguished themselves, and what their character was; it was the reverse of theirs that spoke so much against God; for, (1.) They feared the Lord—that is the beginning of wisdom, and the root of all religion; they reverence the majesty of God, submitted to his authority, and had a dread of his wrath in all they thought and said; they humbly complied with God, and never speak any stout words against him. In every age there has been a remnant that feared the Lord, though sometimes but a little remnant. (2.) They thought upon his name, they seriously considered, and frequently meditated upon, the discovery of God, which was made of himself in his word and by his providences; and their meditation of him is sweet to them, and influences them. They thought on his name; they consulted the honour of God, and aimed at that as their ultimate end in all they did. Note, Those that know the name of God, should often think of, and dwell up upon it in their thoughts; it is a copious, curious subject, and frequent thoughts of it will contribute very much to our communion with God, and the stirring up of our devout affections to him. (3.) They spake often one to another concerning the God they feared, and that name of his which they thought so much of; for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth will speak; and a good man, out of a good treasure there, will bring forth good things. They that feared the Lord, kept together as those that were company for each other; they spake kindly and endearingly one to another, for the preserving and promoting of mutual love, that that might not wax cold when iniquity did thus abound. They spake knowingly and edifyingly to one another, for the increasing and improving of each other's grace and holiness; they spake one to another in the language of them that fear the Lord, and framed it on his name—the language of Canaan; when profaneness was come to so great a height as to trample upon all that is sacred, then they that feared the Lord, spake often one to another; [1.] Then when iniquity was bold and barefaced, the people of God took courage, and stirred up themselves, the innocent against the hypocrites, Job xviii. 8. The worse others are, the better we should be when we come to a trial; we are daring, let not virtue be sneaking. [2.] Then when religion was reproached and misrepresented, its friends did all they could to support the credit of it, and to keep it in countenance. It had been suggested that the ways of God are melancholy, unpleasant ways, solitary and sorrowful; and therefore then in the face of the hypocrites, that they might persuade them contrary to their cheerfulness in mutual love and converse; that they might put to silence the ignorance of foolish men. [3.] Then when seducers were busy to deceive, and to possess unwary souls with prejudices against religion, they that feared God were industrious to arm themselves and one another against the contagion, by mutual instructions, exhortations, and encouragement of one another's hands. As evil communication corrupts good minds and manners, so good communication confirms them.
2. How God dignified them, and what further honour and favour he intended for them. They who spoke with Zerubbabel, no doubt looked with disdain and displeasure upon those that feared him, hecorted and bantered them; but they had little reason to regard that, or to be disturbed at it, when God countenanced them.

(1.) He took notice of their pious discourses, and was graciously present at their conferences; The Lord hearkened and heard it, and was well pleased with the matter of what they had said, and heard what bad men would say, and that they spake not right; here he hearkened, and heard what good men did say, for they spake aright. Note, The gracious God observes all the gracious words that proceed out of the mouths of his people; they need not desire that men may hear them, and commend them; let them not seek praise from men by them, nor affect to be taken notice of by them; but let it content them, that, be the conference ever so private, God sees and hears in secret, and will reward openly. When the two disciples, going to Emmaus, were discoursing concerning Christ, he hearkened and heard, and joined himself to them, and made a third, Luke xxiv. 15.

(2.) He kept an account of them. A book of remembrance was written for them before him. Not that the Eternal Mind needs to be reminded of things by books and writings, but it is an expression after the manner of men, intimating that their pious affections and performances are kept in remembrance as punctually and particularly as if they were written in a book; as if journals were kept of all their conferences. Great kings had books of remembrance written, and read before them, in which were entered all the services done them, which were good and by whom, as Esther ii. 23. God, in like manner, remembers the services of his people, that, in the review of them, he may say, Well done, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord. God has a book for the sighs and tears of his mourners, (Ps. lvi. 8.) much more for the pleadings of his advocates. Never was any good word spoken of God or for God, from an honest heart, but it was registered, that it might be recompensed in the resurrection of the just, and in no wise lose its reward.

(3.) He promises them a share in his glory hereafter; (v. 17.) They shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels. When God utterly cuts off the Jewish church and nation for their infidelity, the remnant among them, that believed his word, and, having waited for the consolation of Israel, welcome him when he comes, shall be admitted into the Christian church, and shall become a peculiar people to God; God will take care of them, that they perish not with them that believe not; but that they be hid in the day of the Lord's anger against that nation. They shall be my segullah, my peculiar treasure, (it is the word used, Exod. xix. 5.) in the day of his visitation, and exalted, and made to do; so some read it. These pious ones shall have all the glorious privileges of God's Israel prepared for, and centring in them; they shall now be the peculiar treasure, when the rest are rejected; they shall now be the vessels of mercy and honour, when the rest are made vessels of wrath and dishonour, vessels in which is no pleasure. This may be applied to all who have had the comfort of his chiropr, and who are now yet living, and will put between them and others in the great day. Note, [1.] The saints are God's jewels; they are highly esteemed by him, and are dear to him, they are comely with the comeliness that he puts upon them, and he is pleased to glory in them; they are a royal diadem in his hand, Isa. xliii. 3. He looks upon them as his own proper goods, his choice goods, his treasure, laid up in his cabinet, and the furniture of his closet, Ps. xxxix. 4. The rest of the world is butumber, in comparison with them. [2.] There is a day coming, when God will gather up his jewels; they shall be gathered up out of the dust unto which they are now thrown, and gathered together from all the places to which they are now scattered; he shall send forth his angels to gather his elect, who are his jewels, from the four winds of heaven, (Matt. xxiv. 31.) to gather his jewels into his jewel-house, as the wheat from several fields into the barn, the stubble of the chaff into the fire, to Christ, and none but saints, and saints made perfect; then God's jewels will be made up, as stones into a crown, as stars into a constellation. [3.] Those who now own God for theirs, he will then own for his, will publicly confess them before angels and men. They shall be mine; their sanctification shall be completed, and so they shall be perfectly and entirely mine, without any remaining interests of the world and the flesh. Their relation to God shall be acknowledged, and his property in them; he will separate them from those that are not his, and give them their portion with those that are his; for to them it shall be said, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you. They were in doubt, sometimes, whether they were becoming children of God; now that doubt is quite put out of doubt, God himself will say unto them, You are mine; now, their relation to God is what they are reproached with, but it will then be gloried in, God himself will glory in it.

(4.) He promises them a share in his grace now; I will share them as a man shares his own son that serves him. God had promised to own them as his, and take them to be with him; but it might be a discouragement to them, to think that they had offended God, and that he might justly disdain them, and cast them off; but, as to that, he says, I will share them, I will not deal with them as they deserve. I will rejoice over them, (so some expound it,) "as the bridegroom over his bride," Isa. lxxii. 5. Zeph. iii. 17. But the word usually signifies to share with commiseration and compassion, as a fatherimates his children, Ps. clxi. 13. Note, [1.] It is our duty to serve God with the disbursement of children; we must be his sons, must by a new birth partake of a divine nature, must consent to the covenant of adoption, and partake of the spirit of adoption; and we must be his servants; God will not have his children trained up in idleness, they must do him service, and they must do it from a principle of love, with cheerfulness and delight, as those that are therein serving their own true interest, and this is serving as a son with the father, Phil. ii. 22. [2.] If we serve God with the disposition of children, he will spare us with the tenderness and compassion of a father. Even God's children that serve him, stand in need of sparing mercy, that mercy to which we owe it that we are not consumed, that mercy which keeps us in the bounds of life, with cheerfulness and delight, as those that had done much good, yet knowing there is not a just man on earth, that does good, and sinneth not, and that every sin deserves God's wrath, prays, Lord, spare me according to the greatness of thy mercy; see Neh. xxxi. 22. And God as a Father will show them this mercy. He will not be extreme to mark what we do amiss, but will make the best of us and our poor performances; he will not be a debtor to any good he does, and the more so, and will save them from the ruin they deserve. The father continues to spare the son, and does it with complacency, because he is his own; thus God will spare humble penitents and petitioners, as a man shares his own son that serves him, though we do him so little service, nay, we do him so much disservice.

3. How they will thus be distinguished from the children of this world; (v. 18.) *Then shall he re-
1. FOR, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

2. But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall.

3. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet, in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts.

The great and terrible day of the Lord is here prophesied of; which, like the pillar of cloud and fire, shall have a dark side turned toward the Egyptians that fight against God, and a bright side toward the faithful Israelites that follow him. The day cometh, the Lord cometh, the day of the Lord; and it has reference both to the first and to the second coming of Jesus Christ; the day of both was fixed, and should answer the character here given of it.

1. In both Christ is a Consuming fire to those that rebel against him. The day of his coming shall burn as an oven; it shall be a day of wrath, of fiery indignation. This was foretold concerning the Messiah, Ps. xxi. 9. Thine hand shall find out all thine enemies; and shall make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger: it will be a day of terror and destruction like the burning of a city, or rather of a wood, the trees whereof are withered and dried, for to that the allusion seems to be, as Isa. x. 17, 18. The light of Israel shall be for a fire, and his Holy One for a flame, and it shall consume the glory of his forest, and of his fruitful field. Now observe here,

1. Who shall be fuel to this fire; all the proud in heart, whose words have been stout against God, and their necks stiff, and unapt to yield to the yoke of his commandments. All those that in the pride of their countenances will not seek after God, nor submit to the grace and government of Jesus Christ; all that proudly say, they will not have Christ to reign over them. And all those that do wickedly in their affections and conversations, that willfully persist in sin, in contempt of and contradiction to the law of God; they are such as do wickedly against the covenant, as another prophet had lately expressed it, Dan. xi. 52. God, that has a perfect knowledge of every ones character, knows who are the proud, and of every ones actions, knows who there are; and he doth accordingly, as by Elijah shall be said to this fire, they shall be consumed by it, easily consumed, utterly consumed, and it is wholly owing to themselves that they shall be so, for they make themselves stubble, combustible matter to this fire. If they were not stubble, it would not burn of the righteous, in that state, v. 1-3. And that is represented to us under a prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem, and the unbelieving Jews with it, and of the comforts and triumphs of those among them, that received the Lord Jesus. II. Concerning the state of Israel; and the preparation we are now in, in which we are directed to have an eye to divine revelation, and to follow that; they then must keep to the law of Moses, (v. 4.) and expect a further discovery of God, as by Elijah the prophet, that is, by John Baptist, the harbinger of the Messiah, v. 5, 6. The last chapter of the New Testament is much to the same purport, setting before us heaven and hell in the gospel world, and obliging us to adhere to the word of God in this world.

CHAP. IV.

We have here proper instructions given us, (very proper to close the canon of the Old Testament with;) I. Concerning the state of recompense and retribution that is before us; the misery of the wicked, and the happiness

Vol. IV.—7 K
them! for the fire will be to every man according as he and his works are found; if they be wood, hay, and stubble, they will be consumed; but if they be gold, silver, and precious stones, they will abide the fire, and be purified by it. 1 Cor. iii. 13—15. They will disgrace the pillars of the church, Christ, whereby they set themselves as briers and thorns before a devouring fire. Isa. xxvii. 4, 5.

2. What shall be the force, and what the fruit, of this fire. The day that cometh shall burn them up, shall both terrify and ruin them, and shall leave them neither root nor branch, neither son nor nephew; (so the Chaldee Phraseology;) neither they nor their posterity shall be able to stand, shall be wholly extirpated and cut off. Who knows the power of God's anger? The proud, and those that do wickedly, will not fear it, but they shall be made to feel it. Where are they now that called the proud happy, when thus they are made completely miserable, when there remains no branch of their happiness to be enjoyed for the present, nor any root of it out of which it might again spring up.

Now this was fulfilled, (1.) When Christ, in his doctrine, spake terror and condemnation to the proud Pharisees, and the other Jews that did wickedly; when he sent that fire on the earth, which burnt up the chaff of the traditions of the elders, and the corrupt glosses they had put upon the law of God. (2.) When Jerusalem was destroyed by the Roman soldiery, and the fiery destruction of all the Jews, as a nation, quite blotted out from under heaven, and neither root nor branch left them. This seems to be principally intended here; our Saviour says that those should be the days of vengeance, when all the things that were written to that purpose should be fulfilled, Luke xxi. 22. Then the unbelieving Jews were as stubble to the devouring fire of God's judgments, which gathered together to them as the cagles to the carcase. (3.) It is certainly applicable and is to be applied, to the day of judgment, to the particular judgment at death, (some of the Jewish doctors refer it to the punishment that seizes on the souls of the wicked immediately after they go out of the body,) but especially it will have its accomplishment in the general judgment, at the end of time, when Christ shall be revealed in flaming fire, to execute judgment on them that dwelleth upon the earth; (2 Petr. ii. 7.) who did wickedly; the whole world shall then burn as an oven, and all the children of this world, that set their hearts upon it, and choose their portion in it, shall take their ruin with it, and the fire then kindled shall never be quenched.

II. In both, Christ is a rejoicing Light to those who serve him Faithfully, to those who fear his name, and give him the glory due to it. (v. 2.) He stand in awe of that name of his, which the wicked profane and trample upon. Here are mercy and comfort kept in store for all those who fear the Lord, and think on his name. Observe,

1. Whence this mercy and comfort shall flow to them? To you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise, with healing in his wings. The day that comes, as it will be a stormy day to the wicked, a day in which God will rain upon them fire and brimstone, and a horrible tempest, as he did on Sodom, (Ps. xi. 6.) a day of clouds and thick darkness, (Amos v. 18, 20.) so it will be a fair and bright day to those who fear God, and reviving as the rising sun is to the earth; and particular notice is taken of the rising of the sun upon Zoor, when that was mercifully distinguished from the cities of the plain in the destruction of it, Gen. xix. 25. So, to you that fear God is comfort spoken, when the hearts of others fail for fear, let them lift up their heads for joy, for their redemption draweth nigh, Luke xxii. 28. But by the Sun of righteousness here we are certainly to understand Jesus Christ, who would undertake to secure the believing remnant, in the day of the general destruction of the Jews, from falling with the rest, and to comfort them in that day of distress and perplexity with his consolations; he directed them that were in Judea to flee to the mountains, (Matt. xxiv. 16,) and they did so, and were all safe and easy in Pella. But it is to be applied more generally; (1.) To the coming of Christ in the flesh, to seek and save them that were lost; then the Sun of righteousness arose upon this dark world. Christ is the Light of the world, the true Light, the great Light that makes day, and rules the day, (John viii. 12,) as the sun; he is the Light of men, (John i. 4,) in men's souls as the sun is to the visible world, which without the sun would be a dungeon; so would mankind be darkness itself without the light of the glory of God shining in the face of Christ. Christ is the Sun that has light in himself, and is the Fountain of light, (Ps. xix. 4—6,) he is the Sun of righteousness, for he is himself a righteous Saviour; righteousness is both the light and the heat of this Sun, the word of his righteousness is so, it guides, instructs, and quickens; so is the everlasting righteousness he has brought in; he is made of God to us Righteousness, he is the Lord our Righteousness, and therefore is fitly called the Sun of righteousness; through him we are justified and sanctified, and so are brought to see light. This Sun of righteousness, in the fulness of time, arose, and was revealed with the Father in glory, when he came into the world, (John iii. 19,) a great light, Matt. iv. 16. In him the day-spring from on high visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness, Luke i. 78, 79. Righteousness sometimes signifies mercy or benignity, and it was in Christ that the tender mercy of our God visited us. (2.) It is applicable to the graces and comforts of the Holy Spirit, brought into the souls of men. God shine upon them, and reveals it of Christ's giving the Spirit to those that are his, to shine in their hearts, and to be a Comforter to them, a Sun and a Shield. Those that are possessed and governed by a holy fear of God, and a dread of his majesty, shall have his love also shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Ghost; and then the sun may be said to arise there, and to bring both a delightful day and a fruitful spring along with it. Amidst the frowardness and unbelief of this world, let his righteousness and unqualified righteousness and welcome sun-rising to all that bear his name; it will be that morning of the resurrection, in which the upright shall have dominion, Ps. xlix. 14. That day which to the wicked will burn as an oven, will to the righteous be bright as the morning; and it is what they wait for, more than they that wait for the morning.

What this mercy and comfort shall bring to them; He shall arise with healing under his wings; or, in his rays, or beams, which are as the wings of the sun. Christ came, as the sun, to bring not only light to a dark world, but health to a diseased, disfigured world. The Jews (says Dr. Pocock) have a proverbial saying, As the sun riseth, incontinencies decrease; the flowers which drooped and languished all night shall now live in the morning to Christ; and being thereby made whole, and his finding that virtue went out of him, Mark v. 28—30. But his healing bodily diseases was a specimen of his great design in coming into the world to heal the diseases of men's souls, and to put them into a good state of health, that they may serve and enjoy both God and themselves.

3. It shall effect it shall have upon them.

(1.) It shall make them vigorous in themselves; "Ye shall go forth, as those that are healed go abroad, and return to their business." The souls shall go forth of their bodies at death, and the bodies out of their graves at the resurrection, as prisoners out of their dungeons, and both to see the light, and be set at liberty." Ye shall go forth to plant. Ye shall make remarkable, which is the dawn of the sun returns." Some make it to mean the going forth of the Christians from Jerusalem, and the escape they thereby made from its destruction. And thus the souls on whom the Sun of righteousness arises, go forth out of this world, go forth out of Babylon, as those that are made free indeed. "Ye shall likewise grow up, being restored to health and liberty, ye shall increase in knowledge, and grace, and spiritual strength." The souls on which the Sun of righteousness rises, are growing up toward the perfect man; those that by the grace of God are made wise and good, by the same grace are made wiser and better; and their path, like that of the rising sun, shines more and more to the perfect day, Prov. iv. 18. The growth is compared to this, the calves of the stall, which is a quick, strong, and useful growth. "Ye shall grow up, not as the flower of the field, which is slender, and weak, and of little use, and withers soon after it is grown up, but as the calves of the stall," that, as one of the rabbins expounds it, grow great in flesh and fatness, with which both God's altars and men's tables are replenished. And the growth of the saints, on whom the Sun of righteousness arises, honor both God and man. Some read it, instead of Ye shall grow up, Ye shall move yourselves, or leap for joy, shall be as frolicksome as calves of the stall, when they are let loose in the open field; and it denotes the joy of the saints, who rejoice in Christ Jesus; they shall even leap for joy; are always caused to triumph.

(2.) It shall make them victorious over their enemies; (v. 6.) Ye shall tread down the wicked. Time was, when the wicked trod them down, said to their souls, Bow down, that we may go over; but the day will come, when they shall tread down the wicked. The wicked, being made Christ's footstool, are made theirs also, (Ps. cx. 1.) and come, and worship before the feet of the church, Rev. x. 15. They shall be trampled upon by the feet of the children of Jacob, and the wicked here from the feet of the saints, of the children of Jacob, shall be trampled upon, and tread down, as the old Egyptians were, and trampled under foot, when the plague passed over them, Ex. x. 14. When the day comes, shall have burnt them up, they shall triumph upon them as ashes; when the righteous shall rise to everlasting life, the wicked shall rise to everlasting contempt; and though they shall not triumph over them, they shall triumph in that God whose justice is glorified in their destruction. The souls of the just go down, they shall not only be trampled over the nations, to rule them with a rod of iron, Rev. ii. 26, 27. This ye shall do, in the day that I shall do this. Note, The saints' triumphs are all owing to God's victories; it is not they that do this, but God that does for them; that says, Come, set your feet on the necks of these kings. Some read it, "In the day that I make, or shall make; the great day of the Lord's oath come, and shall be fulfilled," Ps. cxix. 9, 10. The word shall be fulfilled, or shall do this, will say with joy, This is the day that the Lord has made." The day of the destruction of Jerusalem is called the great and notable day of the Lord, (Acts li. 20.) and our Saviour, in foretelling that destruction, made use of such expressions, as, like these here, might be applied likewise to the end of the world and the last judgments; for it was such a terrible revelation of the wrath of God from heaven, and caused such a scene of horror upon this earth, that it might fitly serve for a type of that glorious transaction which will be an outlet to the days of time, and an inlet to the days of eternity. By the complete accomplishment of the prophecies in this instance of the Jewish nation, we should have our faith confirmed in the assurances Christ has given us concerning the dissolution of all things; Surely I come quickly; so says Christ the Lord of hosts, to whom all power in heaven and earth is committed. 4. Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments. 5. Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: 6. And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse.

This is doubtless intended for a solemn conclusion, not only of this prophecy, but of the canon of the Old Testament, and is a plain information that they were not to expect any more sayings or writings by divine inspiration, any more of the dictates of the Spirit of prophecy, till the beginning of the gospel of the Messiah; which sets aside the Apocrypha as no part of the holy writ, and which therefore the Jews never received.

Now that prophecy ceases, and is about to be sealed up, there are two things required of the people of God, that lived then.

1. They must keep up an obedient veneration for the law of Moses; (v. 4.) Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, and observe to do according to it, even that law which I commanded unto him in Horeb, that fiery law which was intended for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments; not only the law of the Ten Commandments, but all the other appointments ceremonial and judicial then there were. Observe here, 1. The honorable mention that is made of Moses, the first writer of the Old Testament, in Malachi, the last writer. God by him calls him Moses my servant; for the righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance. See how the penmen of scripture, though they lived in several ages at a great distance from each other, (it was above 1200 years from Moses to Malachi,) yet concurred in both the same thing, and pointed one another, being all actuated and guided by one and the same Spirit. 2. The honourable mention that is made of the law of Moses; it was what God him himself commanded, he owns it for his law, and he commanded it for all Israel, as the municipal law of their kingdom. Thus will God magnify his law, and make it honourable. Note, We are therefore concerned to keep that law, and support one another, being all actuated and guided by one and the same Spirit. 3. The summary of our duty, with reference to the law; we must remember it. Forgetfulness of the law is at the bottom of all our transgressions; if we would rightly remember it, we could not but conform to it; we should remember it when we have an occasion to use it; remember both the comman themselves, and the sanctions wherewith they are enforced. The office of conscience is to bid us remember the law.

But how does this charge to remember the law of Moses, come in here? (1.) This prophet had recovered it for many gross corruptions and irregularities both in worship and conversation, and now, for the reforming and amending of what was amiss, he only charges them to remember the law of Moses; * KEEP to that rule, and you will do all that you should do. He too tells them no other thing than what they have received; Hold that fast, Rev. ii. 24, 25. Note, Corrupt churches are to be reformed by the written word, and reduced into order by being reduced to the standard of the law and the testimony; see 1 Cor. xi. 23. (2.)

The church had long enjoyed the benefit of prophets, extraordinary messengers from God, and now they had a whole book of their prophecies put together, and it was a finished piece; but they must not think that hereby the law of Moses was superseded, and was become as an almanack out of date, as if now they were advanced to a higher form, and might forget that; no, the prophets do but confirm and apply the law, and press the observance of that;

and therefore still Remember the law. Note, Even when we have made considerable advances in knowledge, to the reformation of our lives, yet we must not cast our hand behind our back; we must retain the old rule, and to that we must return, 1 Tim. v. 20.

Those that study the writings of the prophets, and the apocalypse, must still remember the law of Moses, and the four gospels. (3.) Prophecy was now to cease in the church for some ages, and the Spirit of prophecy not to return till the beginning of the gospel, and now they are bid to remember the law of Moses; let them live by the rules of the latter, and live upon themselves, in his way. (4.) Note,

We need not complain for want of visions and revelations, as long as we have the written word, and the cannon of scripture complete, to be our guide; for that is the most sure word of prophecy, and the touchstone by which we are to try the spirits.

Though we have not prophets, yet, as long as we have Bibles, we may keep our communion with God, and keep ourselves in the way, as we must expect the coming of the Messiah, the preaching of his gospel, and the setting up of his kingdom, and in that expectation they must remember the law of Moses, and live in obedience to that, and then they might expect the comforts that the Messiah would bring to the willing and obedient.

Let them observe the law of Moses, and live up to the light which that gave them, and then they might expect the benefit of the gospel of Christ, for

to him that has, and uses what he has well, more shall be given, and he shall have abundance.

II. They must keep up a believing expectation of the gospel of Christ, and must look for the beginning of it in the appearing of Elijah the prophet;

(v. 3, 6.) "Behold, I send you Elijah the prophet.

Though the Spirit of prophecy cease for a time, yet there will be a Call for it, and it will come alive again in one that shall be sent in the spirit and power of Elias," Luke i. 17. The law and the prophets were until John; (Luke xvi. 16.) they continued to be the only lights of the church till that morning-star appeared. Note, As God never lefi himself without witness in the world, so neither in the church, but, as there was occasion, carried the light of diviner illumination further in the church for perfection. They had now Moses and the prophets, and might hear them; but God will go further, he will send them Elijah. Observe,

1. Who this prophet is, that shall be sent; it is

Elijah; the Jewish doctors will have it to be the same

Elijah that prophesied in Israel in the days of Ahab — that he shall come again to be the forerunner of the Messiah; yet others of them say not the same person, but another of the same spirit; it sounds true, these two names are too near together. Now as they asked John, "Art thou Elias, or that prophet that should bear his name?" John i. 19.—21. But we Christians know very well, that John Baptist was the Elias that was to come, Matth. xvii. 10.—13.

and very expressly, Matth. xii. 14, This is Elias which was to come; and v. 10. the same of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger, ch. iii.

In Elijah was a man of great power of sanctification, zealous for God, bold in reprov ing sin, and active to reduce an apostate people to God and their duty; John Baptist was animated by the same spirit and power, and preached repentance and reformation, as Elias had done; and all held him for a prophet, as they did Elijah in his day, and that his baptism was from heaven, and not of men. Note,

When God has such work to do as was formerly to be done, he can raise up such men to do it as he formerly raised up, and can put into a John Baptist the spirit of an Elias.

2. When he shall be sent; before the appearing of the Messiah, which, because it was the judgment of this world, and introduced the ruin of the Jewish church and nation, is here called the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. John Baptist was sent to prepare the way before the Messiah, and to tell them of the wrath to come, (that wrath to the uttermost which was hastening upon them,) and put them into a way of escape from it, and when he told them of the fan in Christ's hand, with which Christ would thoroughly purge his floor; see Matth. iii. 7, 10, 12.

That day of Christ, when he first came, was as that day will be, when he comes again—though a greater and dreadful day to those that embrace him, yet a great and dreadful day to those that oppose him. John Baptist was sent before the coming of this day, to give people notice of it, that they might get ready for it, and go forth to meet it.

3. On what errand he shall be sent; He shall turn the heart of the fathers to their children, and the heart of the children to their fathers; that is,

he shall be employed in this work, he shall cu-

dance and influence their children, and the doctrine and baptism shall have a direct tendency to it, and with many shall be successful: he shall be an instrument, in God's hand, of turning many to righteousness, to the Lord their

God, and so making ready a people prepared for him; Luke i. 16, 17. Note, The turning of souls to God and their duty is the best preparation of them for the great and dreadful day of the Lord.

It is promised concerning John, (1.) That he shall give a turn to things; shall make a bold stand against the strong torrent of sin and impurity, which he found in full force among the children of his people, and bearing down all before it. This is called his coming to restore all things, (Matth.

xvii. 11.) to set them to rights, that they may again sojourn in their own land, and have an influence upon them, and work a change in them. God's word, in his mouth, shall be quick and powerful, and a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Many had their consciences awakened by his ministry, who yet were not thoro-

oughly wrought upon, such a spirit and power was there in it. (3.) That he shall turn the hearts of the fathers to children, and the children to the fathers: he shall charm both with his doctrine, and with the fathers, (for so some read it,) to God and to their duty. He shall call upon young and old to repeat; and shall not labour in vain, for many of the fathers that are going off, and many of the children that are growing up, shall be wrought upon by his ministry. (4.) That thus he shall be an instrument to revive and confirm love and unity among relations, and shall bring them closer, and bind them faster to each other, by bringing and binding them all to their God. He shall prepare the way for that kingdom of heaven, which will make all its faithful subjects of one heart and one soul, (Acts iv. 32.) which will be a kingdom of love, and will slay all enmities.

4. With what view he shall be sent on this errand; lest I come and smite the earth, the land of Israel, the body of the Jewish nation, (that were of the earth earthy,) with a curse. They by their impiety and impenitence in it had laid themselves open to the curse of God, which is a separation to all evil. God was ready to smite them with that curse, to bring utter ruin upon them, to strike home, to strike dead, with the curse; but he will yet once more try them, whether they will repent and return, and so prevent it; and therefore he sends John Baptist to preach repentance to them, that their conversion might prevent their confusion; so unwilling is God that any should perish, so willing to have his anger turned away. Had they universally repented and reformed, it had had this desired effect; but they generally rejecting the counsel of God in John’s baptism, it proved against themselves, (Luke vii. 30.) and their land was smitten with the curse, which both it and they lie under to this day. Note, Those must expect to be smitten with a sword, with a curse, who turn not to him that smites them with a rod, with a cross, Isa. ix. 13. Now the axe is laid to the root of the tree, says John Baptist, and it is ready to be smitten, to be cut down with a curse; therefore bring forth fruit meet for repentance. Some observe that the last word of the Old Testament is a curse, which threatens the earth, (Zech. v. 3.) our desert of which we must be made sensible of, that we may bid Christ welcome, who comes with a blessing; and it is with a blessing, with the choicest of blessings, that the New Testament ends, and with it let us arm ourselves, or rather let God arm us, against this curse.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with us all. Amen.
